Foreword

This volume is the first fruit of a project which has had a particularly long and difficult history. Started as the result of a bequest in 1926 from Lieutenant-Colonel G. B. Croft Lyons for the production of a revised edition of Papworth's Ordinary of Arms, it has over the years been worked on by many hands, and undergone many vicissitudes. In 1979 it was decided that a computerised record should be made of some 114,000 of the vast collection of index cards which had been accumulated, and that this should be used, in the first instance, for the preparation of a Dictionary of British Arms, and specifically an Ordinary, down to A.D.1530. I am sure that it will be of great use to scholars in a number of different fields, and I should like to take this opportunity of recording the thanks of the Society to all those who have contributed by their labours to the creation of the corpus, and particularly of congratulating the team which over the past few years has brought the Dictionary to the stage of publication. In particular, a special debt of gratitude is owed to Sir Anthony Wagner, who has been intimately associated with the project for so many years and who has acted as guide and mentor to all the heraldic scholars who have been involved in seeing it to fruition.

History of the Project

On 22 June 1926 there died at the age of 71 a man described in The Times a few days later as a 'loyal and useful Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries'. He was Lieutenant Colonel George Babington Croft Lyons, a knowledgeable and hospitable antiquary and collector with a special interest in heraldry. Fortunately for posterity he had made his will a few months previously, on 5 January 1926, leaving a sum of about £15,000 to the Society together with a note saying: 'I desire that the income derived from the property left to the Society of Antiquaries of London . . . should be applied to the encouragement of the study of heraldry and in the first instance I wish that a new edition of Papworth's Ordinary should be prepared to be published by the Society.'

John Woody Papworth was an architect who, although he was successful in his profession, is best remembered as the compiler of the Ordinary of British Armorial which was completed after his death by Alfred W. Morant and published in 1874. As readers will know, an ordinary in this sense is a collection of arms usually arranged in alphabetical order according to their design and accompanied by the names of those who bore them. An armory on the other hand is an alphabetical list of names of those bearing arms, accompanied by the arms of each.

There were ordinaries of a simple kind as early as the fourteenth century, but Papworth devised a far more elaborate and comprehensive system of classification than before and the present work is arranged on much the same lines (see next chapter). Papworth's Ordinary was in fact based on the third edition of Burke's General Armory, which appeared in 1847, and of which the last and fullest edition was published in 1884. Both Burke and Papworth have been much criticized for their failure to quote sources and for their uncritical inclusion of erroneous spellings and spurious coats, but they have nevertheless provided the most comprehensive corpus of heraldic material so far accessible to the general reader.

There is not space here to enlarge on the story of Papworth and Morant's pioneering achievement, but those who wish to know more should consult (a) the introduction to the 1874 edition of the Ordinary, (b) 'Papworth and his Ordinary', by S.M. Collins, Antiquaries Journal 22 (1942), 1-16, and (c) the reprint of the 1874 edition by Tabard Publications in 1961 which, in addition to the original introduction, includes two new introductory articles: 'Papworth's Ordinary', by G. D. Squibb, and 'The Old Papworth and the New', by A.R. Wagner.

To return to the Croft Lyons bequest, it was realized that a new Ordinary could not be constructed without the previous or concurrent compilation of an Armory. Major Thomas Sheppard, F.S.A. was appointed editor of the new work in 1931, and reported in 1932, recommending the collection of material by counties. However, the work had not progressed very far when he died in 1937 and it was only in 1940, when Messrs S.M. Collins and A.R. Wagner were appointed general editors, that things began to move. They embarked on a nationwide scheme for collecting examples of coats of arms from monuments, seals, rolls of arms and other sources, and the compilation of two complementary card indices, one an Armory and the other an Ordinary, with a view to eventual publication as a Dictionary of British Arms. The project was supported by the Chapter of the College of Arms who provided access to its earliest records and collections.

Mr Wagner (who was knighted when he became Garter King of Arms in 1961 and to whom I shall refer from now on as Sir Anthony) would have preferred to see the publication of critical editions of all the early rolls of arms before the compilation of the dictionary but realised that this would cause an unacceptable delay. It was not in fact until 1950 that he was able to publish his Catalogue of English Medieval Rolls of Arms (Society of Antiquaries, 1950), known as CEMRA or Aspilogia I, and only in 1967 that the first of a new series of critical editions of early rolls of arms saw the light of day. This was Rolls of Arms, Henry III (Society of Antiquaries, 1967). Known as Aspilogia II, it consists of editions of the three oldest English rolls of arms, the Matthew Paris Shields, edited by T.D. Tremlett, and Glover's and Walford's Rolls, edited by H.S. London. It also contains Sir Anthony's Additions and Corrections to CEMRA. The series has not so far progressed any farther. It was proposed that Professor Gerard J. Brault, author of Early Blazon (Oxford, 1972), should continue the task, but other commitments claimed his attention, though he did publish his Eight Thirteenth Century Rolls of Arms (Pennsylvania, 1973), which consists of editions of Bigot, Glover, Walford, Camden, Chifflet-Prinet, Falkirk, Nativity and Caerlaverock. As his primary interest is linguistic, these editions do not provide a great deal of biographical information. Also relevant are Cecil Humphery-Smith's Anglo-Norman Armory (1973), which contains an edition of the Herald's Roll (Fitzwilliam version), and his Anglo-Norman Armory Two (1984), which is a useful ordinary of thirteenth-century rolls.

Editions of other rolls have been published from time to time and details may be found in CEMRA. More recently Mr R.W. Mitchell has published transcripts of many rolls (mostly of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries) under the auspices of the Heraldry Society of Scotland, but these are more or less unedited texts.

To revert to the Dictionary, Sir Anthony also perceived at an early stage the desirability of including some genealogical detail, with references to published articles and pedigrees, and as we shall see presently this caused the project to veer towards the production of a dictionary of armorial families rather than a new edition of Papworth's Ordinary. The collection of the raw material was a formidable task involving careful selection and briefing of prospective indexers and a highly organized system of administration at the centre. Precise instructions on the compilation of the armory and ordinary cards were given by Sir Anthony in an article entitled 'The Dictionary of British Arms', published in the Antiquaries Journal 21

(1941), 299–322. The method differed from Papworth's chiefly in respect of the sources. Whereas he had relied for his raw material largely on Burke's General Armory, a work notorious for its errors and omissions, the new project involved a survey of primary sources on an unprecedented scale. The Society owes a great debt of gratitude to the indexers, who were nearly all volunteers, and it is doubtful whether such an ambitious scheme could ever be initiated today.

Progress was rapid in the early stages and by the beginning of 1943 over 61,000 Armory and Ordinary cards had been written, recording crests, badges, supporters and mottoes as well as shields. Furthermore, they included modern material as well as medieval and it was, and still is, the intention to extend the Dictionary down to modern times. However, it was decided as early as 1941 that priority should be given to the Middle Ages, which, for our purposes, ended in 1530 with the beginning of the heraldic visitations.

The first published list of sources covered by the Dictionary appeared at the end of Sir Anthony's article 'The Dictionary of British Arms: Report of Progress' published in Antiquaries Journal 23 (1943), 42–47. In that article Sir Anthony envisaged the production of a self-contained medieval volume or volumes in advance of the main Dictionary. He also stressed the desirability of including genealogical material with a view to producing not only a Dictionary of British Arms, but a Dictionary of British Arms and Families. He considered the addition of detailed genealogical data to be not a mere luxury, but a necessary key to an understanding of the complex field of medieval arms and surnames. He appreciated the magnitude of the task and compared it with other major projects of a similar sort, the Complete Peerage and the Victoria County History. However, he pointed out that the main obstacle would be the cost and he went on to say: 'Research of this character and extent calls for collaborative specialization which a staff of one or two could not achieve. In the past expert unpaid full time help might have been hoped for, but it can hardly be looked for in a foreseeable future'. Additional endowment was essential 'unless we are to be content with progress at a snail's pace over a period indefinitely extended'. Such endowment was not immediately forthcoming, but the Society continued to meet the comparatively modest costs of the indexing programme from the Croft Lyons Fund and other sources and in 1945 a grant of £200 for seven years was made by Lord Howard de Walden.

Mr Collins withdrew from the project in January 1944, whereupon Sir Anthony was appointed sole editor. He was helped greatly by Hugh Stanford London (see under 'Compilers'), who gradually took charge of the indexing programme, transcribed many of the most important rolls of arms so that they could be indexed for the Dictionary, and was responsible with Sir Anthony for working out the structure of the ordinary (see next chapter). He also made a study of early terms of blazon, and his work in that sphere was acknowledged by Professor Brault (Early Blazon (Oxford, 1972), viii). A bibliography of his numerous published works may be found at the front of his Life of William Bruges (Harleian Society, 1970); it is preceded by an account of his career by Sir Anthony which includes interesting and often amusing details of their work together on the Dictionary during and after the War.

The indexing of sources continued and progress was summarized by Sir Anthony in his paper 'The New Papworth: A Progress Report', dated 26 February 1948. This included a summary of sources indexed from April 1940 to 31 December 1947, during which period contributors had written 74,354 armory cards and 103,866 ordinary cards. The indexing went on until about 1954, by which time it was felt that a halt should be called; most of the major collections had been covered and it was obviously impractical to go on collecting examples indefinitely if publication was to be achieved. The coverage of the Dictionary is consequently somewhat arbitrary and incomplete, but one could not hope, with limited time and resources, to record every single surviving example of medieval heraldry.

In his instructions to contributors in 1941 (see above) Sir Anthony asked that 'Every batch of cards sent in should be headed by a Catalogue card showing its contents, the name of the writer, and the date'. These catalogue cards were lost for some years and it was a laborious task trying to ascertain what sources had been indexed for the Dictionary. We had to rely largely on Sir Anthony's periodic summaries presented to the Croft Lyons Committee, which were not intended to be detailed, and included such entries as 'Essex 13 parishes'. Fortunately, however, the card index was discovered at Burlington House early in 1985 and, although the discovery occasioned a painstaking revision of the List of Sources, it has enabled us to give a much more accurate picture of the ground covered.

As the collection of primary material slowed down, work began on the writing of articles on the arms of medieval families in the hope of achieving the dictionary of arms and families envisaged by Sir Anthony. Many of the early articles were written by Hugh London, and after his death in 1959 the principal author was T.D. Tremlett (see under 'Compilers'), whose contribution to the project was enormous. In 1967 Miss Brigid Allen was engaged as a full-time research assistant, being succeeded in 1968 by Miss Sonia Anderson, who left in 1969 to join the staff of the Historical Manuscripts Commission.

I was introduced to Mr Tremlett in 1971 with a view to my helping him part-time, and after his death in 1972 spent some time sorting and indexing finished and unfinished articles; this index remains in the Society's Library, and supersedes the typed schedules previously maintained by Mrs Daphne Nisbet. I also completed a calendar of Mr Tremlett's papers in 1974 and started writing articles for the Dictionary. However, the chief difficulty lay in finding enough time to devote to the work when I was fully employed at the College of Arms. In addition I was not entirely happy about trying to produce definitive articles on the heraldry of every medieval family merely on the genealogical evidence of a few published sources. Existing articles were also of a variable standard. For example, Michael Maclagan, lately Richmond Herald, who has had a lifelong interest in the Clare family, was able to write an article of great authority on the heraldry of that family, whereas other authors were obliged to produce much sketchier articles because they had no previous knowledge of the families concerned.

Meanwhile, I became increasingly unhappy about the rate of progress, as did Sir Anthony and the Society. The help of Thomas Woodcock was enlisted in 1976, but since he was training for an appointment as a Pursuivant his spare time was almost as limited as mine. By February 1977 some 1,200 articles had been completed and about 1,680 were in progress. The number of articles still to be written was variously estimated at between 3,916 and 7,833. Thus the whole Dictionary might have consisted of somewhere between 6,796 and 10,713 articles. It was suggested that it might be published in instalments and we therefore recommended a medieval armory of twenty-two volumes, the first volume to include names beginning with the letter A. However, there were difficulties in dealing with those families in isolation: for instance, when quarterings were included for other families whose names belonged elsewhere in the alphabet. On 2 March 1978 the Council of the Society of Antiquaries decided not to approve any further expenditure on the Dictionary in the form hitherto proposed. I had earlier suggested the publication of a more or less unedited Ordinary and I was asked to explore this possibility in detail, though it was not a course favoured at first by Sir Anthony, who considered that the Society would be jettisoning the valuable work which it had approved and financed over many years.

After much thought and discussion Mr Woodcock and I produced our proposals in a memorandum dated 5 May 1979. We argued that the completion of the Armory in the form envisaged was too ambitious a project without substantial additional endowment and that it would be more realistic to change course at this point rather than to continue at the snail's pace foreseen by Sir Anthony as long ago as 1943. We did not consider the work of 40 years to be wasted, as the articles and armory cards would remain available to readers in the Society's Library.

Instead we envisaged a work on the lines of Joan Corder's 'Dictionary of Suffolk Arms', Suffolk Records Society, 7 (1965), which is an Ordinary with a nominal index making it in effect an Armory also, and we mentioned other works of a similar type. We made suggestions about the scope and format of the work and tried to estimate its size. We also made predictions (over-ambitious in the event) about the amount of editorial work likely to be necessary and the possible time-scale and costs. Sir Anthony gave qualified approval and made a number of helpful suggestions in a memorandum of 10 May 1979.

The report was submitted to the Croft Lyons Committee on 14 June following and was sympathetically received. The most significant development arose from a suggestion by Mr Ronald Lightbown that a computer might be used for the work. By a happy chance Professor John Evans, subsequently President of the Society, was a member of the Croft Lyons Committee. He mentioned that the Institute of Archaeology, of which he was the Director, was making increasing use of computers and generously offered us access to his facilities. He put me in touch with Dr Ian Graham, Lecturer in Quantitative Methods at the Institute, to whose attention I drew certain essays on the subject which had already been published, notably 'The Computer and Heraldry', by Dr N.M. Brooke, Department of Computer Studies, Lancaster University, Coat of Arms, n.s. 1 (1974–5), 92–4; and ‘Practical Heraldic Computing’, by Thomas Stothers, Proceedings of the Chiltern Heraldry Group (1975–6).

Dr Graham took an immediate interest in the project and made himself familiar with heraldic terminology and the basic rules of blazon. He arranged for the 114,000 index cards in the medieval Ordinary to be sent in batches of 1,000 to Cambridge, where they were keyed into the University computer by Humanities Computing Consultants, a husband and wife team, who likewise had to familiarize themselves with the language of heraldry.

However, the income of the Croft Lyons fund, even with injections from the Society’s Research fund, was insufficient to meet the demands of the new programme and appeals were made to several bodies. Those who responded favourably during the period 1981–4 were the Leverhulme Trust, the British Academy and the Marc Fitch Fund, and their generosity and patience are greatly appreciated. It is hoped that the appearance of the first volume will encourage further benefactions to enable us to complete the task.

It became necessary to enlist additional helpers and we were fortunate in securing in 1982 the part-time assistance of William Hunt, a chartered accountant who has done much work on the compilation of the necessary lists of sources, heraldic terms and abbreviations and on the biographies of the compilers. We have also had very considerable help from Thomas Woodcock’s research assistant, the Hon. Janet Grant, and from Alan Sykes, who joined the team for a time in 1983 after graduating from University College, London.

As soon as the data began to come back from Cambridge it was stored on magnetic tape at the Institute of Archaeology and Mr Woodcock and I, who were entirely unfamiliar with computers, were given some basic instruction by Dr Graham and his invaluable assistant Dr Jonathan Moffett, which enabled us to edit the data on screen. A small computer was bought for our use in the summer of 1981 and installed at the Institute and a second in 1982 for use by Thomas Woodcock and Janet Grant at the College of Arms, so that work could proceed more rapidly.

It soon became necessary to embark on a long programme of editorial discussions in order to achieve consistency in our editing. It was agreed at an early stage to retain corrupt spellings, blazons and sources rather than select only the earliest or ‘best’ source for each coat. There may well be occasions when the inclusion of a corrupt or secondary source can prove helpful in tracing the origins of a later coat of doubtful authenticity, and as almost every source is given, the experienced armorist will be able to decide for himself which are the most reliable.

A number of problems came to light as the editing progressed. For instance, the handwriting on some of the index cards was almost illegible and the compilers had not all been consistent in the way they blazoned the arms and recorded the sources. Thus the editors had to examine every single card to ensure that the details had been keyed into the computer correctly. Even then there were many instances where we would have liked to consult the original source, but this would simply have been too time-consuming. As it was, the preliminary editing took at least an hour for every thirty cards.

Another problem, already mentioned, was the lack of precise knowledge of the sources covered by the dictionary, as the cards were not always explicit. In this connection it was discovered that a good many ordinary cards (e.g. those for Wriothesley's Chevrons and other ordinaries) were still in bundles at Burlington House and had never been fed into the index. It was hoped to devise a programme whereby these could be sorted in by the computer, but this was not possible and they had to be placed manually. There are doubtless other blazons which have become misplaced as a result of the removal of the cards from place to place.

Further laborious tasks proved necessary, such as the alphabetization of surnames within each entry, where special computer programs had to be written in consultation with the editors, and we suffered from computer failures, a shortage of terminals, delays while material was transferred from one system to another, and other setbacks which slowed down the rate of editing. The preliminary round of editing was at last completed by the end of February 1984, but it had produced so many queries that a further, and even more comprehensive, round of editing was called for and embarked on. A deadline was eventually imposed by the imminent departure at the end of 1985 of Ian Graham for a post at the University of Waikato, New Zealand. Janet Grant and Alan Sykes spent long hours at their computer terminals in order to complete the editorial operation and William Hunt somehow found time to finish the lists of sources and abbreviations, with valuable help from Michael Holmes of the Victoria and Albert Museum. Most of the original typesetting program was undertaken at the Institute of Archaeology by Dr Graham himself after urgent discussions with the editors and with Sarah Macready of the Society of Antiquaries, but unforeseen problems arose after Dr Graham's departure. These were tackled by Dr Moffett and his colleague Ian Morton who joined the Institute as computer adviser in 1985 and we are most grateful to them for their help at that time and to the Oxford University Computing Service for typesetting the early proofs. However further difficulties arose and Dr Graham agreed to resume his role as technical editor in order to achieve the completion of the first volume.

The preparation of the remaining volumes still lies ahead but the task will be easier now that the first instalment has at length appeared. Having been fashioned by so many hands over so long a period the final product will be far from perfect, but it will nevertheless fill an important gap in the literature of heraldry.

Structure of the Ordinary

In a codicil to his will dated 5 January 1926 and proved in the same year Lieutenant-Colonel G.B. Croft Lyons wrote: 'I wish that a new edition of Papworth's Ordinary should be prepared And that in order that such Edition can be generally useful I desire that the blazon of the Arms in such new Edition shall follow the style of blazon in the present Edition and that the new forms affected in recent years by certain writers be not adopted but that the blazon be full and exact and such that any person can as far as may be understand it.'

Papworth's *Ordinary of British Armorial*s was published in 1874 and was the work of two men, John Woody Papworth (1820–70), who edited the first 696 pages, and Alfred William Morant (1828–81), who edited the remaining 429 pages from material left by Papworth.

The initial key to the structure of the present work is Papworth's Introduction to his Ordinary in which he states: 'The Plan of the Work is simply thus: the arms are blazoned (i.e. technically described) and are arranged in alphabetical order by the names of such of the respective charges as are first mentioned in the blazon; so that the inquirer has but to blazon the coat, and the first charge that he names shows under what title in this Dictionary the coat is to be sought . . . some of the charges, such as the ordinaries and others much in use, form heads so comprehensive, that several divisions and subdivisions became indispensable: there it will be seen that further alphabetical arrangements have been observed This part of the plan will be best learned by inspection.' As Papworth suggested, the best method of understanding the structure of his Ordinary is by inspecting it and this applies to the present Ordinary.

The achievement of Papworth as compared to other compilers of Ordinaries was that he saw the necessity of exact order in the entries. He devised a mode of classification that could extend from the simplest to the most elaborate coats where each had one and only one correct position controlled by the blazon. As the blazon controls the structure there are cases where an ambiguous coat in Papworth occurs more than once blazoned differently.

Papworth's underlying principle is that charges are to be considered in their degree of remoteness from the field or the centre of it. It is also the basis of this Ordinary, though here an exact position is controlled more by linear appearance than in Papworth's Ordinary, where the colour of the field and of the charge determine position within a larger general group.

Papworth gives a few references to sources where these are Rolls of Arms. Other nineteenth-century and earlier Ordinaries give no sources. The present work is devised to lead the user to the original source and a source is given for almost every entry. Any work compiled out of a card index of over 100,000 cards written by many hands over fifty years may contain errors. By the quotation of the original source an error should be discoverable by the user.

An inspection of Papworth shows that Papworth and Morant differed. As already mentioned Papworth placed too much emphasis on colour rather than linear appearance. Papworth has sixty-nine columns of One Lion coats placing together all possible varieties, rampant and passant, statant and couchant, guardant and regardant, crowned and gorged, charged and uncharged, and worst of all – those which are surmounted by a bend or fess or other charge over all. The contrast between Papworth and Morant can be seen by comparing the subdivision under Bend or Chevron with the more elaborate subdivision under for example Saltire. The present Ordinary has developed from Morant's scheme and, for instance, divides Lions as follows, commencing with the Lion rampant for which the word Lion alone is used:–

- (one) lion no tinctures
 plain field lion plain (i.e. plain as opposed to patterned or charged) patterned field lion plain lion patterned or charged, fields various, (the lions are categorized by the pattern or charge on them and placed in sequence within each category according to the field)

The above is the overall scheme of subdivision of one lion without another charge or ordinary which is represented in Papworth by pages 62–96. It will be seen that in the present scheme linear divisions take precedence over colour whereas in Papworth Or a lion passant Vert is followed by Or a lion rampant Vert. Entries are grouped under headings according to the pattern or charges on the lion and then arranged in sequence within each group according to the field.

Unlike Papworth the present Ordinary places the lion at the head of the beasts and follows with one beast other than lion with these latter beasts in alphabetical order whereas Papworth inserts the lion between the leopard and the otter. Like Papworth demi-beasts are placed immediately before a complete beast in each category.

The position of the lion follows an alphabetical sequence with the exception that lions rampant as the most numerous are dealt with before the less frequent lions couchant, passant, salient and statant, which follow in that order. There is one other exception which is that lions guardant, that is with the head turned towards and looking out at the spectator, have been treated as a separate group whether rampant, passant or in some other position. Lions guardant follow lions statant and are subdivided into rampant guardant, passant guardant, and then salient, sejant and statant guardant. Lions regardant, that is with their heads turned to look back over their shoulder, follow lions guardant.

The English system of cadency marks is thought to have been invented by John Writhe, Garter King of Arms, in about 1500. After 1500 a label in non Royal heraldry denotes an eldest son in the life time of his father. Before 1500 the label did not necessarily indicate this and there are many instances of arms differenced by a label. One beast and a label follows one beast without a label so that all single beasts with a label are grouped together. In a more complicated section such as beast & in chief, the lions & in chief are followed by other beasts & in chief and then all beasts & in chief & label are listed, first the lions then other beasts. Other cadency marks such as crescents and mullets are dealt with according to their position on the shield. A lion charged with a crescent appears under lion patterned or charged and if the crescent is above the lion it is listed under lion & in chief.

The purpose of an Ordinary of Arms is to identify a shield. In many cases, such as a seal or monument, no tinctures are available and for this reason the linear emphasis has been stressed so that this resembles a pictorial Ordinary in arrangement where lions in one position are placed together irrespective of tincture and untinctured examples come at the beginning of each section of coats of a similar linear appearance.

An example of the division in another part of the Ordinary can be seen with chevrons, where a coat with both field and chevron untinctured, as on a seal, is followed by coats with fields of a plain colour or metal and a plain chevron, such as Argent a Chevron Gules. Patterned fields (e.g. checky or ermine) with untinctured or plain chevrons follow. Finally, there are patterned chevrons arranged within each subdivision of pattern according to the field, with untinctured followed by plain and patterned fields.

The blazon follows that used by Papworth and is 'full and exact', as required by Croft Lyons. There is a problem of meanings shifting. For example what in the fourteenth century would be called a fess indented might today be blazoned five fusils conjoined in fess. The compilers of the cards were instructed to use an unambiguous modern blazon applicable to the drawing of the Arms and the Ordinary must be used with this in mind, though occasionally compilers did not follow instructions.

Surnames are reproduced exactly as they occur in the original source, even if scarcely intelligible or erroneous, as some errors later led to unwarranted use of arms. In this the Ordinary follows Papworth. The nominal index attempts to catch all variant spellings of a name so that nothing should be lost by repetition of medieval errors, or different forms of the same name such as De Alta Ripa, Dealtry, Dawtrey and Hawtrey.

The Index of Headings and the text contain three sizes of heading. Three degrees of heading were imposed in the interests of simplicity, though there are occasions when a hierarchy of four or more would have been preferable. For instance the heading Argent billetty 1 lion should be subordinate to Billetty 1 lion but both are of the same size as are cross references (e.g: leopard: see lion passt gard). As far as the structure of individual entries is concerned the blazon is followed by the surname and then by Christian or other names and/or a place of residence. Next comes the source. Editorial comment follows in round brackets and square brackets are used for other material such as speculative attributions, identifications or tinctures. Many abbreviations are used and reference should be made to the list of them.

Many people have worked on the Ordinary, though none for as long as Sir Anthony Wagner. His influence is as important on the structure as in other areas and reference should be made to his articles in Antiquaries Journal 21 (1941), 299–322 and 23 (1943), 42–47 and to a progress report written for contributors dated 26 February 1948. These show the development of the structure, though some modifications have been made since 1948. Like Papworth's Ordinary, it is best mastered by inspection and use.

Abbreviations and selected word list

The list of abbreviations includes abbreviations with the words in full, and vice versa. The full version has been omitted if its inclusion would have placed it next to its abbreviation. The alphabetization of the list ignores apostrophes, hyphens, numerals and spaces.

'Sic' indicates that the word is used in the form given.

'Sic sub' indicates that the word may be used in this form but in a section headed by the alternative word

'Say' indicates that the alternative word is used in preference, particularly in headings, but that the use of the second word is not necessarily precluded.

The spelling of French past participles has been anglicized, e.g. 'semy' rather than 'semé'.
