LEIDEN | BOSTON

From John Ryan's Life of William III — The Boyne Water —

July the first in Oldbridge Town
There was a grievous battle, Where many a man lay on the ground By the cannons that did rattle, King James he pitched his tents between The Lines for to retire, But King William threw his bomb balls in And set them all on fire.

Threat enraged they vow'd revenge Upon King William's forces, And often did cry vehemently That they would stop their courses, A bullet from the Irish came,
Which grazed King William's arm, They thought his Majesty was slain Yet it did him little harm.

Duke Schomberg then in friendly care His King would often caution To shun the spot where bullets hot Attain'd their rabid motion, But William said he do'nt deserve
The name of Faith's defender, That would not venture life & limb To make a foe surrender.

When we the Boyne began to ~~cross~~ The enemy they demanded, But few of our brave men were lost So stoutly we defended.

The horse was the first that march'd on The foot soon followed after,
But brave Duke Schomberg was no more,
By venturing over the water.

When valiant Schomberg he was slain, King William he accosted His warlike men for to march on,
And he mounted the foremost;
"Brave boys" he said, "be not dismay'd "For the losing of our Commander, "For God will be our King this day,
"And I'll be General under."

Then stoutly we the Boyne did cross, To give our enemies battle;
Our cannon to our foes' great cost Like thund'ring Claps did rattle; Our majestic mien our Prince rode o'er His men soon followed after,
With blows & shouts put our foes to the route,
The day we crossed the water.

The Protestants of Drogheda Have reason to be thankful, That they were not to bondage brought,
And by'd at Milmount after;
But brave King William set them free
By venturing over the water.

The cunning French near to Dulack Had taken up their quarters, And fenced themselves on every side

Till waiting for new orders, But in the dead time of night,
They set the field on fire,
And long before the morning light,
To Dublin they did retire.

Then said King William to his men After the French departed,
"I'm glad", said he, "that none of ye "Seemed to be faint hearted, "So sheath your swords & rest a while,
"In time we'll follow after;"
These words he uttered with a smile,
The day he crossed the water.

Come let us all with heart & voice Applaud our lives' defender, Who at the Boyne his valour showed,
And made his foes surrender.
To God above the praise we'll give Both now and ever after,
And bless the glorious Memory Of King William that crossed the Boyne water.

This battle was fought by King William III who gained the victory over King James on 1st/12th July 1690.

Copied by myself on board the 'View of Bray' in 1848, recopied in Lima by Richard Butler on 25th January 1869.

Continuation of Saturday, 2nd Dec 1843

The Park is kept in good order; its gravel walks are clean & neat, the lawns well & even shorn, the handsome trees spreading their tall, now leafless branches. The abbey itself, tho' of less fame than that of Melrose, pleased me more, as it is beautifully interwoven w. Trees; of the main aisle hardly any vestige remains, part of the Eastern wall stands, here must have been the place of the high altar. Thence westward runs a row of pillars intermixed with the Stumps, two or three feet high, of a few pillars, a beautiful green sward covers the ground, where the aisle once stood is easily discernible. Of the Northern side aisle a few arches remain, my sket. Engraving gives a good Idea of them, here are the graves of Sir Walter Scott, his wife (she was a French lady) and of his grandmother, no monument is erected, a plain iron railing surrounds and a low mound covers the mortal Remains of this great & good man. It is under the arch on the right of my sket. engraving where Sir Walter is buried, under the other to the left, likewise surrounded by an iron railing, some members of his relations, the Haldanes, are interred. My Engraving shows a monument with an urn on the Top, this has been taken away since. On the other side, to the Southward of the principal aisle, the Ruins are in a much better state of preservation. In one part, with its roof entire, the late Earl of Buchan has placed a Statue of Sir Isaac Newton, — on this side were the Refectory, the kitchen where the Chimney is clearly visible, also the staircase, partly crumbled to pieces, which led to the Dormitory, of which the windows still exist, but not the Ceiling which separated it from the apartments below. We returned, were rowed over the Tweed and walked back the same way.

which we had come, as far as Melrose. The Duke of Buccleuch's hounds were out, and we had just a glimpse of some of the huntsmen. It had been market day in Melrose, & we met some of the small Highland Cattle coming thence. Rodger met an acquaintance of his who replied to a question, which I did not hear: "Back for Yule" angliee: "Cats are down"!!! In Melrose we mounted our gig and in the Dark drove back to Bridgelands, where we arrived at 6, dined & spent a quiet Evening. Rodger & his wife appear to be very fond of each other, occasionally however Time must hang rather heavily on their Hands.

Sunday 2 Dec. We breakfasted somewhat later than usually. At about 11 h. Rodger & I walked to Church in Jedburgh, the exterior of the building is plain, to which the interior corresponds. The minister, Campbell, whose yearly income is about 250 £, has been officiating in this Church thirty odd years; in the Course of the Service he read the Lord's prayer once: psalms were sung without the accompaniement of an organ. Also here many of the parishioners have seceded from the established to the so called free church. After Service was over, Rodger & I entered for a few minutes a park, called Fernieg, which is to be let, 250 £ annually are asked for the same with the house, it belonged to the Pringles, and after the Death of two unmarried brothers it has now come into the hands of a sister of theirs married to a Douglas. It is a pretty spot; behind the house a lake forms a fine sheet of water, however as it is unembalished as yet, it is not kept in very neat order. I walked home by myself, Rodger waited for his wife, with whom he again went to Church at 1 o'Clock. I wrote my diary till they returned, we dined earlier than

The greater part of the morning I was occupied writing. At abt 11 the father & brother of Mr Rodger, Robertson by name, arrived on their gig. He is tall, rather thin, but hale, and pleasant in his conversation. He has farmed about 600 acres of land in the neighbourhood of Kelso, 12 miles off. Of his wife I cannot say much, she seems to have been good looking in her youth. Mr Peter Rodger, friend & executor in Salkirk, dined with us. The conversation did not always interest me, and as they spoke all with a very strong Scotch accent, I did not continually listen to them with so much attention, as to understand all which was said. At 10 all retired to their respective bed rooms. Mr Peter Rodger had left previously, he lives about two miles from a place called Midgehaugh. In England in criminal cases a grand jury of 23 jurors is empannelled, the majority of which decides, whether a true bill is to be found or not. It is the same in Ireland, as was lately the case with the State Trial against O'Connel & accomplices. In Scotland this decision depends upon the Chief In England & Ireland the petty or special jury consists of 12 jurors who all must be unanimous in their Verdicts as to the Guilt or Innocence of the party accused. In Scotland the Jury consists of 15 members & the majority of Votes decides

Sunday 5 Dec. When I rose at 8 o Clock, the usual hour, it was a disagreeable, rainy & windy day, by 9 o'clock it cleared up. At 9 we sat in the hall of assembling for breakfast. For a short time I accompanied Rodger & Mr Robertson in their walk over the farm, the latter counselling the former. I left them soon & went home to write. The remainder of the day we spent very quietly, writing, reading, dining, taking tea & conversing. It would appear to me, that Rodger's life is rather a lazy one, for tho' he has to look after his farm, he has assistants & bailiffs, and also to the N.A. Consigne[e] and has to keep his Books & accounts in order, yet I see, that in the Evening Times passes slowly. At 10 or 10½ p m, after having read a Chapter in the Bible and a prayer, which is also done in the morning before breakfast in the presence of the servants, he & she retire to bed. They are both very kind, good & affectionate souls. It is astonishing to see, how good looking, clean & tidy the maid Servants are; they wear a print gown, an apron & a cap, under which their hair falls down in pretty ringlets, many a L.A. woman or lady cannot stand the Comparison with them. Their wages are very trifling: £ 5 in the summer £ 2 Guineas in the winter, out of which they must dress themselves. In the morning they have for breakfast porridges consisting of oatmeal boiled in water with a little Salt, very much like our German d.d. Brüje; & they dine at 12 h, not the same as their masters, in the evening they get Tea. Every monday morning the mistress gives them bread & sugar for the whole week; Bannock, a bread made of grease & second rate wheat flour they have at discretion. — At breakfast I always take porridge with milk; we also have honey, ham, &c. eggs, toast and bread & butter. The Tenant is now selling by Ledger & by his agents, at 11 £ 5 the Ton, which, in the latter case, deducting Commission, Charges & Interest, leaves him a very miserable profit, hardly 2 £, it costs him £ 10. at 14 days' credit. An English Acre = 7840 square yards, a Scotch about ¼ less. The farms in the neighbourhood of Selkirk are measured by English Acres, and the annual Rents pr acre varied from 1 to 3 £, 30-40/ £ abt the average. If a farm is to be sold, the price paid generally 21 years' purchase, that is to say, if the acre was let at 2 £, it was sold at 54 £.

Wednesday 6 Dec. We all rose earlier than usually because I intended to leave. After breakfast, a little past 9

Rodger drove me in his gig, or rather in his Car, – for this vehicle has room for 4 persons, 2 before & 2 behind. To Gallashiels, about 6 miles off. We had a pretty view of Abbotsford from behind, we being on the N. side of the Tweed. Both the Bridge & the Tweed before this Junction we passed over bridges and after a pleasant, tho' somewhat cold drive, – for it was a showery day & it blew hard – thro' a hilly Country, we arrived at Gallashiels at 10 o'Clock. This is a very thriving place, much more so than Selkirk. Many woollen goods, consumed in the Country, are manufactured here and on the factories, which are rapidly springing up in the vicinity. At a small Inn we waited 20 minutes till the Coach from Edinburgh to Newcastle made its appearance. There was no room inside & the weather was so bad, that I could not make up my mind to go outside. Rodger wrote a few words to the Coach Owner in Edinburgh, requesting him to secure me an inside Seat for to-morrow, after which we returned to Bridgelands. I spent this day quietly at home. I read Thomas Sadleir's 16 years in Chile & Peru, – Stephens' Travels in Central America, the former a poor the latter an excellent book.

Thursday 7 Dec: After breakfast Rodger & I started again in his Car for Gallashiels, to day I was more fortunate than yesterday. Rodger's Note had reached the Coach proprietor in Edinburgh, who had secured me an inside Seat. The three other inside passengers were a Scotch elderly lady, who left us at Melrose and two Englishmen, both apparently travellers for manufactures. The younger with an ugly swelled face told us that he was again for a house in Leeds, the other, of about my age, was rather pleasant, and after we had become a little acquainted with each other, we talked about Buonaparte & Wellington. Former & Miss Ellen Tweed & Miss O'Neal &c. &c. After having left

There, tho' the moon rose and the night was rather clear, I knew little of the road. I merely observed trees on both sides: we passed through various villages, left some extensive artillery barracks on our left, and at about 9 o'clock we stopt at the Turf Hotel in Gallowgate in Newcastle. Here again, in the same manner as in Glasgow and Edinburgh, the Number of my room was 22, which is a strange coincidence. For some time I walked thro' the streets of the place casually I directed my steps towards the new town. I observed some wide, regularly built, occasionally unfurnished streets not particularly well lighted & little filled with passengers. Some thing like a feeling of solitude crept over me, especially when I heard the piano plaint in one or two houses, and when I saw ladies and gentlemen enter their homes and when I guessed to myself how they would sit down at their own fireplaces and be received by their own families, whilst I am wandering about, like an outcast, having spontaneously renounced all these pleasures of human life. Fortunately these ideas did not last long: the thoughts of visiting Athens soon banished them. I hope they may not return with more force, when in the course of the ensuing year I travel abroad on the Continent. I went to bed early and amused myself for a considerable while reading Warren's splendid work "the diary of a physician." Mother & Jane & the Gamester, Henry Beauchamp, is a highly interesting, melancholy, but I hardly think, overcharged Tale.

Friday 8 Dec. I rose at half past 7, breakfasted & dressed. I walked over a great part of the town, but as I could not get a perfect plan of Newcastle, my steps were altogether directed by chance. It is a strange place. The old town near the river is quite old fashioned, here the stories of many houses project one over the other; the streets are narrow and there are [illegible] as at York & Edinburgh Closes. The foot pavements are also narrow. The streets run up hill and down hill, and steps of stone communicate between them. I crossed the bridge, on the other, the South side, the houses present the appearance of a suburb, and along the river's sides the streets meant to represent quays are not even paved, & full of mud. The vessels, all small craft, are lying up to the bridge with smoke in all direction, windmills turn their sails, and the hum of busy humanity resounds from all sides. Nowhere with the large places, over which I have passed, the activity of Newcastle cannot be compared. Looking from the Bridge on the Tyne Northward, a rather handsome large building standing on a hill overlooks the town below. It is the Guildhouse, close to it stands the old Castle, to which lead narrow miserable lanes, under a low arch, with old Clothes offered for sale. Thence downwards to the Close, a long street, which runs along the river, similar to the Thames Street in London, [illegible] innumerable ships lined with Steam & steamvessels. Near Close to the Bridge on the North side stands the Exchange, which I am told, contains a splendid readingroom in a piazza, which runs round it, fish are sold. For the new town, as already observed last night, the streets are more regular, straight, wide & with wider foot pavement, however, whilst in some places houses are still being built, other entire rows stand unfinished and many houses are to be let. There Colengwood & Westley Streets join, stands a handsome church, St. Nicholas, opposite the same is a stand for Cabs & Coaches, police men are their usual drill parade the Town. The market is a most splendid building, for the purpose, one of the best if not the best on the Earth. It is 190 of my steps long, 110 wide, it is well ventilated, has windows turn away and are on the top in the shape of a sky light. It consists of two rows of stalls & shops, with 16 wide Entrances on each side, where not only meat, poultry, vegetables, fruits & other prisoners except felons, which I did not observe, but also books & toys are offered for sale. The Country Jail is a large well walled building. (on an open spot, where various streets meet, not far from Elvet Square, a high pillar is erected with a statue of Earl Grey on the top.) By the plan of the Town, which hangs in the coffeeroom, I see, that many streets & improvements are projected, whilst what is begun is not always finished. On the North side one Railroad goes to Shields, on the South side another in connection with Omnibuses to Darlington. I took an inside seat in a Coach & started at 2 o' Clock, before we left the Town, an elderly woman, rather of the lower classes, but not disagreable, who was well acquainted with the neighbourhood, joined me. she had with her a nice little boy of 5 years of age, who, she told me, had been left with her by his mother when he was 2 months old, his father being at the time of the boy's birth in difficulties & in the Queen's bench. There is Romance for you in real life! Our Road took us over the bridge Southward. it was a fine afternoon & the neighbouring Country looked pretty, quite different from the comparative barrenness of Scotland, it is hilly, woody & cultivated; chimneys, machinery belonging to Coalpits, horse rails &c &c. all contribute to its lively appearance, it resembles remindes Cornwall, there are tin & lead mines, here coal pits. Cornwall however looks still more populated. We passed various Railroads which run the high road, for the easy Communication with the pits. My Companion pointed out to me many gentlemen & noblemen's Seats & parks. We passed the extensive park of the Earl of Durham, & further on, on the same, the left side of the road, a fine, antique looking Castle, called Lumley Castle, belonging to the Earl of Scarborough, situated to the East of a Town, called Chesterleestreet, which we passed, & further my informant told me of the same, that it has been the residence of William the Conqueror. Just before Durham the Post me. In Durham we merely changed horses: twice we crossed the river which runs down the around town, and I had a glimpse of the fine massive abbey, as well as of the neighbouring Country, said to be very handsome, and the little I saw, certainly confirmed the report. The Viaduct, over which we drove, are narrow, - the houses high. In some parts dark, we passed thro' various villages & reached Darlington at 4 o'Clock; an omnibus was ready to receive me and after a few minutes' Delay in a handsome coffeeroom, I drove off to the Railroad Station. I took a Seat in the first Class Coach, for as ground as night the second Class Conveyance is too cold, and reached York, 44 m distant. Here an Omnibus took myself & my luggage for 6 pence to the Black Swan, which seems to be an excellent Inn. I took Tea in the Coffeeroom & read the Standard, in Newcastle the Inn had the Globe, every where else I have found the Times. In bed I amused myself as usually with the "Diary of a physician".—

Saturday 9 Dec, anniversary of the battle of Ayacucho. I rose at half past seven; the weather is much milder, than it was in Midgeland, which I believe must be attributed to my having been travelled so much more to the Southward. I breakfasted and wrote for a long time my diary, mercurade after which I started as usually. I was much struck & pleased with the quiet appearance of the place; there was no bustle any where, - it seemed to me, as if an aristocratic peaceable air pervaded the whole. It has an old fashioned look, the walls are narrow, the houses built of brick and in many instances are Story projected above the other, it abounds with old Churches, many of which, exteriorly at least, are in a bad State. — I had the good luck to meet at a bank seller's in Coney Street, the same Street, in which the "Blue Swan" is situated, with a York guide book, by means of which I found easily my way all over the Town. First I directed my steps towards the Cathedral, the so called York minster, which is a huge edifice, built, if I mistake not, in the Gloria Gothic Style. The door being open, I entered the same, & soon little given to sudden impressions, I was instantly struck with the extraordinary dimensions of this wonderful building. a feeling of awe came over me, when I stood under the great central tower, the pillars of which are, I believe, 200 feet high. It was aloud M. I requested some person, to show me round, but was answered, that it could not be done just now, as prayers were about being read. I determined to hear them, entered the Choir & took a seat. The Congregation was very scanty, consisting of a few ladies & gentlemen: The clergymen in their white surplices, a number of boys also dressed in similar white dresses had a very Roman catholic like appearance, the usual episcopalian service without the Litany & sermon was read in a disagreable sonorous tone of voice. It was over at 11. when I applied to a verger, who showed me round. It would be a loss of time, paper & ink, to enter into a detailed description, as my guide book given id: but a few notes may not be amiss. In the Eastward of the great central tower is the choir, which is covered, that is to say, its roof was [illegible] with a superabundance of niches, canopies, brackets, pinnacles, crockets, statues &c. In the center is the arched doorway, which leads to the Choir, on each side of which doorway are niches in the wall, in which stand the statues of 15 English kings, from William the Conqueror to Henry VI, 7 on the North for the South Side. On the Top of the Screen the large organ for a magnificent Object, the solemn swelling Sounds of which made some amends for the indifferent Service. The Choir was destroyed by the fire lighted by the madman, Jonathan Martin, on 1st February 1829, and consequently every thing in the same is now new, but beautiful wooden carving, the Ceiling, the Stalls, the throne for the archbishop, when he attends, the pulpit opposite the throne &c. to the Eastward the altar, & behind the altar the altar Screen closed the Choir, a very old Corinthian Standard here, in which several of the old Saxon Kings are said to be interred. Behind the altar Screen follows the so called Lady's Chapel, and the upper part of the East wall is occupied by a stained window, of which my guide book says, quoting the words of a certain Drake, that it may justly be called the wonder of the world, both for masonry & glazing. Workmen were still busy repairing the pavement, which was broken to pieces, when the Ceiling fell in at the time of the fire in 29. The wide passage, which cross the Church from East to North is called the Transept, whilst the Nave & Choir with the Lady's Chapel at the East End run from W. to E. the verger told me, that with the exception of St Peter's at Rome, no Church on the Earth has an equal length in this direction, from E. to W. my guidebook gives 524 feet, but that of Winchester Cathedral 554 feet. consequently my informant was wrong. — in the middle, where these passages cross each other, stands the already referred to central tower. Both the North & South Walls are adorned with beautifully painted windows. A vestibule leads from the Northern transept to the Chapter houses, a regular octagon, &, in my opinion, in the highest degree beautiful building, in which I am confirmed by Dr. Whitaker, who intende, that it is the most perfect specimen now remain of the early pointed gothic style of architecture, introduced in the reign of Henry III. seven fine arched windows fill as many of its sides, the other is solid with tracery on the wall to correspond to the positions of the windows. The whole circumference below the windows, except at the entrance is occupied by the carved Stalls for the Canons, who compose the chapter of the cathedral. When any dignitary of the Cathedral is to be sworn, it is done here, also when any meeting of the dignitaries take place, here they assemble first, for all their documents are dated hence, then they (the dignitaries) for convenience sake, adjourn afterwards to the vestry. The whole western part of the Minster is separated from the rest by temporary brick walls, behind which many labourers are daily employed repairing the ravages caused by another fire, which broke out on 20 May 1840, originating from a casualty.

Below a part of the Cathedral called the so called Crypt, it is low arched and is considered to have been an old Church, which existed before the present Cathedral was erected on the top of it Eight steps lead to the first level and four more into the center of the vault. Any guide book says, that these vaults are supposed to have been a portion of the original edifice built partly in the time of King Canute 642, partly on or of Archbishop Thorne 1069. Of the present Cathedral, the South Transept is the oldest part, its foundation Stone having been laid in 1227, by far the greatest part is built of Stone, a great deal of the Carving of the Ceiling and all the Interior of the Choir are of wood. My Cicerone, one of the vergers, did not hurry me, as it is but too frequently done on similar occasions. I therefore took my time, & having finished, I walked to the Deanery garden a few insignificant Lawns with gravel walks between them.

I could not fail to recognize as belonging to the well known genus of the Yorkshire farmers. on each side of the foot pavement of platform that was filled with gents & women, probably the daughters, sisters wives of these farmers. At 2 o' Clock the Crowd had disappeared. I returned to my Hotel at 2. half an hour later an omnibus called which took me to the Leeds rail road Station. I entered the * round close Carriages and seated myself in a very Civil Country, owned with a thick and gloomy looking leg. whether this day, nor yesterday from Darlington did we pass thro' any Tunnel. At the railroad Station in Leeds I again entered an Omnibus and at 3 o' Clock precisely I stopt at the Scarborough hotel, Leeds, 24 miles from York. The apartment was filled with travellers, who left gradually by various Conveyances. I remained by myself and had time to write my diary. I walked out a little, but the evening being dull & gloomy, the streets shortly lighted up. I returned soon to my hotel. The usual charges in the Hotels, in which I have stopt hitherto in Great Britain & Ireland, are:

for Tea 3/ in Engd & Irld, 3/6 in Scotland breakfast 3/

Servants 1st Daily, viz. chamberm. 6, waiter 6, boots 3

Queen Victoria has been paying visits to the Duke of Devonshire at Chatsworth, to Sir Robert Peel at Drayton Manor, to the Duke of Rutland at Belvoir Castle, at the latter place the Duke of Wellington, 76 years of age, has walked in the garden before 7 o'Clock. Shame upon the comparatively young man like myself, who remains in bed till 8. At 9 o' Clock I went to my room, where I was a long time busy with packing up my trunks. I shall have here way thro' except my Comb, my Tooth brush & a few clean Shirt Collars.

Sunday 10 Dec. Boots called me at 6, I rose instantly, and after passing thro' some of the dark, foggy streets, over which the gas lamps threw a sickly light, I reached the Coach office before 7. I took an inside Seat for Dingley and away we went. The fog was so thick, that I could not see further than just the sides of the road, on each side of which I discerned now some trees, now a solitary house, now a row of houses, but all covered & disfigured by the all covering mist. We passed a village and stopt at Bradford, 10 m distant, an apparently pretty large place, the guard & coachman took their breakfast here. I remained in the Coach, amusing myself with my inseparable excellent Companion, the Diary of a Physician Warren, the author, knows how to move & to engage the best feelings of humankind; no one will rise from the perusal of his descriptions of virtue, guilt, anguish & misery a worse, perhaps a better man, at all Events he cannot but form good resolves. Six miles further on lies Dingley, a small place, where the Coach stopt at the King's Head Inn. I was first shewn to the Taproom, where I asked for some breakfast, the travellers room, a nice comfortable place with carpet, fire place and all the usual conveniences, was made ready for me, and a good substantial breakfast, consisting of Tea, hot muffins, buttered toast and excellent fried ham placed for me, the Morning Herald given me for perusal. The Landlady a good looking elderly woman was in deep mourning. After breakfast the waiter sent an errand boy, who shewed me the way to Hardon Grange, M. Ferrand's Seat, where Wally Wall is Governess. The Road leads down the town, over a Bridge, which crosses the Broad Aire a river, which flows into the Ouse (this discharges into the Chamber) and diverging about a little from the river's course it leads up a rising hazel dell, at the top of which, on the left hand, which belong to Farden Grange. The Iron park gates being open, I walked on without any interruption, I passed the neat looking porter's Lodge and reached the house, a large building without any claims to architectural beauty. The door stood wide open. I entered, but a long time elapsed, before I made myself heard. At last a Servant came and when I enquired for Miss Wall. he replied, that she had been expecting me. he showed me to the dining room, where I waited a few moments, when Betty made her appearance; she seemed much moved; she looked at me. I at her. I hope I may have appeared to her better than she did to me: for she is undoubtedly grown old & is far from godly. I believe, she has lost some of her teeth, she wears false hair & a cap. she called me Heinrich & Thou. I, her, Betty & Thou. The family was gone to Church. Betty showed me hurriedly over the library & drawing room, which are elegantly & comfortably furnished with Sofas, carpets, looking-glasses, a piano, a harpsichord, upon one of which a fine white greyhound was resting its head, tables, books, engravings & a thousand such trifles which dare not be wanting in an English house, which is well stocked up. It was clearly visible that the owners have no lack of money. Betty then took me up stairs to her much more plainly furnished room: here we had a long Talk, she gave me an account of all her misfortunes, in 1824 her father Daniel & uncle Peter died, they paid every one but remained almost without any thing; they are both dead, and Mr Daniel has left his widow, Betty's mother, who now lives with Fritz at his farm near the duchy of Schleswig, Dj 2200 — which, after her death, Betty will receive.

She has been as governess with many families, also for some time with Semper. her Cousin, after the death of her first wife. she does not love him nor admire his character, but of course he cannot deny his Cleverness. Miss Polly Betty is with the Ferrands, Mrs Ferrand a widow, is the lady, who has engaged her. she is the guardian and Charming of her Cousin's two children, a boy & a girl, which latter, actually named Sarah, but called Lilla, is Betty's pupil. - she attend the room various times, & is a pleasant affhand little creature. The Name of Mr Ferrand's Cousin is not originally Ferrand, but he has adopted it, because on virtues of a proviso in his will the estate will descend to him - the Estate is at present owned by his mother, on account of his having taken the name who was represented to me as a very bad & wicked woman. she lives close by & they do not see each other. nevertheless Mr F, who is 3 years older than Mr F, & who, as Betty told me, rules the roost, has ruled the Estate from her & enabled it to various ferrand. He is about 32 years old, member for Knaresborough, in politics an agricultural Tory, & some years after I had been at Harden Grange, made himself very conspicuous as the prime mover of & agitator for Mr Carter's liberating fund. Betty's life is a very solitary one, & I doubt, whether she feels happy; she however praises Mr Ferrand & says, that she is a superior woman, of whom she has no right to complain, except so far as she complies with the English custom, in considering a governess as quite a subordinate being. Only on Sunday Betty dines with Mr & Mrs Ferrand; on the week Mr Ferrand breakfasts as 9 is her dinner; they dine at 7, & Mrs Ferrand prefers being quite by herself the long evenings, when Mr F. is abroad, rather than call Betty down to keep her company. Of course Betty also breakfasts by herself. the whole morning she is occupied instructing little Lilla, to whom she also gives her lessons after luncheon. This little girl entered Betty's room & lay down straight on the floor, with a little pillow under her head. I thought this a very strange way of conduct herself, when Betty told me in Explanation, that in order to prevent her many ordinary occupations having a pernicious influence upon her figure she must lie on the floor every day two hours, quite straight & well stretched out, in which position she takes some of her Lessons. Betty I am sure, must feel the inconvenience of her Situation, for tho' she has not been brought up in a stylish manner, has much been accustomed to be made comfortable of her own, owned by rank & money, she is good & clever, but not so amiable by far as her friend Mrs Trandoff – Lella brought up a Note from Mrs F. to Betty, saying that Luncheon would be ready at 1 & that she should be glad if Betty's friend I would partake of it instead of a dinner. At the time appointed, when a Bell rang, we went down Stairs to the dining room. Mrs Mrs Ferrand received me in a very friendly manner, besides them, Betty & myself, her son & daughter sat down: we had hot roast beef, potatoes, vegetables, a little bit of pudding, Sherry & Beer. I made a light dinner & conversed freely, making myself quite at-home. Mrs Ferrand is a good looking & well shaped & pleasant in her conversation & apparently richened any hasty things about her. He seems to be a good natured, straight forward man, not showing much brightness in her conversation, tho' as already said, he is quite a political Character, and at County meetings makes many a speech always in favor of the agricultural Interest. Luncheon being over, Betty took me again up Stairs, Mrs Ferrand wishing me a pleasant passage & a favorable West wind, a hint, that I was not to see her again. I should like to have seen the park & something of the surrounding country, which to judge from an occasional glimpse I had, when she was appeared momentarily, must be very pretty: but a thick fog covered every thing & also prevented Betty from showing me over the extensive grounds. Taken I left England, thro' which I have come is as populous as the distance of 2 miles between Bradford & Halifax. Halifax looks an old Town: of course as yet I cannot judge of it, as I merely drove thro' it to an Inn, the White Hart, where the Coach stops. I left here my Gladstone, Portmanteau &c to go forward by Coach, Mr. Nest, on the East side of the Manchester Road at the 11 mile from the Town. I easily found it out. I first entered the dwelling house, where I was shown to the separate standing counting house here. I hardly had mentioned my name, when Mr Crowther, the head Clerk, received me in the most friendly manner imaginable, also the two young Misses Edwards, Henry & Joseph, were extremely kind. They insisted upon my remaining with them some days, and on my telling them, that I had no luggage with me, it was determined, that my portmanteau should be sent for from Leeds. I willingly agreed to this arrangement. Mr Crowther being busy writing an Introduction for Highlander & Hobe. I also wrote a few words to my wife. — The two Miss Edwards, Henry 31 years of age, the elder, & Joseph, the younger brother, took me to the garden, where we walked about & met Miss Edwards, a pleasant but not young lady. They took me to the hot house, headed by means of tubes with hot water, where they are growing pines, which, they say, thrives famously, & we then entered the dwelling house, the Mr Edwards, who is still ailing in consequence of an apoplectic attack, which he has had several years back, & his wife having just returned from a drive. — The Mr Edwards is a respectable, pleasant man. In the drawing room I sat down with him on the sofa and conversed with him & the Mrs Edwards, an agreeable, matronlike lady. At 2 o'Clock, Mr & Mrs C & their two daughters sat down to dinner, which was a luncheon for the two brothers & myself.

I remained conversing with the old people, till it was nearly dark when horses were brought, Mr Henry Edwards mounted the one. I the other, not much to my liking, for, tho' I manages, not to fall off, yet with the slippery saddle, the Trotting I considering were equally disagreeable to me. — We rode into Town and then to Mr Henry's dwelling house, Beaver Lodge, about 1 mile distant from Dartmouth & hardly 2 m. from Halifax. I was ushered into the drawing-room, furnished in the usual English extremely comfortable manner. After a few minutes Mr Henry Edwards made her appearance, she is a young, not beautiful, but particularly amiable Lady. Verily nothing is a greater Error, than to call the English Ladies reserved, in less than an hour I was quite at home with her & talked away, as if I had known her for years. Three little Children, Henrietta, Henry & Churchill, ab[t] 3 1/2 years of age respectively, came in (the youngest, I wonder old, is not humble,) and they of course, as it is always the case, engrossed much of the attention of their parents, mother & visitors, who, besides myself, were Joseph Edwards, old Mr Frankland & his son Edward, who is also employed at the Comd[r]s house. At 6 o'Clock we sat down to dinner, plain but good, of wines we had Hock, Burgundy & Champaign; after dinner, Henry & Ted, & finally Edward. A Servant in livery attended. The Conversation was very animated. Mr Frankland, 67 years old, but showing much less, got a little in the wind. So do his Son are members of a Chop Club in Halifax. In Dare a match is now being played between Saunders, the English & Bernard, the French Champion, he is to be declared the victor, who gains the first 11 Games. (6 Feb[y] in Allona. Saunders gained the match with great ease in his favor.) After dinner we removed to the drawing room, where Mr Henry presided at the tea table. I sat down near her & chatted away in great style: she pleased me much, she is a nice, merry young lady.

brother. After breakfast Mr Henry & I rode to Pie Nor, I again not much to my liking, and went to the Ground House, where I wrote my diary in rough. Mr Cruddas has received a letter from Paris, announcing Jones & Mr Wilson, Saunders friend, he writes, that he himself & his spirits are exhausted, the last game lasted 10 hours, including half an hour for a filthy dinner. The Match is played for 1000 £ besides many bets pending on the same, it now stands thus: Saunders has gained 7, St Amand 3, drawn 2. Wilson writes, that St Amand is improving and that Saunders is stronger in the attack than in the defense. He appears to be by no means confident as to the ultimate Result. Joseph Edwards came to take me to their mills & factories, but, the horses not being yet ready, we went to old Mr Edwards' dwelling house, where in the nicely furnished drawing room I found the younger daughter, Henrietta 17 or 18 years old, occupied at her embroidering frame. She left off & conversed with me, until Mr Henry Edwards with her children, her husband & some other visitors arrived, when I of course was less attended to. The horses being ready, Mr Joseph & I rode together to the Mills, about 4 miles off on the high road to the Westward. The Country is prettily studded with houses & manufactories: to the Southward or to the left of the road is a valley, thro' which the Calder & a parallel running Canal flow; the Canal running to the right, to the Northward, the road over it, whilst above the same, or rather above the bridge a splendid arched viaduct is spanned for the Manchester & Leeds Rail road. Further on, the Ripponden river flows thro' the valley to the left, which gradually narrows, the hills seem to meet. The Scenery, prettily even now, must be beautiful in the spring & summer. Riding very slowly, we passed a large village, called Sowerby bridge, which owing to the factories in the neighbourhood, of which new ones are always springing up, is fast increasing in importance. In the mills of Messrs Edwards, where the raw wool is spun and then woven into cloth various textures, Mr Joseph showed me all round. many people, of whom the great part are healthy looking. very cheerful girls & women, are employed in the various parts: more or less, the process, which the wool undergoes, appear to me the same as that which I have seen in the Cotton factories. In the Next the different qualities of wool are mixed & cleaned a little. In the mills the wool passes through various machines, under it's becomes gentle laps & open [illegible]. it then undergoes the first spinning process, when it is turned out in long reels or tubes, about the thickness of my fingers, each, yard long. in another machine these tubes are joined together, are twisted and appear then in the shape of woollen yarn. The yarn which serves for the warp is then dressed with a kind of glue, called size, which answers the same purpose as the dusting with flour or starch in the cotton factories. In the looms the west is thrown into the warp by means of shuttles, in the same manner as in the cotton looms, and the fineness & coarseness of the different textures, whether flannels, blankets or cloths depend upon the pattern, description of wool, — & upon the wool's fineness, which give according to Browne or thicker thread. & 3dly upon the more or less rapidity, with which the texture, according now to explain, X the warp is rolled over a cylinder, and is pulled on gradually, whilst the shuttle throws on the west & weights is fastened to the warp on the side opposite to that whither it is pulled, and naturally the heavier this weight is, the slower the warp moves on, and the more close the beam gives, which knocks each thread of the west against the preceding an, consequently the more frequent these blows are upon the same spot, the closer the texture becomes; whilst on the other hand, when the weight is diminished, the warps move on quicker, the lap blows that have given upon the same spot and the more open is the texture. When the textures come out of the looms, they undergo various finishing processes, the first of which is the milling, done by means of heavy beams stamping upon them. The last finish is given to all fabrics at the Mill under Miss Edwards' own eye. The shearing of the wool upon the Drayden de Detton is looked upon by them as a mystery and kept quite secret. All Dyers are tied in the price, whilst great Clothiers are tied in the yarn. Wool cannot be spun into yarn without oil; this oil, of which the factory smells strongly, impedes the wool from flying about & injuring the work people's lungs, for which reason woollen and mixed mills are more wholesome than Cotton factories. Miss Edwards have another mill a little further down, which was washed. The work is washed at their similarly, in both places the machinery is put in motions by waterwheels, not by steam. I mounted my mare, but owing to Mr Joseph's horse jumping about, she also became frisky & did the same. with difficulty I got off, when she jumped about so violently, that I was afraid of mounting her again & I then walked home. The weather was very pleasant— In the Mill I found up there Mr & Mrs Edwards, & their daughters, Delia & Henrietta; the old lady & gentleman I much admire: they appear to me most excellent folks. I then walked with Mr Henry to Craven Lodge he has something aristocratic about him & me he does not shew it, but on the contrary is always extremely pleasant. His lady, who has been for some time an Invalid, is I repeat it, particularly amiable. I have seldom seen a lady, who has pleased me better after such a short acquaintance. She kindly nurses her children. We had a nice plain good dinner, but again Champaign, because I had said yesterday, that I am particularly fond of the wine. M Cronholm & her son Edward called & I walked with them to Halifax to the Soft club, only few members attended, the greater part of them being at a Free trade meeting held at a Room in the Oddfellows' Hall, where Colden, Bright & others were to speak. I gained 2 games from M Cronholm & 1 from another player, the best player are considered M Edward Cronholm & a M Forbes, which latter we met, when he was coming from the meeting, where he told us, that 1000 £ had been subscribed, as the Halifax wish'd the 100000 £, which the Anti Corn league require, to carry on the agitation. We walked home and I went to Bed, after having read for some time Warren's "10000 a year" the beginning of which is rather a little heavy. My fort. manteau had arrived from Leeds.

Wednesday 13 Dec. At breakfast I had a very amusing talk with M Henry Edwards, the ground was covered with hoar-frost, it was rather cool, but soon got milder. M Henry & I walked to Pie Nest, M Cronholm, who is a clever man, a good linguist &c. took me to his house close bye, & introduced me to his wife, an elderly, insignificant, silent woman. We usually my memorandas required me a great part of the morning. I had just finished, when M Joseph came to show me some more of their premises, we walked to the Cottage or rather house, which John Edwards, after his death Charles had occupied: since the decease of the latter & his wife, it is merely kept up by a housekeeper. After Joseph's marriage, which is to take place in Sept about a year's time, he & his lady are to occupy it. The neighbouring grounds & outhouses were filled with colts, Cows, Asses, pheasants, Dogs &c. of all which very particular Care & taken. The young gentlemen appear to be rather of expensive habits and to drink a great deal of sporting, of dirt dogs & horses and now of the lately formed yeomanry Corps Mr Joseph also showed me over the annl. Stores, the rooms, where the Bags are kept, where the various fabrics are milled, where the Nap is cut off the Cloth &c. the Sanctum Sanctorum, where the wool on the Bags is raised. is kept under lock & key, and shown to no one. I just wished good day to old Mrs W Edwards and then with Joseph to seen to call upon Mr John Watchouse, he, who two or three years back was in S. A. we did not find him at home: he is not married, occasionally subject to epileptic fits & has almost entirely retired from business. he is a magistrate & resides himself now principally with scientific pursuits. His brother Samuel married to a Miss Charlotte Edwards, is the chief man of business. these two are sons of John Watchouse, an old man, whose entire left side has of late been seized by a stroke of apoplexy. Their uncle, old John's brother, is Samuel, a dried up old bachelor. Since some time the Watchouses have given over the actual manufacturing of cloth: they have Cl their factories & find it more advantageous to purchase the Cloths from the smaller makers & merely to give them themselves the last finish. We met Samuel Watchouse on horseback. he returned with us a short distance & invited me to dine with him on Saturday. On my return to Crown Lodge I put on dress coat, trowsers & waistcoat, belonging to Mr Joseph, which fitted me pretty well. we dined, Mr Henry went up stairs to dress, Mr Henry & I sat a short time with our ladies, & at 9 o'Clock we drove in his fine commodious & capacious Coach to Mr George Ballard's in Halifax. he has some rank in the Yeomanry Corps and with his lady gave the Evening the first Ball in the Season, to which, Mr Henry being very intimate ball room. I waltzed for the second time with Miss Norris and we were danced with by a pianist. Contra dance, which they all have a Sarabband, but which, as the couples preceding us did not understand the figure changed into a waltz. When the party was drawing to a conclusion, I made bold to ask Miss Norris for another dance, which she however refused to give me. There was not any Cotillion, but all were in the pleasant looking. Miss Norris undoubtedly the prettiest, I was glad at home with her & conversed with her freely. I had also some conversation with an old maid with spectacles on the Nose with various gentlemen, one of whom was a Mr Armitage, captain of the Huddersfield Germany, whom I had met at Mr Strutt's in London on 21 Oct. He is not very agreeable. The Ladies were generally dressed in white, I believe, many in Lace, also in white Silk a few in colored dresses. Mrs Henry had a beautiful crimson velvet gown with a broad Worsleyham Lace hanging over it from her Neck. I observed little Jewelry. The gentlemen were almost all in black, & with white neckcloths, some with white waistcoats. The party broke up at about 2, when all the ladies had left, Mr Henry had gone up home before two — Mr Henry, who by the bye is a good & unbroken waltzer, Mr George Pollard & two other gentlemen sat down to take some brandy & water, I of course staid with them, but took nothing but Negus, of which Mr Henry & Port, several bowls had been replenished in the course of the evening. The conversation turned exclusively on the Germany business. I am some misunderstanding between the Halifax & Huddersfield divisions. Mr Henry & I drove home in a Fly & I went immediately to Bed.

Thursday 14 Dec. We breakfasted at 10. Mrs Henry pleases me very day better, but with my conversation I was not delivered a little, the Glass from runs out, this was widespread. De Coke glowides, the glow's heard it drawes out, as lovely to be borne.

The liquid mass is allowed to flow into long narrow moulds of sand, which as soon as they are filled up, are covered with sand, for otherwise, as I understood from M. Waldthausen, a Clerk of the Establishment, who shewed us round, the air would oxidate the iron. As soon as it is cold, the moulds are broken and there the pieces, form what is called pig iron, which is not yet malleable. To make it so, it is heated five or three times in different furnaces and placed under enormously heavy hammers, which shape the white hot iron into Bars. * It is very interesting to see how the furnaces are fed with the Coke: a small Cart filled with the same, is by some ingenious contrivance moved up an inclined plain: when at the top, at the open mouth of the furnace, it is upset, the Coke is thrown into the furnace and the empty Cart runs down again. * When the Iron is sufficiently refined, or cleared of the Carbon, which it contains, & thus rendered malleable, it is shaped into bars, by placing it red hot between rollers of various widths which are moving, first between the widest, then between the next at little narrower, the next again narrower & so on: so that every time the Iron is put in & rolled out it becomes longer & ~~narrower~~ thinner. There red hot bars the workmen take hold of with long pincers & throw them about with the greatest dexterity. * Large moulds for a Cannon we saw filled with the liquid metal. M. Waldthausen was unwilling, whether these Cannon moulds are filled with the Iron, as it runs out of the first furnace, or with smelted pig iron. The Cannons finally turn out quite solid of the mass, afterwards they are bored or drilled into a Hollow of the diameter required; the cannon is very slowly of her back bone was really wonderful. After what the Bill called the "Indies of indigenity was not amiss. The ladies dressed in French fitting closely to their bodies & of flesh colour, with some ornamented Cloth round their Loins (to me they appeared rather too much in a state of Nudity) jumped upon the back of three horses, which stood very quietly. They placed themselves upright, then upon their shoulders other again upon them and then they formed some pretty human pyramids. It was past 11 when we got home. We had had a most [illegible]

Friday 15 Dec. As usually we breakfasted late. I had then only a little time to write my diary, when I drove back with Mr Henry from the Grand Square to Crown Lodge, Miss Delia accompanied us, whilst he was putting on his undress uniform for a yeomanry dinner at Huddersfield. Parted off. I conversed with the two Ladies. I was much amused with the very perceptible characteristic feeling with which the Edwards & other rich merchants & manufacturers of old Standing look down upon the "Town people's parvenus" "The yeomanry ball on 3d January promises to be very amusing, for we shall meet there all kinds of folks" When Mr Henry was ready, we drove to a Coachmaker in Halifax, whom he recommended much to me, his Name is Priestley, and I came almost to terms with him, for a Carriage for my wife. Mr Henry then left me in the Halifax reading room, where I staid till about 3, when Mr Joseph came & introduced me to his sister's, Charlotte, married to Mr Samuel Waterhouse [illegible] she never to be a Mirabeau woman. The drawing room, into which we were ushered, was of neat furniture in the usual comfortable English Style with Guitare, Carpet, piano, Sopha, chairs and a round table with books, engravings &c, fireplace &c &c. There Joseph looked in on Mr Norris' the mother of the young girl with whom I danced so much on Wednesday. The mother, the girl & one elder sister were present; we did not remain long but she took hands with me so kindly, as if she had known me for many years. Certainly, as far as I can judge, nothing is more unjust, than the Name, which the English women have got for Cowardice. Miss Delia & I drove home from Wakefield. Joseph proposed to walk. We came by the first Jews I have spoken to for an hour with the old Mr & Mr Edwards until Mr Crombelum called to take me to his house, called Crow wood, near Sir Edward & I immediately sat down to Chess. Some of his Chess friends, Forbes, Layland & Walsh dined with us. Dinner was plain, a servant girl attended, conversation was rather slack. Mr Crombelum is extremely aged. It seems to me hard, to see old Mr Crombelum, who has been a drudge in the Edward Establishment for so many years, live in so retired a manner, whilst Mr Henry, just fledged, lives so stylishly & expensively and Joseph will soon follow his Example. We sat as short time over our wine & then began playing at Chess. It was 1 when we left off. I gained 2 from Mr Crombelum 1 drawn with Mr

1 gained from Forbes
1 drawn with Mr
2 lost to Mr these two are considered the best players in Halifax. Forbes plays more beyond brains.

I slept at Crombelum's —

Saturday 16 Dec Mr Crombelum, his son Edward & another son of his, William, a solicitor in Halifax & sergeant in the Yeomanry corps, who had also visited yesterday at the party in Huddersfield, appeared at breakfast. Mr Crombelum did not. We went to the Founderyhouse, where I wrote my diary & read the Literary Gazette. Joseph had gone to Bailiwood to Mr Saunderson, Mr Henry took me to their wool stores, and the manner in which the Nap is cut off the Cloth was also explained to me. With Mr & Mr Edwards I walked up from the garden for a long time conversing on many subjects. he is a very pleasant man, so mild and unshroud any pretensions, of which his sons are not quite free. — Mr Henry & I then walked together to Halifax. This is an ancient dirty town with narrow streets & narrow foot pavements; the houses are for the greater part, built of stones, found in the neighbouring quarries & hewn in the shape of large bricks, in many instances one story projects over the other. The infirmary is rather a good looking building with some plain massive pillars forming a portico. At the coachmaker's Piercy we came to terms with the master regarding the carriage for my wife. It is to be a Chariot of a deep claret or maroon Color, inside lined with white silk, its price plain in Liverpool 207 £ including double plated harness for one & two coats. We thence, and to the piece hall, a large quadrangular building 3 stories high, with a piazza all round, where the manufacturers from Halifax and the neighbourhood have their offices, and where mostly on Saturday, market day, they sell their fabrics by Sample. — Next we walked to the market place, an open large space, covered with stalls, well provided, particularly with game. — We now adjourn to Craven Lodge. I dressed, conversed with Mr Henry & at about 6 o'Clock Mr Henry & I drove to Mr Samuel Waterhouse's place, Gray Inges. Mr. his Lady, Edw. Waterhouse jr., Samuel Waterhouse jr and a Mr Haigh were assembled in the same drawing room, where I had been the other day. Dinner was announced & Mr. Waterhouse requested me to take his lady to the dinner table, how again was an arrangement new to me. We sat thus

1. 2 1 I 2 Mrs Waterhouse, 2 I Waterhouse, 1. Henry Edw.
3 7 5 Samuel W.jr., 6 Edw. jr. / Mr Haigh; that is to say, 4 6 Mr W's I at the head of the table & the carving my confessing my incapacity to carve, took that Jol off my hands

Mr Waterhouse is a nice pleasant talkative woman, rather pretty, but looks a little consumptive: she kept me informed an infinite variation of about Edinburg, Newcastle, Dublin, York &c that I had not time to eat my fish. I then had a long chat with Mr John Waterhouse, we sat but a short time over our wine, we removed to the drawingroom, where coffee & tea was handed round. I conversed a long while with Mr Samuel W. & finally, whilst the lady sang & played the piano, I had a few words with Mr Samuel W. & Dinner was plain, Soup. fish. mock turtle; roast mutton, roast fowl & tongue, but two male servants attended. We left at 10. I well pleased. Mr Henry had gone up stairs, we followed his example. I read a long time "Tom Thumand a Tale"

Sunday 27 Dec. This was a comparatively quiet day. After breakfast Mr Henry & I walked. Mr Henry drove to Church. Mr Henry left me in a particular pew, where Mr John Waterhouse had his seat, but, there being a pillar intervening between the Clergyman & myself, it was utterly impossible for me to understand him. The old Church is a handsome building & was well filled. Mr John Waterhouse & I went away together: he spoke to Mr Norris, who walked with his sister, the pretty Margaret, Joseph's grandchild, whom I saw my stupidity did not recognise & introduce to his father's pew, Wellhead. Mr Waterhouse & I went afterwards home, his barometer & a number of scientific books. We, that is to say, he, his old father & mother and I dined together at 5. After dinner we had coffee. Mr Samuel Waterhouse & Mr John Waterhouse & I walked over the garden, entered the green houses &, talking another, and the night read, over the fields, returned to the Neal, here we have several times with old Mr & Mr Edwards & the two daughters, to all of whom I bade good bye. — In Craven Lodge, Mr Henry went again to Church. Mr Henry, Mr Wakefield & I adjourned to the Cabroom, where we were joined by Mr Frank Rawson, when we sitting & conversing, the time passed, Mr Wakefield is rather too ritualistic & prosy. Mr Henry called us to tea, Wakefield & Rawson left. Mr Henry wrote & read, I amused myself conversing with his amiable Lady. At 10 the Servants came in and knelt & read as well as Mr Henry & myself. Mr Henry read & then offered up an excellent evening prayer, after which all retired to Rest. I wrote some memoranda & read "10000 a year."

Monday 11 Dec. We breakfasted somewhat earlier than usually. It was a damp misty morning, quite different from the pleasant weather of yesterday afternoon. Young Percy, the Headmaster came and we conformed with him the arrangement yesterday made with his father. After breakfast I bade good bye to my amiable "patrona", she took me up stairs to the Nursery to kiss the four children, which I thought very friendly. I gave the Servants 10/. Mr Henry & I drove to Fir Nest to bid good bye to the Cranbornes, who had just gone to breakfast, I had just time to leave without seeing them, said farewell to Joseph & old Mr Edwards, the Daughters & Delia & to many an Irishman as Mr Clark & had gone by Rail Road to Manchester, miles off, merely for the purpose of shopping, & drove them to the Towersby Bridge Station, where we arrived at 10/. Mr Henry left me. The train did not come till 11, 20 minutes after its time. I took a first class seat and was steamed away. Owing to the very thick air, I saw very little of the country; the direct Coach Road from Halifax to Leeds is 16, by Rail 32 miles. I was told afterwards, that we had passed the Outskirts of Wakefield, which I did not observe. At Normanton the Railroad meets that from York to Leeds. In Leeds I entered an Omnibus and drove to Marlborough Hotel, where after my luggage had been delivered to me. I went directly in search of John Crenshaw, a young solicitor, son of old Mr Crenshaw, who had given me a letter of introduction to him. At his office in Bear Lane he was not, but his lady was, & as old Mr Crenshaw had already announced my probable arrival she received me in a particularly friendly manner & her husband being busy in one of the Courts, she very kindly offered to accompany me any where I wished to go to. She is rather thin, her features are sharp, & tho' she is not exactly plain, she is also far from being a beauty. We went to the parish Church, a pretty building with many handsomely painted windows, then to the market, well provided, but for the greater part the Stalls stand in the open air, neither covered over nor walled in. On our return to the office, Mr Crenshaw had just come in, he is a good looking young man, after a short delay he & Miss with me to show me the few Lions of Leeds. The Entrance to the Reading Room is pretty. Two flights of Steps, one from each side lead up to a Rotunda, resembling the Rotundas on both sides of the Thames Tunnel. We visited the Cloth Hall, a very large oblong building, without any pretension to architectural beauty. It is 187 yards long & about 100 broad, filled with small Stalls, of which there are 2640 odd, (from the manufacturers of (principally by hand looms woven) Cloth which the neighbouring villages lay out their fabrics in a rather unfinished State, and sell them to the merchants & great manufacturers, who give them the last finish. A Stall is worth from 9 to 10 £ a week, the owner's name & his residence are written. Tuesday is market day. Mr Crenshaw & I entered Miss Marshall's, found 2 ladies; Mr C. enquiring for Mr. Marshall begged him to allow us to go over his Lions thread Spinning, the answer given was, that they had made a rule not to show their factory to any one; consequently we had nothing else to do but to inchabriate & to look at the Gardener, which presents nothing particular. Their spinning manufactory is one of the most, if not the most extensive one in the whole kingdom; under one shed about 2 Acres of ground are covered with spinning jennies. This town like many English places near the west end, where the Streets are wider and the buildings more regular than in the Centre & to the Eastward. Crombelow took me to his dwelling house which stands in a pretty row of houses, with a green lawn before them. On entering his house, I was pleased & I may say, astonished at the comfortableness & neatness, which pervaded the whole & which shows, that he must live in fair circumstances.

His bedroom, whither I went to wash my hands, was quite comfortable. In the drawing room Mrs Crombelow appeared in a black velvet gown with "Dorcas" and looked better than in the morning. Dinner consisted of good roast beef Yorkshire pudding with currants, cheese, stock, Derby & port. Mr Crombelow is of course a Tory; in conversation pleasant, & seems to like Office for a short time; his wife, I observed, she then played the piano; in return I gained two games at Chess of them, I lost at 10, he accompanied me to the hotel & I went to my bedroom.

Tuesday 19 Dec. Boots called me ad ans early hour. I took a good breakfast: tea, cold tongue & fowl, at ab[ou]t 7h. I ordered the Omnibus, it was just dawning, the gaslamps were still burning. factories were lighted up from the first to the last Story; the weather continued misty; at the Railroad Station I seated myself comfortably in a first Class Coach & off we went. Of the surrounding land Country pl[ea]s[an]t diction.
I reached Hull, at about 10h we were in Hull, 55 miles distant. From the Omnibus Terminus I was took me to the Minerva Hotel, in front of the Shipping, with which the Docks are crowded. Docks took me to the Grand House of Messrs Williams Ward & C. Newcastle, for whom I had a Letter of Introduction from Gibbs Bright & Co. he was not in, but his Clerks delivered me two Letters from Capt Seymour & one from G.B. & Co with Samples of Sand & Pipes for "Richard Tennice". After having written a Letter to A. Gibbs & Sons, I walked about the Town, principally in the neighbourhood of the docks filled with Vessels of which some were loading, others unloading, & quays are lined with capacious sheds - large trucks with immense Bales, containing probably Twist, were moved about - other Trucks drawn from a Store into the Street - Steamers going in & out - passengers embarking - vessels building - in short every thing had the appearance of an active Trade, then I was told afterwards, that owing to the advanced Season and the consequent closure of the Northern ports by Ice, business is now on the Decrease. - I then to the Docks shewn a Letter with Letters of Shares; William M's Shares is inscribed in another Book, called Share Sale, which is filled with Stalls, upon which all kinds of provisions, also shoes, books, old books &c are offered for Sale. - I bought some books to amuse myself with on my passage to Altona. I returned to Ward's Counting House. Mr Ward having gone to Change, one of his Clerks went with me; we met him on the road. he was very friendly, returned with me, took me to the very small Exchange & read Rooms & accompanied me all over a great part of the Town. He told me, that the present Docks are not sufficiently large & that the digging of a new one is on the "Tapis". The Docks, the Quays & a little Garden cap the Hill, which falls with the Quays, form an Island, upon which part of the Town stands, which part by means of bridges is connected with the the others not visible. By & bye an interesting Conversation was commenced & carried on between a Mr Behrens, a pleasant german Jew from Bradford, relation of Mr Behrens Correspondents & Mr Behrens Son of Mannheim, who speaks french very fluently, & a frenchman, who calls himself Baron Maurice, & who can just make himself understood in English, on the subjects of Napoleon, Wellington, Rey, politics &c. — At 12 o'Clock we went to Bed. each to his berth, a Mr Liefson has his berth over mine —

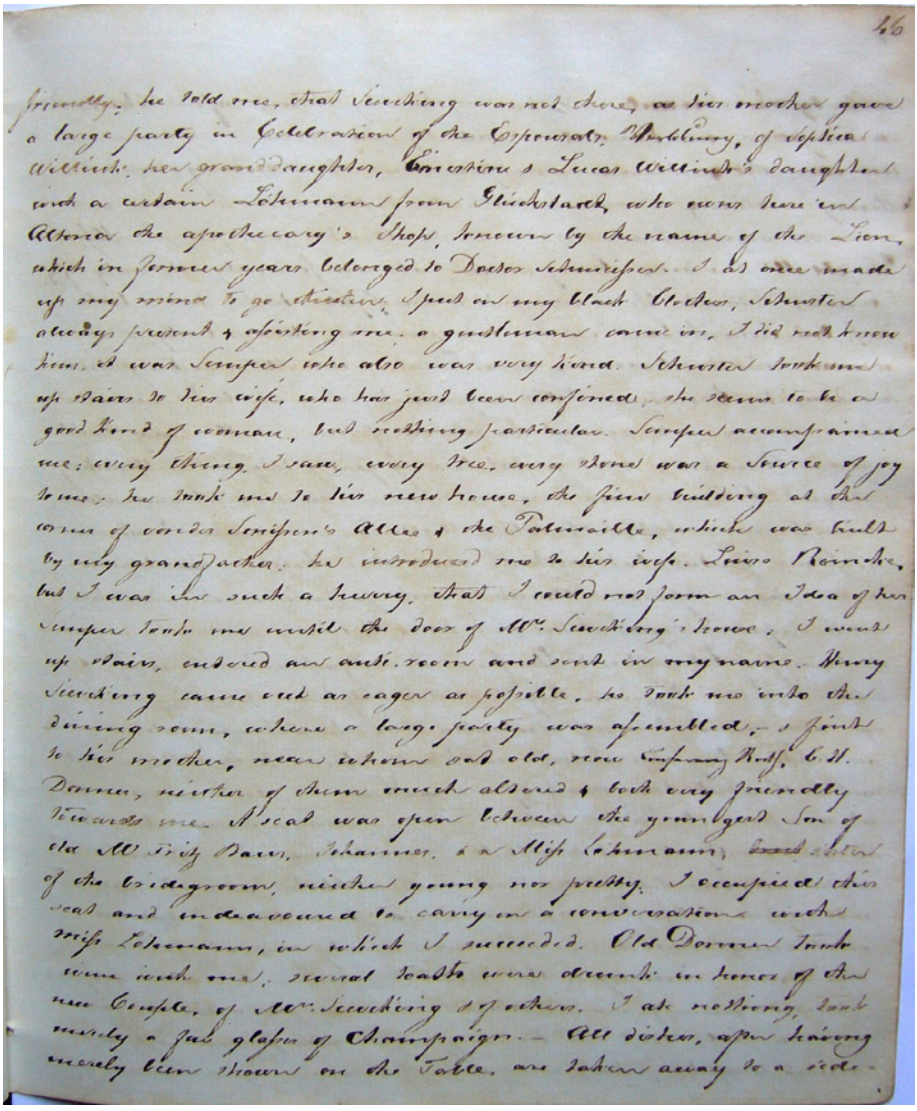
Wednesday 28 Dec. I passed a very good night without the slightest indication of sea sickness. I rose at about 7, we breakfasted, I walked the deck & conversed with one of the passengers, Seemann, afterwards with Behrens, from whom I also gained various general details, no ship news being on board. We dined at ½ past 2 Baron taking the head of the table: from 5 to 8, we, viz: Behrens, the frenchman, who is pleasant enough, but of course much addicted to Paris, the amiability of the french ladies, the excellent qualities of the Paris Grisettes &c, a Mr Dienedorf, a Jew, understood to be of house in Berlin & myself, played at whist: the other passengers are a young Englishman, Pearson, who is in Hamburg at the Board & house of Langmaid & Pickett, and speaks German pretty fairly, and Pierson, who travels for a Bradford house. — At 8 we took tea & conversing, the time passed very pleasantly till midnight.



Thursday 29 Dec. We breakfasted at 9. when I found we had already passed Heligoland without seeing it: — the same as yesterday, the sea was smooth, the steamer's motion trifling, the wind, there was, favorable. We soon passed a few ships, perceived at a number of ships at anchor waiting for a fair wind, we took in a pilot, we left to our right Norderoog, to the low coast adjacent Eastward, a steeple embowered friendly; he told me, that Sievking was not there, as his mother gave a large party in Celebration of the Espousals Pardeburg, of Sophia Wilhelmi, her granddaughter, Emanuel's Lucas Wilhelm's daughter and with a certain Lehmann from Glückstadt, who now live in Altona the apothecary's Shop, known by the name of the Lion, which in former years belonged to Doctor Schmidtpeter. I at once made up my mind to go thither, I put on my black Clothes, Schuster always present & assisting me. a gentleman came in, I did not know him it was Semper who also was very kind. Schuster took me up Stairs to his wife, who has just been confined, she seem to be a good kind of woman, but nothing particular. Semper accompanied me: every thing, I saw, every tree, every stone was a source of joy to me; he took me to his new house, the first building at the corner of corder Semper's Allee & the Dalmaille, which was built by my grandfather. he introduced me to his wife. Luise Reinke, but I was in such a hurry, that I could not form an Idea of her. Semper took me until the door of Mr. Sievking's house, I went up Stairs, entered an anti-room and sent in my name. Henry Sievking came out as eager as possible, he took me into the dining room, where a large party was assembled, - I first to his mother, near whom sat old, now Professor Rud. C. H. Donner, neither of them much altered & both very friendly towards me. Next was open between the grown-up Son of old Mr Fritz Parr, Schanner, & Miss Lehmann, sister of the Bridegroom, neither young nor pretty. I occupied this seat and endeavoured to carry on a conversation with Miss Lehmann, in which I succeeded. Old Donner took some with me, several toasts were drunk in honor of the new Couple, of Mr. Sievking & others. I ate nothing, took merely a few glasses of Champaign. - All dishes, after having merely been shown on the Table, are taken away to a side-

Doctor Gabison, a particular friend of Lehmann's, architect Hansen, Miss Augusta Baur, the only unmarried daughter of Fritz Baur's, and a few more, amongst whom I must still make mention of old Stubbmann the widower, partner of Liebes & Co, & lastly also of Theodore Reinecke in the concern of M. Matthiessen & Co. I went home with Siemssing & his wife to his house, after it was early, a little past 10, they went soon to their bedroom & I was shown to mine, where I arranged my Trunks before going to Bed. –

Friday 22nd Dec. Siemssing lives at the End of the Palmaille on the North side opposite the garden, which belonged formerly to president, Count Blücher being pounded to him by the Town, and which during my absence he has sold to the rich jew Trompeldor of Hamburg, who has died of late. – Siemssing's house is small, below he has only three rooms: the sitting room towards the Street, with – the dining room towards the yard & garden without carpet – and a small paper room, adjoining the dining room, arranged for me. it is well furnished with stoves carpets – one story high are the bed rooms. – I rose a little before eight at candle light, and went to the sitting room where we breakfasted, merely coffee & bread & butter. – This by the bye is the general Custom & also nearly every where at 11 or 12 o' Clock a second more substantial breakfast or lunch is taken. – The usual dinner hour is 3 or 4. when large dinner parties are given, the guests generally assemble at 5. in a few houses at 5½ – Mr. Siemssing is jolly & amiable. Henry is grown old. he is very fond of his wife & very kind towards me. They have 4 Children, Heinrich Eng. plain and least agreeable, Johannes, Peter & Anna, nice little Children, and Carl who is now settling & looks sickly. None of the family is strong. There is also a kind of companion or assistant, without whom no lady, apparently, can be, called Sophie Petersen, a good kind of young woman. –

a genteel & chaste Style, with a fine view over the Elb, and each with a garden, are inhabited by Consul Bleicher. Altona, the lawyer Stubelmann, the Commissionair Stubelmann, M. Forbes, partner of Magnus & Forbes, with his mother in law, a Mrs Davidson, Consul Hillebrandt married to a daughter of Mr Fritz Baur. Mr. Jorge Baur partner of his father Fritz, old Mr. Siemsing and Mr. Bernhard Donner, his father's partner. The Rent they pay, is from Bf 1800 to 1900 annually. — At Siemsing's I dined a plain dinner, very different from those at Mr Henry Edwards', not even a Servant girl attended. — Afterwards I called on the two Misses Finch, the Sisters and Betty the aunt, who was with Lizzy after my sister Betty's death, has not altered much, but grown the sister of Mrs in Co Bay, who maintains her, from a young girl, when I left, is grown a young woman of about 36 years of age with fine red cheeks & pleasant enough, but not handsome. Thence I went to Siemsing & Schroder's Counting house; they have no body to assist them except a kind of porter, Jan Kunst, who runs errands, even the copying of letters, not with a machine, but with the pen, they do themselves. I received a letter from Gibb with Invoice of goods shipt p R Francis, on which the charges come enormously high: on some articles they amount to 20 %! I went to Krauers, who had invited me, both he & she were very friendly, she immediately called me Willy, she took me in the bedrooms of her Children, to see the little ones, who were asleep; her grown up Children are: George, the eldest, a fine young fellow at Wandelly's, or Clarenhorst Brother's Counting house, William at Magnus & Forbes's — Maria, an extremely nice girl, of about 15, very tall & stout for her age, not yet confirmed — and Emily, a little younger, said to be more clever than Maria. Lilly, whom I have already seen at old Reinecke's, of course grown older, but not much altered — Younger Stubelmann, — Wandelly & was joined by, also Edward Reinecke, but he left again, to celebrate his sister in law's Namensfest, Gertrudy. We played all night till half past nine, when we sat down to supper: I near Emily, Herman & Julchen and the Sophus. I left at about 11 well pleased with the extreme kindness and the "bonhomie" of all, but feeling a little the want of English gentility & elegance. Mr Kraemer showed me the small needle Case, which I have made her a present of on 19 March 1820. I was pleased at her having preserved it so many years.

Saturday 23d Dec. After having visited myself and opening a trunk of mine in Siewking's house, and which existing in the Ohlhouse I drove in an Omnibus to Hamburg. I alighted at the End of the two "Dammthore" two dirty ancient looking streets with an over abundant jewish population, on the left side the "Jungfernstieg" town off. I followed this equally unexciting looking street until I reached Feldmann Bohl & Co's house in the "Neuen Wallen." I had to deliver to them a letter from A. Gibbs Sons, and to one of them Claude a son of the late G.H. Gibbs a letter from his brother in the London House. Both Gibbs & Bohl are pleasant men; with the latter I conversed some time, but from his expressions, when I bade good by, I draw the Conclusion, that there is no probability of my drawing any advantage from this acquaintance in a social view.

I walked to the Esplanade, a to me new Street, which did not strike me as so handsome, as I thought it would. It is true it is wide & the houses are high, large & decorated, but the middle is taken up by a number of small shops, which completely spoils the appearance. I learned several days after, that these shops are merely temporary, that they were erected after the great fire in May 1842 and that they will be taken down as soon as the houses, for their present inhabitants to live in, are finished. Daniel Schmette lives here, but I did

Sunday 24 Dec. Christmas Eve. Immediately after breakfast Sarah and I arranged the presents, which I intended to make; after having dressed I was just on the point of starting, when I was detained some time by the two young Donners, Richard & Julie, who complained of their Mother Hesbeck. - I went away with them, made a round of visits: first to Semper, who lives in the Palmaille at the corner of the Semper's Allee in the first large house built by my grandfather, as far as I can see, he has it well, finely & pleasantly furnished. He himself, Mr Semper, who is in the family way & Mr Marshall were busy arranging the Christmas presents in a large saloon upstairs, after some time he took me down stairs to his small but comfortable drawing room (Mezzotints). When I left, lunch was brought in. I passed thro' his garden, which opens into the Semper's Allee. - In the Elbstraße I called upon H. Claussenius & Otto Heyne, who live together in the house, which belongs to the old Heyne, mistress was in, but Mr Claussenius was also occupied with the Christmas presents. She is pleasant enough, but much altered; she has in her face a somewhat stern touch. After a short, not disagreable Conversation I continued my rounds: at Dr Donner's, who was not in, I left my Card; the same I did at old Professor's, my former fellow Clerk at Donner & Conrad Donner's, H. Donner's Son. Old Christiane Baur was in: she is a rich old lady, who is very charitable, and lives stylishly in a large house in the Palmaille she is nearly 70, which age she does not show; she was busy writing invitations for the 6 January. on my return home I found one - Bernhard Donner was likewise gone out, but lawyer Stahlmann was there very friendly in his Study. I was home at 1½: we dined early and at 4 o'Clock went to old Pastor Remeke, where the whole family, daughters & Sons in law & their daughters in law and the grand children were assembled. Below we were ushered into two Rooms up stairs in the Saloon all the presents were laid out: Wilhelmine Remeke, the youngest daughter, unmarried, her age. I believe, not far from 30, - who is a nice and extremely rational girl, had arranged every thing very politely. The joy of the Children was of course very great. Steinberg had then a basket brought in with my presents, which were inspected, & distributed as follows: 2 Oeyer paintings very handsome, for Mr Tempest

2 Silver, plated pens. Lion " Mrs Wandesley 1 Cigar Case of Straw " Mr d°

1 small China crape Shawl " Mrs H. Steinberg 1 pair of gloves made by the Indians " d°

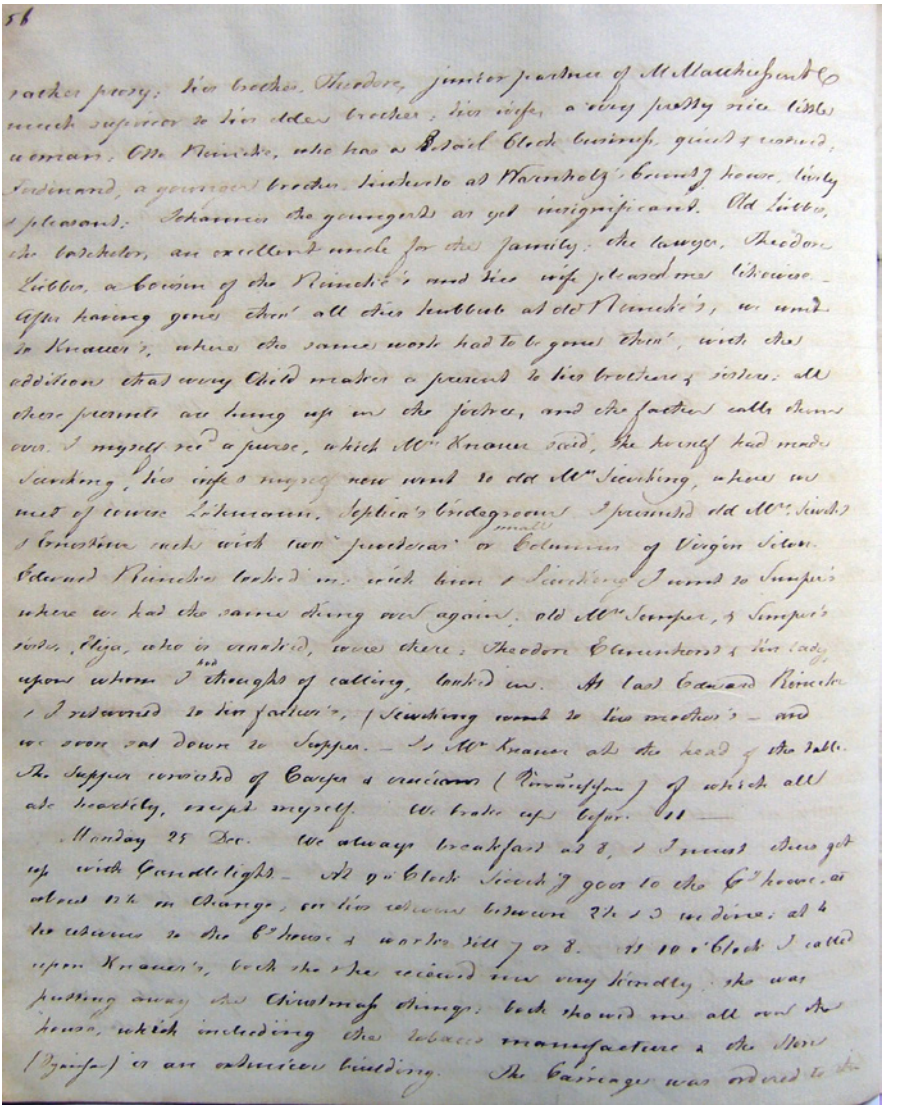
1 small China Crape Shawl " Mrs Reinhold



1 large beautiful Scarlet ush Crape Shawl for Mrs Knauer

1 Cigar Case " Mr Knauer

1 d° " Edw Reinhold

I believe, all were pleased with my having remembered them. The Shawls particularly Mrs Knauer's were of course most admired. — Mrs Knauer was undoubtedly a little "endormida" and when she gave me Chamber's book hands and me, it seemed as if she had not forgotten old Times. I conversed with her about reading, foreign languages &c and she herself confessed to me that her extensive household hardly leaves her time to attend to those pursuits in accomplishments. Riding, she has made no progress, rather the contrary, since I left Altona; however I feel for her some real friendship. She corresponds of my youthful "penchant" When my presents were distributed, a loud cry "Lieber" followed in the same manner — I may as well observe, that the sons & daughters, sons & brothers in law call themselves all: "Lieber", even & then as husband makes as shy a face to his wife & I ever saw, that Wandesley gave Mrs Knauer a kiss on her forehead. They seem all to be happy & satisfied: but a little more gentility in the housekeeping affairs & a little more outward display would not come amiss to the ladies. Mrs Henry Scarth undoubtedly the gentlest. Knauer is good natured, very fond of his wife & children, of his garden & flowers, but a little coarse. Tempest is undoubtedly the cleverest of them all: Steinberg the most limited: Reinhold very good natured, but rather pretty: his brother Theodore, junior partner of Mr Mackintosh & much superior to his elder brother: his wife a very pretty nice lady woman: Mr Reinicke, who has a Retail Cloth business, grand & varied: Ferdinand, a youngest brother, lives at Warendorf's friend's house, lively & pleasant: Johannes the youngest as yet insignificant. Old Libbe, the bachelor, an excellent uncle for the family: the lawyer, Theodore Libbe, a cousin of the Reinicke's and his wife pleased me likewise. After having gone thro' all this bustle at old Reinicke's, we went to Knauer's, where the same work had to be gone thro', with the additions that every Child makes a present to his brothers & sisters: all these presents are hung up on the festive, and the parties walk them over. I myself got a purse, which Mr Knauer said, the servants had made. Sandberg, his wife & myself now went to old Mr Sandberg, where we met of course Lieutenant Sophia's bridegroom. I presented old Mr Sandberg & Christine each with two "Jungfernzar" or Columnen of Virgin Silver. Eduard Reinicke took me with him & Sandberg I went to Semper's where we had the same thing over again: old Mr Semper, & Semper's sister, Olga, who is married, were there: Theodor Clemmensen & his lady upon whom I thought of calling, looked in. At last Eduard Reinicke & I returned to his father's, & Sandberg went to his mother's — and we soon sat down to Supper. — Mr Knauer at the head of the table. The Supper consisted of Carps & various (Verschiedene) of which all ate heartily, except myself. We broke up before 11 —

Monday 28 Dec. We always breakfast at 8, & I must then get up with Candlelight — At 9 o'Clock Sandberg goes to the Custom house, at about 11 h in Change, or his leisure between 2 h & 3 we dine: at 4 he returns to the Custom house & works till 7 or 8. At 10 o'Clock I called upon Knauer's, both she & he received me very kindly, she was putting away the Christmas things: both showed me all over the house, which including the tobacco manufactory & the store (Packhaus) is an extensive building. The Carriage was ordered to der Knauer's I mounded, he formerly drove off in wind thro' the Allsprofs dem thro' the Gate, over the Wall, called the Finns Weg, & turning to the left, without entering Hamburg, which left to the right, we passed thro' various avenues with pretty country houses here & there, then thro' Hohenhende & alighted first at the Country house of David Knauer the Landlord, where we admired the splendid orangeries in the hot house, further on to Eppendorf, to Knauer's own extensive Country house, he showed me all over the same, it is very commodiously arranged We walked thro' the gardens, close to the river Alster, entered the Fishhouse, Knauer's pride & pleasure and after having examined every thing very leisurely, we walked to the Country house of old Mr Knauer which being locked up, we had to content ourselves with a walk thro' the garden. Finally we looked in at Knauer's youngest brother's, Henry, a widower & partner in the Tobacco business, here we had a good lunch, & in three drove back to Altona. Sieveking, his family & myself dined at old Mr Sieveking's with Lehmann & without Countesse, who was not visible. Mr S is getting old, and Sophia & Caroline are ja good lively Sieveking Lehmann & I had after dinner a rather interesting conversation until 5 Th, when I had to go to old Mr Clemenhorst's, here once more the Christmas presents were distributed. The following were there: Wandrolly & his wife, Theodor Clemenhorst, his wife & 3 children Malvine & Fr Clemenhorst's young daughter, and Asthaus, the apothecary Siemsen, formerly married to Therese Clemenhorst, with his present wife Clara, formerly a companion to his daughter by 1st Mm Therese old Mr Clemenhorst — her sister, Gretchen, who is not to be recognized: she has grown real old, grey, deaf & without teeth. After the presents were distributed, Malvine & Therese played the piano, — then the four Cousins danced, Mr Constance Clemenhorst playing. — we had tea. I played Schenk Gratiosch with one, then Whist with another party.

At supper I sat between Mr Clemenhorst & Gretchen Sommer, ate

Tuesday 26 Dec. The weather continues mild but thick, the streets extremely dirty, the new Cathedr. nearly asleep. Soon after breakfast I walked to Hamburg. Turning to the right I found out in the Dammthorstrasse old Mr Gräfel, who has now an Employ in the Alster except his having lost his teeth, he is not much altered. He gave me an account of his children: Julius is married in Danzig in Scotland, Oscar a Farmer in Illinois; Christian a lawyer in the neighbourhood of Hamburg. Adolf, apothecary in Flensburg, married to a Christian, doing very well: his sister Susan is with them. Hans & Henriette both married to Rudorff. Jammes in the Western territory in the U.S. Then I went to Daniel Schmidt's in the Esplanade, with whom I had a very long conversation about a thousand things, Marie, Jean, Auguste, Cadenal, business &c. Time slipt away so fast, that I had to take a Droschka, which just met Dean at Sieveking's house. We dined immediately, at 6 I went to old Mr Jean Dennis, who is still pretty good looking, the German, that speaks, there his little daughter. We saw also Mr Jean the husband of the father, Jean who is married to a Stolzenburg, whose father has just been dead, & Conrad married to a Silvester, a pleasant young man. Mr Jette Jessig, born Rode, whose husband has abandoned her, who lives in the Neuenwege. I did not find at home. I now took a walk of about half an hour thro' the dirty, badly lighted & altogether gloomy Neustadt, looking round, & at about 9 visited old Reinicke's house, in the winter months the family assemble here every Tuesday Evening. It struck me as rather strange, to see all the young women, with Emily at the head, on the sopha, sitting round the table & knitting & gossiping. Some gentlemen played L'hombre, others Whist, I took Mr Kemper up here to supper, on my left I had next Mr Knauer, who told me amongst other things: [illegible]

Charles Repey has written of his Journey to Italy & which is rather interesting.

Thursday 28 Dec 1843. After breakfast I walked out to Klein. Hetzbeck, where the two Sons of Cristoval Alvarez of Lima, Ricardo & Cristoval, are in school at a Doctor Granau's. The walk thither is extremely pleasant: the country is hilly & the view to the left over the Elb is beautiful. The high road, it is true, is at present rather dirty, however workmen, who are busy breaking stones, are repairing the same: it runs nearly straight from East to West, especially on the Southern side it is lined with a great number of very handsome country houses almost without any exception, while Mirrored Greenhouses, which with their woody gardens interspersed with laurels, have quite an English park-like appearance. Behind the houses, generally flats covered, the ground, laid out in gardens, gradually slopes down to the banks of the Elb, from which a view, further on, shows the villages of Neumühlen or Övdgörnen, the gardens are merely separated by a narrow sandy beach, covered more or less by the water according to the rise of the Sea. For more than an English mile & a half [illegible] Altona close to the Beach the two just named villages extend: they are inhabited by mostly fishermen & pilots & their wives & there gentlemen's houses also appear: the number of these latter is now decidedly on the increase, which I observed when I returned that way: the fishermen's houses look clean and are painted with tasty Colors, frequently with green. The Elb itself is a splendid wide river notwithstanding its low Course & its yellow Colour: to day it was animated by a few large, many smaller vessels and several steam boats. The Hanseatic Store is not clearly distinguishable, but in the foreground woods, houses, here & there a steeple, a mill, behind some gently ascending hills, covered with the so called Wilhelmsburg woods, offer a charming prospect, and to day I felt more inclined than ever to spend here the remainder of my Days. Also on the right hand or Nol. III side of the road countryhouses are built, but as from their windows there is no view upon the river, they are less frequented than on the other side. — I walked, and stept and admired and walked on again and meditated, and thus ere I thought of it, I had reached Einfeldt-Bridge (the Deichs Bridge) about 3 English miles distant from Altona. Here the road which as far as here has run considerably higher than and at a distance from the Elb, descends gradually and skirts the river, which forms a small bight, where various crafts of small dimensions were drawn high & dry upon the beach. A small rivulet, over which the little bridge is built, falls into the river and a few ducks were quacking on the same; on the inner or right side some country like looking houses are built, and notwithstanding the windy season and the coolish air I felt little imagination is required to paint to oneself the beauty of the scenery in a sunny summers day. On the other side of Einfeldt Bridge the road re-ascends and passing thro' the village of Dienstädten & Teufelsbrücken leads to that of Blankenese. I returned from the bridge and after having walked a short distance I took the first turn to the left thro' a dirty lane, to my left I had now the so called "Nienbeck wood", in reality a handsome park, filled with stately Oaks & other Trees, it is now the property of Senator Heinrich of Hamburg, the eldest son of the late rich Mr. J. Heinrich, before I left Altona, it belonged to Baron Voigt and then it was open to the public, but now it is so only in part. — To the right of the lane stands the country house, which in former times was rented by my grand. aunt, Mr. Bernhard, and where all my family as well as myself have spent many a pleasant, tho occasionally also a tedious hour. Passing my dirty lane, I soon reached Klein Nienbeck, where during my absence many new houses have

Tuesday 21 January. The whole morning I was occupied removing my friends, took dr. from Henry Siversking's to Rainville's. The two rooms which I have hired, are prettily furnished. The sitting room with a beautiful view over the gardens towards the Elb and the opposite Hannoverian shore, has a carpet, handsome mahagony tables chairs & Sopha, the bedroom looks towards the yard, is not unpleasant, but otherwise quite convenient. The sitting room has curtains and rosbrands in abundance. I called upon old Mr Siversking, to enquire after the health of Caroline & Sophia Wilhelmi, whilst we were still talking over last night's ball, Christian entered with the "Telegraph" Fähler, the girls left, but I was requested to stay, in order to carry a message to Henry Siversking, saying he knew, that Jenny had been Count Platen in the subject of Lucas Wellink in Norway, and that they two had agreed, that without loss of time a petition should be addressed to the King and handed in to the Count, praying the Government, to grant Wellink a pension, which has become vacant in the Altona Post Office. This message I immediately delivered to Henry in his Count's house, who promised to go to morrow morning to lawyer Buhlmann, order to draw out the petition in Lucas Name. The remainder of the evening I spent at old Mr Reinecke's with the whole family, in a quiet manner. Knaur & Semper were warding the latter has too much to do, as Railroad Director. I had none of the ladies to Supper, but had my seat quite at the bottom of the table near Wilhelmine, who is a pleasant, good natured girl with much common Sense.

Wednesday 22 January. I continued removing in the course of the morning. I called upon the two Messrs Terck & Mr Schwab, the former master, who agreed to give me one lesson a week. At 5 o'clock I went to dine at Wamsley's, we had an plain, but very nice dinner, consisting of excellent fish, venison, veal and good wine, particularly Champaign. Cigars in abundance. The following sat down to dinner: Warnholz, who a pleasant, amusing kind man, to his right: Mr Hannemann, a very stout, in my opinion, rather coarse woman, she talks a great deal & is said to have much common sense — then Otto Niemeyer — an envoy Chair for Otto Niemeyer, who was busy in his capacity as "Armen-pfleger" — Jean Donner, rather quiet — Mr Warnholz, the same, — Mr Hannemann, the brother of Mr Hannemann, a pleasant man, he has bought large tracts of land near the Schuylkill on speculation, which has richenda fanciful and a rattling to Dutilleux, — Mrs Forsyth, a lady who pleases me: she knows that her husband's affairs prosper; nevertheless she is kind, affable & agreeable — myself — and Mr Hannemann, Hannemann Steinmetz, an unassuming, agreeable, rather jolly woman. The conversation during dinner was lively enough. after dinner I had to follow the gentlemen to the smoking-room, and I left at 8½, when I drove in an Omnibus to Hamburg. I alighted in the "Jungfernstieg" and had to grope my way through a morass of mud to 32 Dammthorstr., where Albert Schmidt lives. I met at his lodgings a certain Torrygaud, manager of Lewis & Co, and Kreft, successor of Feldbergermann. They played whist with a dummy. I took a hand, afterwards Mench, an old acquaintance from my younger years & Adolph Müller, Schmidt's partner, joined us. — we had an excellent cold Supper, lots of Champaigne & a good deal of lively conversation; Schmidt notwithstanding his unfortunate business, has a very good humour, & when I broke up at 12½, there was not one, who would not willingly have staid a little longer. I was much mortified, to find that D Kramer had been waiting for me, instantly I went to bed, with rather more Champagne in my belly, than I ought to have taken, due' guide selves.

Thursday 23 January. I rose at about 8 o' Clock and after having breakfasted with Nelly, who is really a very good natured woman, I went in search of a M' Bastiani, an Italian master, who lives in the Gurlitt Str. ove St Georg, the deaf & mute in this trade wonde beyond conception, id is now drawing, and Hamburg is in a dreadful mess, owing to a great measure to the clay & brick dust, caused by the many buildings. Not finding him at home I went to look for him in the Coffee house called the "Alster Hall, on the Neuer Jungfernstieg" but was much annoyed, that he had no leisure, to give me a single lesson. On my Return, Nelly & I went to Hagedorn's Shop and purchased a silk dress for Elizabeth Delaney, after which I walked back to Altona, but instead of taking the straight road, I turned more to the right & visited the town thro' the Gartenstrasse, in this neighbourhood, many new houses & fine streets have been built of late years. I found out a certain M' Dirk, a Dane, who agreed to give me three Danish Lessons a week, at 1 Rbd Lesson. I then looked in at Miss Schlüter's, who was not at home, and at M' Henry Sieveking's, who is always equally kind, friendly & amiable. I forthwith settling every thing in order at Rainville's and at 5 went with M' & M' Henry Sieveking to Henry Parish's. Here the following sat down to Dinner: Henry Parish, who, tho' Senator, is an extremely boyish looking man. his lady, born Washington, a very sickly, but amiable Hamburg woman. they have no Children. M' & M' Fritz Parish, tho' 24 years of age, is still very talkative, and pleasant in conversation; he is friendly opposed to the Radsteam engines, which gradually spring up on Altona.— die with, completely paralytic, is carried over the street in a Sedan Chair, and about in the house in an armchair, she is completely incapable of moving. — a Miss Wattenbach, sister of Mr Henry Dann, — a Miss Lempfert, sister of the lawyer of the same name — a Mrs Dankert, an elderly Lady, mother of Mr Fischer, — of these three ladies I have had no opportunity of forming an Idea. — Miss Auguste and Master Johannes Dann, the former somewhat plain, but good natured the second, uncommonly intelligent; — a Mr Wichers, formerly in van der Smissen's house, now employed at the rail road; — Senator, now "Justizrath" Fabricius with the stiff neck, — & old Mr Reimarus, in former years, Secretary's master. I sat between Miss Auguste Dann to my right & Mr Henry Dann to my left; with the latter I conversed a great deal, also with Mr & Dann & Mr Reimarus on the Subject of the so called french Times. After dinner we went as usually to the smoking room to my great annoyance, where whist, whilst Cards were played at one Table, and Tea was handed round, I conversed again with Mr Henry Dann, giving her some account of life in Texas. At about 9½ I left with kindest and warmest for the first time to sleep at my new lodgings at Racinelli's.

The bar was lighted, & before going to bed, I read the trial of Dr Cheetham, better known by the Name of "Peter Pindar" for Libel in the year 1807, in which he was found "Not guilty." Friday 26 January. I rose at 7h, my breakfast consisted as it consists henceforward, merely of tea and bread & butter.
Sievking called upon me for a moment, and the whole morning till past 1h, I was busy copying my diary, which for some time last I have merely written in rough. I then went with Steinberg to the Hamburg Exchange, where I spoke with Knauer (Jacob) about his journey to me with wine, and von Leeser, who told me, that Lange of Altona had been interested in his unfortunate emigrant. of Rees to Lima, that this Lange now refused to make good to them their Share of the Surplus of Expenses, which v. Leeser has made good to 96 & Co.s that he, von Leeser, has now placed this business in the hands of Koppel, the lawyer, to whom he requested me to give any details or information, he might require. At old M.r Rumke's earnest recommendation I purchased a pair of spectacles at Jabori's, which I put on, returned with Steinberg to Altona and at 2 went with them to his wife. There I dined in a plain good manner with old M.rs Steinberg, Ernestine, her two daughter, Auguste Baur, Johnann's Miss Adelaide Steinberg, - after dinner old M.rs Steinberg invited the girls to teach me the new waltz, the Jagern, but it did not succeed. I went to my lodgings at 5 & have now been writing, which I continued doing the whole evening until 11 o'clock, when I amused myself an hour or two with reading D. Schleiden's interesting acc.t of the great fire in Hamburg from 5 to 8 May 1842.

Saturday 17 January. M.r Dick gave me his first Pianoforte lesson from past 9 till nearly 10, he appears to be a very good kind of man; when he was gone, I had my breakfast, Tea and bread & butter, after which I wrote a long letter to M.r Trautoff till near 1 o' Clock, when I dressed, called upon Steinberg & his wife, who received me always with unaltered kindness and drove in an Omnibus to Krambe in Hamburg, at whose house the following dinner party assembled in honor of Löpmann & Sophia Wellenk, their one of course, Caroline & their mother Ernestine. I try hard to converse with the two girls, but they are too quiet, particularly

Caroline, Lehmann appears to me well instructed, Mr & Mrs Andr Ords (formerly Miss Emily Kendall) Mr & Mrs Mahnicke (formerly Miss Lotte Zeller) I sat at dinner between these two ladies, the latter to my right and conversed with them a great deal, most with Mrs Mahnicke, they are agreable, & talkative enough, but a little more beauty would not come amiss to Mr Mahnicke. her husband is an agreable man, a Mr von Bevelet (his wife, a Mr Rentzoff, a Mrs Amsinck and finally John Alsena Fischer (Hayné & partner) with his wife & her mother, a Mr Dankwart: with him I talked a great deal and he invited me to spend some Evening at his house. The dinner was not so abundant as usually in Alsena parties, but very good. Coffee, the smoking room & tea followed each other in due rotation the Hamburg gentlemen sat down at Cards: we Alsena people left between 9 & 10. I walked home to Rainville. —

Sunday 21 January. In my lodgings I was occupied writing till 11 o'Clock, when I dressed and started to pay visits: I only got thro' with a few of them. I called upon Heinrich Siemsen & his wife, then upon Theodor Reincke & his pretty wife Dorothée Hamburg: here I had to take luncheon, Otto & Edward Reincke, and a Capt Christensen, an engineer, who is employed at the railroad, were there and thus by various Conversation I was detained much longer than I had intended. Thence I called upon old Mr Clemenhorst with whom I left for perusal an old club book of the year 1796 members of which Club had been my father & mother, Isaac Wells wife, Clemenhorst & Miss Donner (Emma, now old Mrs Clemenhorst) & Donner & others. Wanckel, Th Clemenhorst & wife and various grandchildren of Mr Clemenhorst were here. Th Clemenhorst I found Mr A at home: she pleases me better than she did on Wednesday last. she is a clever strong minded woman, but her first education has been neglected a little. When I told her, that my father & mother had lived in her house many years ago, she was to send, to show me all over the house, & of course I recollected many of the arrangements in my parents' times. At Semper's I found him & his wife sitting quietly near each other, she working, he reading. It was now time for me, to walk to Kramer's in Hamburg, with whom I drove to Kirchner's in Wandsbeck, a good turnpike road (chaussée) now leads thither, in former times men's heads had to wade thro' ankle deep Sand. The Country is very level, & affords no picturesque views the road leads thro' the Steinthor and then thro' the suburb St Georg, but also, after leaving the same, rows of houses continues more or less the whole distance until Wandsbeck which belongs to Holstein and is now filled with Hamburghers, who have taken refuge there after the fire. St Louis are a palace like, belonging to the family of Schimmelmann and a surrounding handsome wood. We were guide by ourselves at Kirchner's & of course every thing was plain & without any Ceremony. We had dinner, coffee, plenty of conversation, tea and drove back to Hamburg. Mrs Kirchner, formerly Malchen Hancke, has been very good looking, of which some vestiges still remain. she is good & amiable, but has a tremendously broad Hamburg pronunciation. the Kelly Kramer & others make also use of many queer, and extraordinarily German expressions, as for instance: Fürsprechen?

Monday 29 January. Arose at 7 o'Clock and after having breakfasted, I left at an early hour for Altona. I lost the whole morning paying visits, to Edward & Wilhelmine Reinecke, which latter a most estimable, agreeable, & by no means plain, thô neither very handsome, young lady, begged me, not to be angry with her brother Hermann, because he has established himself with Lembke; of course I replied, that I did not think of such a thing. To old Mrs Semper & her not young unmarried daughter Olga, whom I do not much admire, there is something sour in their expression. to Professor Francis, with whom I made my arrangement for two Latin lessons weekly, & to old Miss Schleu when I came home. I was busy & not quite a mon aise. I read a small french Novel "Mise" Brun par Madame Charles Reybaud and after having dined at home, the first time, and slept a Siesta, I got round by 1 hye, and was busy till near 2 o' Clock, endeavouring to understand Virgil's Aeneas, which gave me much Trouble. The weather was bad it rained & blew hard.

Tuesday 30 January. From 8-9 I had as my lodgings a Danish Lesson from Mr Bjerk. from 10-11 I took my first french lesson at Mr Schmidt's. Since then until now near 3 o' Clock. I have been finishing my letter to Mr Grandjean & been writing the preceding. The weather continues bad, rainy & cloudy, the the thermometer in my bed room does not stand above 67° Fahrenh.
Notwithstanding the unfavorable season, I have a beautiful view from my sitting room: the large masses of drift-ice floating up & down the river, and the small boats finding their way thro the middles of these masses no one can look at for a long time. without getting tired. I dined at home, occupied myself under writing & reading, which being my usual occupat: when by myself. I shall not repeat [illegible], I always went to old Reinicke's, where as usually the whole family except Theodore, who was busy in some meeting regard the railroad, was assembled. Anaeus was again there. on Saturday night he had returned from his Holstein visit: as supper I sat between him & Semper. Shortly after arrival I hailed on my return home, just before I turned into Reinicke's gateway. I saw suddenly a vivid bluish light before me. I was still considering, what it might be when a Clap of Thunder made it manifest, that it had been lightning.

Wednesday 31 January. I continue taking my daily lesson from Mr Dirk, three times a week, from 8 to 9 o'Clock in the morning. To day I also took my first Latin lesson from professor Franken from 1 to 2 o'Clock in his own house, which was very agreable. I read & translated Virgil's Aeneis & understood it pretty well. At 4 I went with an Omnibus to Kramers in Hamburg, with whom I drove to Kirchenberg's, who gave the party in my honor, rather a large party company assembled. I cannot recollect all who were present. There were Frederici & his wife from Altona, Justiz Gerstäcker & wife, a Mr Forbes of the late firm of Meyer & Forbes, a Mr Vivanco, spanish Consul & his wife, &c. The dinner was good, but not so abundant as in the first rate Altona houses, where I have dined: we had no Champaign. I led to dinner Mrs Frederici, next to her her husband sat, both with her, a pleasant, tho' plain woman, and him, a clever man. I conversed in a very animated manner, to my left sat Mrs Vivanco, a woman, who has still the vestiges of an extraordinary beauty, not knowing her, nor being introduced to her, I did not speak a single word with her. In the smoking room Mr Vivanco, a Spaniard, addressed me in Spanish & with him & a young man, apparently a relation of Mrs Vivanco, I had a long Conversation in this language. When we returned up stairs, I sat down at whist with Mrs Vivanco, who turned out to be an agreable woman (a Miss Wride before her marriage) Dr Kramer & the young man, with whom I had conversed in spanish, & plaid & pleasant rubbers. We then drove home at about 11; it is amusing to hear Kelly & her husband always finding fault, the having often want of education & accomplishments (Bildung) & often want of gentility! — Towards me they are the kindest people in the world. —

Thursday 1 February. On my return from Hamburg I called upon Theodore Sieveking, William Semper, the Hamburg apothecary, called upon me; — first one I went to congratulate Mr Semper, whose birthday it was; — all the sisters, Constance Hayne, Fredericka Reincke and a number of children were there. I staid about half an hour. At three o'Clock I went to dine at H. Sieveking's with Mr. Ferdinand & Johanna Reincke. Ferdinand is about leaving our Fatherland next for London, where he has obtained a Situation of 1200 £ annually at Frederick & Nunn's At 8 I went to Semper's, where all the married Reincke's with their husbands, Theodore and Fredericka, Father, old Mr Reincke, old Mrs Semper, Miss Eliza Semper and William Semper, the apothecary, Mr Hayne, Mrs Constance Ehmenhorst (Theodore was prevented from coming by a violent headache) the four eldest Children of Knauer, George, William, Marie & Emily, Miami & Margaret Ehmenhorst, Ehmenhorst and his wife, Mr. Ferdinand and Johanna Reincke, and myself were invited, to celebrate Mrs Semper's birthday. The ladies were all sitting in one circle round the table, occupied with sewing & embroidering; the gentlemen, except the young ones, Semper & myself sat down at Backgammon, the old Mr Reincke, Father & Knauer had their game at Schwabrette at last I got a Seat near Eliza Semper, and had some conversation with her, Mrs Knauer & Constance Ehmenhorst, Mrs Knauer was particularly good looking this Evening, she put me in mind of her & my younger days; she mentioned our famous walk on 11 May 1822 at midnight in utter darkness from the Talma to Rainville's Garden, which she told me, she & Maria Ehmenhorst had always kept a secret from her parents. She qualified it as having been improper &

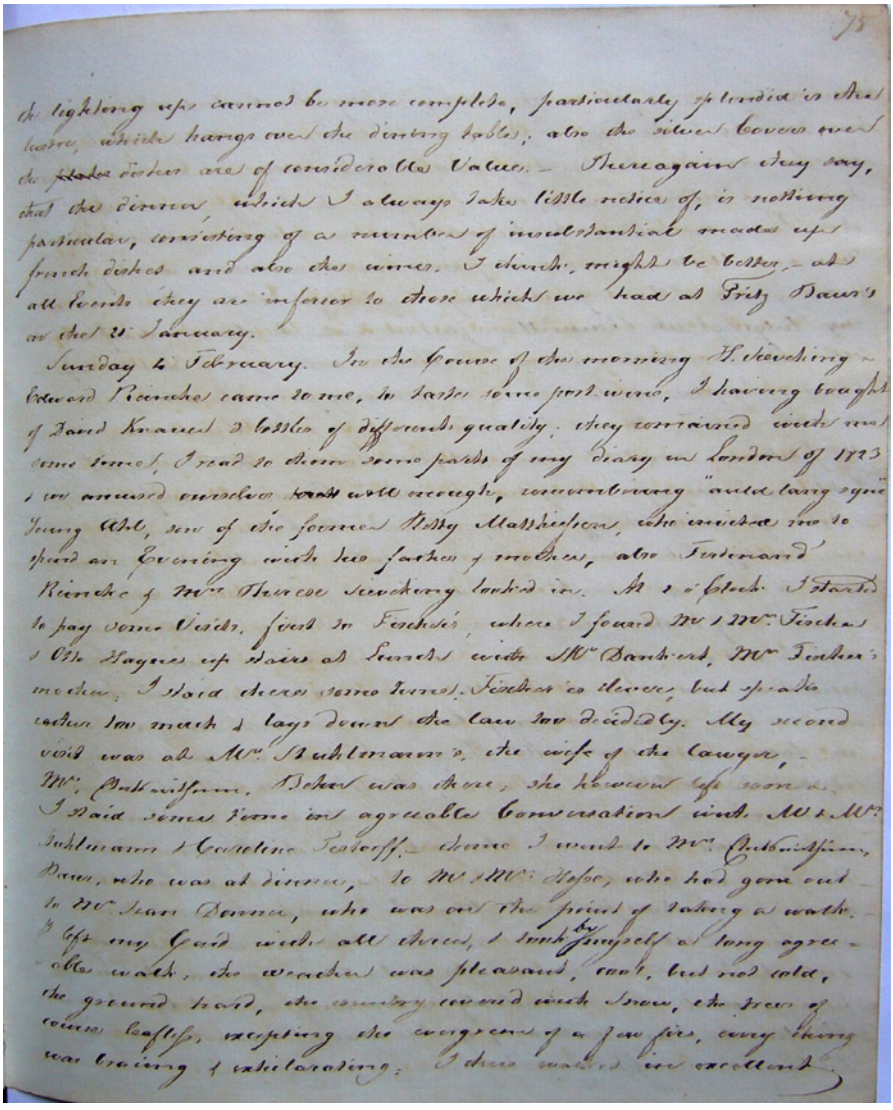
I was obliged to agree with her. To the Number of thirty seven we sat down to a cold but nice Supper in three different rooms. I got my Seat at the Table of the amiable Sisters Wilhelmine Reincke to my right, & Cäcily Mr Knauer to my left; tho' I was well placed, the conversation was not particularly amusing. It was near midnight, when I got home; before going to bed, I still amused myself with reading part of my diary of 1842.

Friday 2d February. I was busy the whole morning writing to Edouard Grundheim. From 3h to 4h I was at Siedhoff's, conversing with him & Therese, who please me more & more. I then took a rapid walk to the strand mill & back again; it is now freezing a little, the weather pleasant, the ground hard & covered with Snow. I made a very good dinner at home & amused myself part of the afternoon with reading Nettlebeck's rather amusing description of Paris during the Spring of 1843. At 8h I went to Knauers' who are "at home" every Friday Evening. Little Julia's birthday — she had completed 8 years — had been celebrated by a party of little girls, who were just about leaving, when I came. I am much pleased with the children of Knauer. Georges & Clementine's brothers Wilhelm & Hayne & Fischer's round 7 hours are agreeable young men, — Maria & Emily, amiable girls. I only found Knauer, Lütcher & Warnholz playing a game at Billiards; I sat down along side the amiable Mr Knauer with whom & Auguste Warnholz I conversed. Stahlmann the nephew of the firm of M Matthiessen & C Edouard Reincke, Knauer's son, Johannes Reincke joined us; we had Supper, Thüringer Grütze I thought rather a queer dish, some French plain Conversation, & I left, accompanied by Stahlmann, not extraordinarily well amused, but pleased.



Saturday 3d February. In the Course of the morning I went to Hamburg, with the object to make some arrangement with

Badang's, the Italian master. he however had not brought paper to mark me at the Abon Balle in the new Jungfernstieg, which shows, that he is little inclined, to give me lessons, I therefore thought best, to give him up. I called at Mrs Kramer's, with whom I staid rather a long Time. At half past 2 I was at Henry Sieveking's, with whom & his lady I drove to old Mrs Sieveking, whom & Miss Joly we took in & drove on to C.M. Donner's, who had invited a large party, generally in celebration of the espousals of Lehmann & Sophia Willink, & in reality as a Reconciliation dinner with the family Sieveking who had not partaken of his hospitality for about 18 years - The following assembled gradually the above named five, Lehmann, Caroline & Sophia Willink, Mrs & Mr Knauer, Chandelly & wife, Sheldon Elmenhorst & wife, Bernhard Donner & wife, Kammerherr von Bille, who is Danish minister in Hamburg, a lieutenant of the Danish Navy Paulsen, Archen Donner, old Mr Elmenhorst and Hannchen Willink - Before dinner I conversed a good deal with Bernhard, who was by no means disagreeable, at dinner I sat between Sophia Willink to my left & Mrs Gerhard Elmenh to my right with the latter I talked a great deal, she is not very interesting, but endeavours at least to keep up the conversation, which is a great point - after dinner, when the gentlemen went down to the smoking room, I sat down near Emmeline and rattling away with her time passed very rapidly - card tables were then formed, Mrs Knauer, Mrs Elmenhorst, Sieveking & I played together a few amusing rubbers & I went home well pleased - The Rooms in which Donner receives Company as well as his Dining Saloons are splendidly & elegantly furnished, and adorned with, it is said, valuable paintings, also with some busts in the room, in which we played Cards, the busts of the King & Queen of Denmark stand in two niches

the lightning ups cannot be more complete, particularly splendid is that lustre, which hangs over the dining tables; also the silver covers over the ~~dishes~~ other are of considerable Value. — Then again they say, that the dinner, which I always take little notice of, is nothing particular, consisting of a number of insubstantial made up french dishes and also the wines. I think, might be better, as all kinds they are inferior to those which we had at Fritz Bauer's on the 2d January.

Sunday 4 February. In the forenoon of the morning H. Steinthal Edward Reinecke came to me, to taste some port wine, I having bought of David Knauel 2 bottles of different quality; they remained with me some time, I read to them some parts of my diary in London of 1823 & we amused ourselves both with enough, remembering "auld lang syne" Young Abel, son of the former Betty Matthiessen, who invited me to spend an Evening with his father & mother, also Ferdinand Reinecke & Mrs Therese Steinthal landed in. At 2 o'clock I started to pay some Visits, first to Fischer, where I found Mr & Mrs Fischer & Mr Wagner up stairs at Lunch with Mr Bankert, Mr Fischer's mother. I staid there some time. Fischer is clever, but speaks rather too much & lays down the law decidedly. My second visit was at Mr Stahlmann's, the wife of the lawyer, Mr Buttmüllern. Behnel was there, the Governess of sons.
I had some very agreeable Conversation with Mr & Mrs Stahlmann & Caroline Perthoff. — thence I went to Mr Buttmüllern, Bauer, who was at dinner, — to Mr & Mrs Hope, who had gone out to Mr Jean Bonna, who was on the point of taking a walk.
I left my Card with all three, & took [illegible] a very agreeable walk, the weather was pleasant, cool, but not cold, the ground hard, the country covered with snow, the trees of course leafless, excepting the evergreens of a few firs, every thing was bracing & exhilarating. I then walked an excellent

Tuesday 6 February. After having taken my French Lesson at Schwolz's from 10 to 11 I called at Abt's, Mr. Abt, formerly Betty Macchiesen's, was not in, but her husband received me very friendly and gave me in a sufficiently gossipy manner an account of the fate of all the Macchiesens. Conrad is dead, Wilhelm lives in a very wired manner without doing any thing upon the Interest of his Capital, inherited from his father, he is married to Rode. Adolf married to Eloise Rode, after having made a large fortune in Mexico, is now travelling about in Europe. He is now here, his wife with her sickly child stays in Pisa. Otto is doing well in Petersburg, unmarried, as the owner of two sugar Fabriquen. — I then walked to Hamburg over the ramparts. It was a beautiful day, having not too cold (the thermometer in my bedroom varies from 10 to 15 Fahrenheit equal to about 3 to 6 Réaumur) and the eye, running over the neighbouring snow clad fields, howevers bleak, embraced a delightful winter landscape. I called upon Albert Gustav Schmidt, paid some bills and dined at a Restaurant's, jeune Werpingen in the A.N.B. Bread, amongst other things I took half a bottle of Porto, which must have been very bad, for it made my bowels dreadfully loose. I felt rather unwell, nevertheless after having made my Danish Translation, I called at Henry Siemsing's and went thence with Edouard Reincke to old Mr. Siemsing's, where they are busy with their Preparations for the Ball to be given by her on 19th Inst. — I was poorly & took merely some glasses of old Port, which for the moment restored me & enabled me to study Virgil till midnight. — but I awoke in the middle of the night, vomited & purged. — Wednesday 7 February, my dear mother's Birthday. (64th) I took dinner upon Invite from Otto & my own lodgings from All Birth, taken from 10 to 11 from Professor Frandsen at his own house. I am now gradually getting round. It is a beautiful winter day.

In my sitting room the thermom.r is up to 70° F. to 17° R. Lucile calls upon me, to enquire, whether I had received my watch, after he was gone I took a pleasant walk to Deidi's Bridge & back again from the Bridge to Ramiller's Hôtel, walking pretty fast, exactly in ½ of an hour, it was rather cold, but not too much so, only bracing. the ground covered with snow, beautifully hard for walking, here & there a little slippery, particularly where the Children carry on their usual amusement of sliding in "Pulka" a kind of small hand sledge. I arrived, staid about half an hour with Mr.
Therese Severking, and past 5h I went to Theodore Elmendorf's, at whose house, in celebration of his birthday (he is to day 43 years of age) the following assembled: Mrs Mr Armenaarm, Mrs Mr Semper, Mrs Mr Warnholtz, Mr Mrs Knauer, the owners of the house (Mrs Mr Elmendorf) with their two sweet little daughters, who sat down at dinner with us, Mimi & Margaret, old Mrs Elmendorf, Otto Heyne and Arthur Donner. At dinner I sat between Mr Warnholtz to my right & Mr Armenaarm to my left, with Mr Warnholtz as little as with Mrs Semper I do not know, what to conclude. I believe, the fault must be theirs as much as, if not more than mine. Mr Armenaarm begins to please me: he is lively & talkative, the dinner was not over abundant, but very nice, the wines not too plentiful, but good. The conversation at dinner was general & very animated. after dinner we went to the smoking room; when we came down again, old Mr Elmdf.
Theodore & Knauer & I sat down at the whist table, we played a number of amusing rubbers, amusing to me, tho' I was the only one who lost. The remainder of the gentlemen first played at Draughts, whilst the ladies amused, afterwards Mr Armenaarm & Arthur Donner sang together very prettily, whilst Mr Elmendorf jr. who is particularly amiable towards me, played the piano, and I accompanied old Mr C. home at Nine Oclock. it was a cold windy night and snow fell.

Monday 5 February. 1778 I was occupied myself with writing French for my to morrow's lesson at Schwolt's, from 1 to 2 I took my lesson upon French pronunciation, with whom I translated one day Virgil's Aenis, the other day Sallust's Conspiracy of Catelina. I then dined at a so called English hôtel, kept by the widow Heidemann at the right hand side of the nearest Road over the Hamburger Berg now called St Pauli, from Altona to Hamburg. I had a good beefsteak, pickles, potatoes & bread for 8 shillings. the large room, in which the visitors take their dinners at separate tables, has a fine view over the Elb now partly covered with ice. — On my return home I wrote a long letter to Mr Williams of London, to whom I also gave a few introductory lines to Ferdinand Reinicke who leaves to morrow for England, to celebrate whose departure the usual Tuesday party at old Mr Reinicke's was transferred to tonight this morning party is always very grand; old Mr R. plays at Cards with three of his sons in law, who come in fond, and the ladies, all sisters & the sister in law, Theodora Hinsberg, now Mr Theodor Reinicke sit round the table, conversing, sewing, knitting or embroi-dering. gradually the other gentlemen drop in from their respective occupations & counting houses, they converse a little amongst themselves or with the ladies, at 9 h we go up stairs, partake of a light supper & leave at ab 10 h. Sisters, old Mr R's brother in law is also always present as well as the two eldest children of Ferdinand's, George & William. — this evening, it being the eve of Ferdinand's departure, the two next children, Mary & Emily, two nice girls, were also admitted.
Thursday 8 February. The whole morning I was quietly at home, writing, until it was time to dine; at a little past 4 I was at Henry Siemsking's, where the following, to celebrate "das Dreimänner" met, from her Chair without the assistance of her Servant, sat down to a plain dinner, both brothers are pleasant, but I took upon (Abt as) more clever; the Doctor's wife is apparently an extremely good natured, talkative and agreeable young woman. She is without any affectation, gives utterance to what just comes uppermost in her mind, and answered me very much with her real Hamburg German expression, and the legend marked broad pronunciation of the R, nearly like the Parisian RR. She & husband are very fond of each other, at least they kiss and hug each other more than I have ever seen of man & wife who are married 9 or 10 years. We sat together till nearly 8 when I walked out to Abtnaa & straight on to Knauers. Dear Knauer, Fuller & A. Clemenbart were playing at Skittles, Mr Knauer, Mr Clemenbart & Mr Bethmann the widower, were looking together, I joined them, Edward Reinecke, also the younger brother Hermann, — the two young Knauer Georg & Alfred were with us at supper; whilst the girls, Maria & Emily, performed waiting to their Governess — We left at past 11 o'Clock & I read in bed Tennyson's Tales &c.

Saturday 10 February. Arose rather later than usually & was busy the whole morning entering my Expenses, incurred since I landed in England. — I dined quietly at home & was only interrupted in the course of the morning by Steinking who brought me Letters from Lima of 13th & 14th October, by Mimosa Capt to Liverpool; Garland wrote me with Copies of Despatches &c &c from Chili & Lima of 1851. I came to my Cabin on 31 January 52 on the Coast of S. Fe. he advises the death of Rivagüero, murdered in Lima in a political ferment, also the death of the Ministers &c &c. he adds in a Postscript, that it was reported, that Santa Cruz was in Arequipa. Juan wrote a few words, advising, that Gallagher has taken off my ma-at Rio Janeiro. I trust it may be safe, — and that Le Maistre, who was then in Lima, — made in high terms of Schultes mine. — Hermann Ruiz de Ulloa gave me the reasons for his having joined Sanchez, — and Manguida amongst other things, told me that I had been named "Albacea" by the late Rancho of Guayaquil, which fell I fortunately escape thro' my absence — and that Federick Schultz — the rich worm Speculation having been given up by Pluche. Nicolas of marrying Dalida, the widow of Sanchez Gomez, of course older than he — The weather was very disagreeable the whole day. It blew violently from the South against my windows: the ground is covered with snow, but as it thaws a little, it is very dirty & moist to walk. I had thus but little inclination to leave my warm and comfortable room, but being invited to spend the evening at Mrs Ahl's, I left Lemcke at past 7, looked in at Lieutenant's & directed them my steps to Ahl's house, who lives in the Königstrasse exactly opposite the Moltkes: he is a dealer in wine, but has also a cafe room & rather a cafe cellar just below his drawing room. I found the following party assembled taking tea, viz: Ahl, of whom I have already spoken on p. 6, his wife, in other features I easily recognized those of Betty Mathiessen: she is grown stouter, and instead of the extremely active & nimble girl, which she has been, she has now become so very weak in her legs, that she cannot walk any long distance — in her conversation she is now much the same, she was twenty & odd years ago, lively & full of quaint ideas & expressions. — Wichelm, marked by the small pox. I should have known any where: he is intelligent. His wife much altered, but pleasant. Mrs Jellos Gattig, also a very nice woman: she is still good looking who remained with the ladies, and also went down stairs to the smoking room, where tea was handed round, and where we staid, hanging on a by no means disagreeable conversation, until it was time to break up, at nearly 11 o' Clock. The long separation from the Ladies appeared to me rude & improper, but when I told Polly my opinion, she made me a low foolish general observation, which no doubt the Women very soon. "This is the way of our North Germans" and her new husband, lay down the Law, that, when no Guests are staid, ladies and gentlemen cannot be together such a length of time and be amused. Mr Fowler & André Courtray staid till mid. night.

I have had to day two more Invitations at Knauers in honor of Ehrmann & Miss Willink, and at Schuster's, where his last Son was christened, he is called Hermann.

Monday 1st Feby. It was about 11 o'Clock, when I reached Rauns.
I called upon Mrs Thomas Cushing, took my Satin Spoon, Jewel & brought me a very clever Letter from Charles Pepoy dated Rome 2 Feby.
I worked until 2 hours and 30 about 8 in the evening went to Sempers, I found Mr Semper, who pleases me the best, the more I see him & playing at Domino with Otto & Elizabeth, her Nephew & George her own Child, Charles his other Nephew was upon on the piano.
I appear to me, that she does not make the slightest difference between the children. Semper cannot yet get detained as usually by Rail Road business. We went down stairs to the drawing room, Mrs Semper had prepared some hot supper but Semper told her, to give us mainly some bread & butter, which, very nicely made, was handed in. we played 4 games at chess till 11 h., of which I gained 3, the last was drawn.
Mr Semper had wine previously to her bed room. I read till a very late hour, finishing Jaime "fatalities" which is, I think, after all but a very middling novel.

Tuesday 10th July Empfing my french Lessons, which I took from 10 to 11 at Hurst's house. I was gaily at home the whole day, busy writing, reading Latin & beginning to my Livre de Paris by Eugene Sue, a new french book, which is making a great deal of Noise at present, & of course, as one judges by its title, treats of the very refuse of Paris Society & murderers, robbers, thieves, &c—— &c but is nevertheless written in decent expressions & is superiorly interesting. At 8 o'Clock I went to old M'Kenzie's, earlier than usually, expecting that M'r Henry Lerching & Wilhelmine would give me some instruction in the present German waltz, the "Jäger". however the former had not come, owing to her boy Johann having caught a bad Cold, & Wilhelmine, & M'r Kenzie urged me on several times, was too bashful, consequently nothing was done to my regret— I however admired myself better than usually, conversing a good deal with our Sister, passively with M'r Kenzie. Wilhelmine has received a letter from her brother Hermann from Lima, dated Oct. 31 Dec to Liverpool, my family has not written— Juan was sent to Peru, to dispatch some Guano vessels, Hermann had during his absence occupied his room in my house, this latter had not yet left Gibbon to join Tenbrinck, there was a great want of Clerks.— one gentleman say there had been a little dance at my house

Wednesday 11th July. I went to Hamburg in the morning about the 8th, & was much pleased with the earlier large houses which face the Hamburg harbour, in the "Neue Strich, called: first & second Vorsetzen, Baumwall, Frankfort, then take me to the "new Waterhouse" where Philip Lilie lives, he was not in, but I was shown to his Counting house in the Vierlanden market, I enquired of some one in the Street, where he lived, & this some one was he himself. He had forgotten me the Name & I then did not recognize him immediately, however after a Second or first few words were again quite familiar to me. He did not recognize me and when I made myself known to him he was polite but cold; we walked together as far as the Exchanges. I went to the Abendschule, where I arranged at last my Italian lessons with Pastarini, Monday from 11 to 12 & Friday from 12 to 1 at Teichow Kramer's, 12 lessons for 12 £. St. paid before hand. I also called upon Kelly, then we Alsop upon Sievking. It was rather a cold & foggy, but to me not disagreeable day, with a fall I even perspiration at times. The shares of the Altona Kiel Rail Road are at 10 h, those of the Flensburg branch, on account of which the subscribers only 5 Specie are paid up, at 106 ½, Peruvian Bonds have risen in London to 25 a 25 ¼, and the Morning Chronicle Columbian or Venezuela are quoted at 22 ½, what may then be Chili 62 stand at 103 a 105 %!— Daniel Schutte called upon me & remained until it was time to dress and to go to Wandsby, where the following sat down to dinner: old Mr Sievking, Mr Cornelius Willink, Caroline Sophie, Miss Ord, Mr Henry Sievking & wife, old Mr Clemenshorst, Mr Labouchere & sister, Edward Reeves, Mr Stahlmann (the widower) Mr Romanis (Wandsby's uncle) Mr Hennes (master of police) a pleasant man of about 35 years of age, whom I had not met before, Wandsby & his wife, and myself. I sat between Miss Ord to my right and Caroline to my left and carried on a pretty lively Conversation; after dinner Romanis & I conversed a long time with Caroline, so that I was but a few minutes in the sorting room, when I was called down to play at Whist with Mr Clemenshorst, Hennes & Romanis. — Here I am but a poor player, frequently, if not always the worst — I lost many rubbers, 50 points, fortunately only as if each. I accompanied Mr Clemenshorst home.—

Thursday 25 Feby. It is a most beautiful morning, the Thermometer says, it freezes pretty hard. The ground, the trees in Henriette's garden are all covered with Snow; so is the opposite

Hannoverian side, which between the two the Elb is again full of dispt. ice. The Sky, tho' it be over not of a deep blue, is quite clear & the Sun shines merrily into the windows of my room. I spent a quiet, but pleasant day. In the morning I was busy writing a letter to my wife. I dined with Siewking & his wife; after dinner they taught me the Jäger Step in which I made a little progress. I then translated Daniel at home and spent the hours from 3 till 10½ at old Mr. Siewking's with Comm. her two daughters, Miss Fitz & Lehmann. I like much to be with them, there is something genteel in their Conversation. — Friday 8th Feb. Quite a foggy morning, the cold has decreased.
I was busy the whole day, called upon Mr. Henry Siewking, took a quick walk to the formerly Thornton's Villa & back again, dined at home & at half past seven went to Krauer's. Mrs. K. was in the Nursery, her youngest child, Hermann, being rather poorly of or some Cold; she however made her appearance, conversed with me & called her two daughters, Maria & Emily, to teach me the Jäger. I succeeded pretty well, both are nice girls; I believe, the younger, Emily, is cleverer, but the elder, about 15 years old, is a sweet Creature. As usually, Fibbe, Warnholz & his wife, Edwards Reinecke & their widowed Buchsbaum came; Krauer, Fibbe, Warnholz played L'hombre, the spanish Boccambore. — we return conversawe supped & retired at 11 o'Clock. It dawns very much; the streets are extremely dirty, the men wear Jemdrader shoes & boots.
Saturday 10 Feby. Weather like yesterday, temperature mild. — observed various small vessels on the Elb. In the course of the day I called merely upon Mr. & Mrs. Henry Siewking, otherwise I was busily occupied writing the whole day until past 8 in the evening when I went to Semper. Here I found Mrs. Wilhelmine Reineke, occupied with embroidering the former the part of a carpet, which some Altona Ladies are embroidering for Crown

Blacher & his Lady, who are likely never will have been married fifty years. Mr. Ammermann, Mr. Buchmann, Mr. Bechelmann & Mr. Other form the Committee, who have had the design drawn out, and who by Lot have distributed the Share to each Lady. Miss Reuchlin left at 9 o'Clock. Mr. Semper retired to her bedroom at 11. Semper & I played Chess, I gained to games & lost one, we then conversed a little & it was just midnight when I came home. We had no hot supper, but all kinds of excellents bread and butter and the famous drink, called "Cadenal".

Sunday 18 February. After having written a few words, shaved & dressed, I called upon a Mr. Buck, who is also an inmate in Danielle's hotel, he lives upstairs and occupies some handsome apartments. I understand, he is a man of considerable property, who with his wife, a little English woman, live here very comfortable upon the Interest of his Capital. He is extremely stout and quite pleasant in his Conversation. His wife was not visible, being unwell. I staid with him some time and called them upon Henry Siewking & his wife, just when she was on the points of teaching me the "Jargon" of Johannes Semper had passed by, Siewking called him in, thinking that he intended calling upon me, which was the Case, also Theodor Reuchlin looked in not having found me at home. Mr. Siewking stepped up stairs, we soon ranched and conversed very pleasantly till 2, when Semper & Reuchlin left, I also went away and upon Mr. Baur, the wife of the indignificant Henry, the Senator, she is a very pleasant but sickly woman; I staid some time with her & her sister, a Miss Wallbaches, Mr. Baur came in, he had also called upon me. Thence I went to Theodor Ehrenbord's, but found only his wife Constance at home. In my Lodging I spend an hours reading Eugene Sue's "Mystères de Paris" which book is now quite the rage; it is interesting enough, but contains some are my opinion, improbable characters, such as the main male here Rodolfo, who tries to act the part of Providence, I think drove to Hamburg in an Omnibus, called for a moment upon my cousin Nelly Kramer and there in a Droschka to Johannes Limpricht, d where I knew a party of 18 assembled. I do not recollect all of them, but I know, that they were very agreeable people & that I was much pleased. I had no Lady to lead to the dinner table, there being two gentlemen more than Ladies, but got a very nice seat, to my right a Mr Jerrgard, a stout man, husband of the once famous beauty from Mobile, next to him sat Mr Limpricht, who is amiable & lively, then followed, opposite to me, Senator Fosler, brother of him who is married to Nelly Donner, daughter of J. Donner, & whom the brother he resembles a good deal in her liveliness, - next to him sat a sister of Mr Limpricht, born Albert, married to Doctor Lehre, the last good looking of the sisters, - to my left sat another sister, Fosler's wife, extremely handsome, but no so amiable or talkative as Mr Limpricht, however, some way or other, I passed the time, whilst we sat at dinner, very pleasantly. - the dinner itself was not in such style as at Fritz Davis's or C.H. Donner's but better & more genteel than at Kramer's, the rooms all carpetted & well lighted up, the dinner good, also Champaign. Of course as usually, the gentlemen retired to the smoking room, where I had a very long conversation with Wesendolf, - his wife was also there, I only saw her & had no opportunity of speaking a single word with her. I sat down at a whist table with Mrs Lehre, Mr Fosler & a Mr Witt, who deserves rather a particular mention: she is married to a Mr Witt, whose sister is the mother of Bruno Limpricht's wife: the Mr Witts has been stationed in Batavia where she has lived a short time with her husband, she is not a Hamburg Lady, Nelly Kramer believes her to be from St Croix, which I think is likely enough, for she is extremely lively, there, being occupied with the "Commissioner" Otto Large, now a lawyer, made her appearance & I renewed my acquaintance with him, also the architect Harwood came. I ate & drank too much, & Edward Rundell left at past 3 o'Clock. I called an usually upon Sieveking, in my lodgings. I undressed & went to Bed, – I slept till half past 5, shaving, cleaning myself & dressing took me a long time, so that I had scarcely time to learn a few dancing words by heart, before the Carriage came at 7 h., I drove to Henry Sieveking's, and with him & Therese, his wife, to old Mr. Sieveking, who gave a dance. – When we arrived, only Schenker, his wife & brother in law were before us. I commenced conversing with Ernestine, gradually a few more assembled, whom old Mr. the Senator, Hope came, I went up to him & with him & lawyer Lemsford I had a very long Conversation in the room, where the Card Tables were laid out, which lasted so long, that when we had finished and I returned to the Saloon, it was completely filled with Dancers of the male sex, who, particularly the younger ones, were all unknown to me; the room, where the young girls were, was also crowded; in a third room the elderly & married ladies were assembled, – in the fourth card Tables were arranged. The music consisted merely of a piano: when it commenced I stood up for the first waltz with Mrs. Therese Sieveking; it is strange, that even with the common waltz I do not get on as I ought, & the Jaeger I cannot manage at all. It was very crowded. The then following Française I got through with pretty well; my partner was Miss Mary Hope, to whom Sieveking introduced me; – then a Waltz with Wilhelmine Rundell, I succeeded as little as with Therese – & a Cotillon with Mrs George Haar, née Chapeaurouge. – She is an agreeable lively woman, & I talked a good deal with her. – Now a number of small tables were brought in & the young people sat down; many refreshments, which so very well with her the first time I saw her, may not Dancing is the Cause in a great measure. —

Tuesday 20 Feb. Snow there is still drifting in the Ell, some visits came up. — From 8 to 9 I had Darnish, from 10 to 11 Frau from 12 to 1 Ladies Lessons, in the Intervals I could hardly do any thing. The whole morning I was occupied writing my Diary. I dined at home — after dinner I took Virgil before me, which kept me occupied till nearly half past eight, when I went to old M. Reincke, at whose house only very few of his family were assembled this evening. Semper & his wife were wanting to having a rail road meeting, Siemsing & his wife, because he had caught cold, Theodor Reincke & his wife, because she, very near the time of her confinement, wanted to rest a little, Mr.
Wormbs, because she was unwell & in bed, Otto Reincke, because he was celebrating a birth day, — there were only: Old Reincke, Lisbeth, Mrs Mr Knauer, playing at whist rubbers, — for one rubber I took Mr.
Knauer's Stead, — and in the other room, Edward, Wichelmine, and Maria & Emily Knauer, with them I conversed about last night's party, the two girls told me, I should call them thou, which I agreed to. Afterwards young Johannes Reincke, Wormbs and the two Knauer, George & William, came from their respective counting houses, we had an usually a plain Supper & at 11 o'clock I was home. It was a cold windy disagreeable Night.

Wednesday 21 Feb. It has snowed the whole Night, the streets are deep covered with Snow. I had my Danish & my Latin Lesson, called upon Henry Siemsing, whose house is a complete hospital they are nearly all ill, also upon old Mr Siemsing, with whom & his daughter Henriette I talked a while, the two young Ladies, Caroline & Sophie generally disappear very soon, went to Otto Reincke's Shop, where I bought some black silk for a new waistcoat, — to the Bookseller Wendeborn, — to my Taylor. to Mrs

Selly Lench. Fraencken was gone out to take English Lessons with the Misses Schadt, who, by the bye, two stout, rather good looking girls, were also at Mr Sieveking's dance, the eldest of them, is engaged to a Lieutenant Tutein — returned home, changed my dress, and hurried to Fischer's, where a party of twelve sat down to dinner: Fischer & his wife, Mlle Dankers, — Rev. mecken, — clergyman Gesseken from Hamburg, his wife (Mr Fischer's sister) Riedenberg, Prussian Consul in Hamburg, his wife (Gesseken's sister) an uncle of Mr Fischer's, — a professor Wiebel, who teaches Chemistry at the Hamburg College (Gymnasium) — Otto Hayne & myself. I sat between Wiebel, a very pleasant man, and Hayne, who is not disagreeable either, I thus amused myself very fairly — dinner itself was not over abundant, but very good & nice; — in the evening room we were but a short time, Hayne, Riedenberg, Fischer & I then sat down to a pleasant game at whist, whilst the others played a very noisy & merry game at thirty one: after the Hamburghers had left, Hayne & I stood about a quarter of an hour & at 11 o'Clock I was at home. —

Thursday, 22 Feb.y. I was busy the whole morning writing my commercial Journal, which kept me occupied till nearly 2 o'Clock. I then proposed of the fine weather — it was cold, but the sun was out — to take a pleasant quick walk as far as Berth's nursery gardens, many people were out on Hudgar at Sieveking's, where I called, he & his eldest son Henry had both their faces swelled & tied up. Mr Sieveking looked "Ein wenig frank", Johanna had just recovered, Therese was well, but little Charles very poorly. I found at home when I arrived a Note from Dr Kramer's Clerk, who informed me that he had seen Barbara, who was much annoyed on account of her having waited in vain on Monday last, & who had added, that she would not give me any Lesson. I must therefore look out for some one else to teach me Italian. — At about 7 I went to a concerts given by non professional singers in the so called Liedertafel in the Langenhaus in the house, where our former Years the post office was. Mr Mayenbacher, the late post master, now deceased, has laid the foundation of this society, principally of singers, which is at present in a flourishing Condition. Upstairs a long & wide saloon was completely filled with ladies & gentlemen; thro' the assistance of Mr Lütke I got a Seat, and tho' I am no judge of music, I listened with much pleasure to the, I believe, I may call it, Oratorio of Händel, called "Jphtha", the greatest part of which was sung in Recitativo with an occasional air (Aria) and accompanied by instrumental music. I was home at 10, where I made my Danish Exercise till nearly midnight.

Friday 23d Feby, a cold stormy day, with the wind from N.W. blowing against my window. Towards the afternoon the wind went round to the East, the sun shone & the weather becomes more agreeable tho' at the same time the cold increased considerably. I called upon Henry Isenberg, after having written at home a letter to A. Gibbs & Sons & found my new Lodger at Isenberg's, they were all getting better, except the youngest Child. Charles, who is poorly & somewhat dangerously ill. I dined at old Mrs Isenberg's in a very plain manner, merely with Mr. Isenberg, Emeriene, her two daughters (Johnann is gone to pay a visit to her mother in Finkenwärder) & Miss Matthew Isenberg; we had some of the remnants from Monday. I left before 3, & at home I amused myself with a book called "Im Physiognomie Lexicon" which is not amiss, until it was time to drive at 7 o'Clock in an Omnibus from the other End of the Dalmaille to the Corner of the Fuhlentwiete in Hamburg; the 1336 distances there & Bramfeld and at 8 between 7 & 8, and at 10, 11 degrees below the freezing point equal to 7th Fahrenheit. At Bramfeld is a pretty large party, a permitted. I disliked this in my opinion rather Unenglish custom of the ladies to sit round the Tea. table in close array, occupied either with knitting, sewing or embroidering and gossiping amongst themselves, whilst the gentlemen keep at a distance and converse on subjects which interest them: for me to break thro' this custom and to approach a lady would, I believe, have been looked upon as strange and outlandish. After having the Com. of each Room accepted Kramer's offer to play at whist with him, a Mr Cuthbert & a Mr Moll, against Mr Moll, Mr Copeland & Mr Angus Cobb played whist with a dummy, the latter of all these gentlemen were present, also a widow Secretary, Miss Hope, who came when we already sat down to supper, the wife and various young girls occupied till 10, when we sat down to Supper, which consisted only of bread & butter, with cheese, cold meat, sausages, anchovies some trifling Cakes, Bordeaux wine, port & sherry. I took Mrs Aspinall to the table, with whom I carried on a pleasant & lively Conversation about Andrew Bogue, Catholicism, processions &c. At about 11½ the party broke up. Two lines of Omnibuses run between Altona & Hamburg from 8 o' Clock in the morning till 9½ in the Evening. Kapsen tells me, they may generally of an hour from the East End of the Palmaille & go as far as the Steinthor, Hamb.g the other line leaves the Palmaille & stops also four times an hour, but between the quarters & goes in Hamburg as far as the Steinthor; the fare is 4 ß; they are allowed to carry 12 passengers, but on an average I should suppose, five is the utmost they carry, — and as often as they go to, they return from Hamburg.

Saturday 22 July. After having taken a cup of coffee I walked out to Altona, called upon Miss Schlüter, Steinberg's, where little Charles is not better yet, & reached my lodgings at 12 o' Clock. This is the most wintry day, which I have experienced, and I am here ill now continually, and a pretty strong N.E. wind drives the small flakes into one's face, they hurt & make the face smart as if they were needles. — in some places the snow is blown together in such heaps, that, when obliged to wade through them, the men reached halfway my calf. — I had also the pleasure of a tumble upon the soft snow. In Hamburg many laborers were employed in clearing the streets and carrying the snow away upon waggons. — such a snow storm imparts a grave the view over the Elbe was as the thickest fog. — In my bed room my thermom. stood at noon 33° Fahrenheit equal to ½° Réaumur above freezing point, which is colder than I have ever yet observed it, since I am here, and not quite in the open air, but in the inderstades between an outer & an inner door it stood at 12½, 13½°. Fahr = to al.' below Zero. Réaumur. — I continued snowing the whole day, and when I went out at 9 o'clock in the evening, after having been greatly at home the whole day, as many places the snow lay so deep, that it reached up to my knee. — I went to Theodor Rumbel's house, who accompanied to Beckelmann's, where a professor Jones from Manchester in Hamburg & a Doctor were playing at chess. Beckelmann was merely looking on. I played one game with Jones, who beat me; he plays better than I do; another with the Doctor, whom I beat. I think, he plays as well as I, if not a little better. We left at 11 o'Clock. I did not see the Ladies. —

Sunday 25 February. A fine cold Day. the sun shines merrily into my room: in my bedroom the thermom. is 33° F. = 1° Reaum. I occupied myself in the morning with reading Sallust's conspiracy of Catilina and then dressed, to pay a number of visits, all which I found out very pharasaisly. I first went to Henry Jencken's, to whom house little Charles is getting a little better, but Mr Bennet & Wilhelmine were there, and the Mrs Jencken came. to see how the young Mr Hirsching, Henry's wife, is also far from being quite well.

Indeed I went to Mr Christian Daur, who, as well as all the others, whom I called upon, received me with the greatest kindness; she invited me to a "thée" to-morrow evening and to a dinner party on Monday next, to both which invitations I was obliged to refuse, being already previously engaged. — To Mr Jean Denner, I saw his wife in Jean, he invited me to dine with them quite en famille next Wednesday next, which I accepted. — To Doctor Heyde, who was just on the point of driving his Lady in a Sledge; a great Number of Sledges are out to day, the weather being fine, the ground hard & no wind, some of them look prettily enough & are preceded by outriders; they all go down the road towards Blankenese. — To Mr Conr. Daur, an old Lady, whose legs are paralized, she cannot move & must be raised about every where. — To Senator Hesse; he received me first below and began reading aloud an English newspaper with a very bad accent. — As Mr Callisen, (Chemist), was announced, Hesse & I then went upstairs to the sitting room, which, well warmed, with the sun shining into the windows and some flowers upon stands, looked quite summer-like; it is of course carpeted & prettily furnished. Mr Callisen was accompanied by his lady & two young ladies; he is only just arrived & intends remaining in Altona; he is a very good looking elderly man. Mr Hesse & her daughter Mary made their appearance & after Callisens were gone, I staid a short time conversing with them. Mr Hesse, who is known to wear the Cross, is apparently a pleasant woman. She invited me to dine with them, as they expected Schuette & Tod to dinner, I was however obliged to refuse; — my last visit was to Georg Daur's, both he & his lady, a Chapeauwings from Hamburg, please me much. — I returned to my lodgings at about 3, read for an hour an algebraic book written by a certain Ludewig, and then the evening

"Mystères de Paris" by Eugène Sues, until Schnelle & Pod called, Pod, who withdraws from the business, in some fashion to arrange the partnership affairs with Schnelle, who is looking out for some one to take charge of his Cologne house, but hitherto I believe has cannot find one, who suits him. – They left me at 6½, when I ran to Prof. Reinecke, who celebrated the 2nd anniversary of his & the 23 anniversary of his father-in-law, L. Stenzing's, wedding day. In one the following sat down to dinner: Theodor Reinecke at the head of the Table, to his right: Knauer, Lübke, old M. Reinecke, Theodor's wife (Thusnelda), L. Stenzing (her father) then two opp. Theodore, & then on the Sopha, opp. them three gentlemen: M.r Knauer, myself & M.r Stenzing. The dinner was plain, but the conversation lively & very agreable. the three ladies: M.rs Stenzing (a Mrs. Steinmann from Kiel) M.rs Knauer & M.rs Reinecke all extremely agreable women. – in the next room dinner was laid out for Wilhelmine, Otto & Joh. Reinecke, for Bertha & Mathilda Stenzing & for a young man, whom I do not know. After dinner, coffee was handed round & but a short time the gentlemen remained by themselves, old Reinecke, Lübke & Knauer sat down to play at L'hombre, Theodor, I & the other young men joined the ladies. I sat down near M.rs Knauer & M.rs Stenzing and amused myself very well. poor M.rs Reinecke, who is very near her confinement, was not quite well, she walked up & down in the adjoining room, when I joined her. – We left a little past 10; it was cold & the moon was shining still brighter than in the morning. the wind from the East – The Elbe is so filled with ice, that it does not move. –

Monday 26 Febr 7. After having taken my dandruff powder from 8 to 9 I breakfasted in a hurry, I ~~accurately~~ ran to Professor Frandsen's at 10 o'Clock which was not the hour arranged with him: on my return I looked in at Siewekings & received a letter from my wife & another from Isaac, dated 20 & 21 Febr.; politics in do of course not correspond to those Rbk Coins. Their measures I believe, the Austrians are by no means pleased with, because they dislike every thing, which assimilates them to Denmark or Danish Customs. Out of 1 Mark fine Silver, 38 Rbk. are coined in case of 2 Rbk or 1 piece, of 1 Rbk, of 32 16, 8 Rbk. with their respective alloy. but when the coins are still smaller, viz 4 Rbk = 1 Thlr Courg or 3 Rbk. 24 Sch Courg, then out of 1 Mark fine Silver, 21 Rbk are coined.

Tuesday 27 Feb. Again the weather has changed. It has snowed during the night, now it freezes and the ground is hard, which is at least more pleasant than yesterday's snow water which covered the whole town. I was quietly at home during the whole morning until at last about three I walked to Hamburg and saw the Mr Schl. one of the two, who had replied to my Enquiry about an Italian master in the Newspaper; he is a Copenhagen man and has agreed to give me twelve Lessons at my lodgings for 10 ℔. It begins next Thursday from 12 to 1. I then went to Kramer's, where I had a plain homely dinner with them & old Miss Schlüter. the two little girls, Maria & Louise, seem to be very fond of me. Kramer lives upon a Grange pleasantly, they keep only one servant girl, who cooks & does every thing except running Errands, for which purpose they have a boy, Christoffer, who does not sleep in the house; the girl does washes, but they have none to attend at dinner, except a young woman, called Alvina, who is a jack of all trades, she dines with them & a kind of governess to the Children & nevertheless is not above attending to menial Services; and as the same time, whilst in their domestic arrangements they are so economical, they are most company; now attending to me. Fast. I would see less company & live at home more comfortably. Miss Schlüter & I drove to Altona in an Omnibus. I saw her home and then went to Henry Sievers's where I remained until 9 o'clock when it was time to go to old Mr Reimers's various members of the family were standing on & off stage rest sufficiently ~~early~~ ~~the Last~~ interesting. Dinner, tho' not at our hour, was very good; we had Champagne of course. — After dinner, for a short time the gentlemen ~~joined~~, and Gessler, Borgen, Jean Jaume & I played at whist till near nine, when I had to leave. I was so sleepy & with time I walked to Hesse, who gave a magnificent ball. — When we entered the Ball room, they had just finished a dance and there the Crowd of people, there were, I believe, about 130 or 140, we squeezed our way to Mrs Hesse, a really amiable woman, who makes an excellent hostess, whom we saluted. — With old Mr, the Senator, Hesse, who is no great genius. I am an excellent dancer, their daughter, Mary, is said to be a nice girl; I saw her of course, but she was ~~engaged~~ engaged all the time, so that I did not go near her. The same was the case with Caroline Todorff, with her daughter, Mrs Stubbmann, who is still a very good looking & in my opinion pleasant woman, I exchanged a few words. there are two young Mess Hesse, the elder of whom I only just know; the younger, Emil, is by no means unpleasant. he introduced me to a young Spaniard, whose name I forgot, from Malaga, who is in Hamburg to learn German, with whom I talked a considerable while, — also to a Mr Heron, a Spanish Lady from Malaga, who has married a Hamburger, a Mr von Heeren, belonging to the family of the Schneider, into which Mr Bernhard Dorrien has married. she told me, that she is well pleased in Hamburg, the climate she could wish to be a little milder, however she finds us with it pretty well, as the servants she can manage to speak as German, & otherwise she gets on quite well with French. she is a pretty pleasant young woman. I regretted, that our conversation was interrupted by her being led away to a dance. — There were many many people, whom I did not

Saloon rather small for so many people to dance; however the general opinion believes it to be large enough. Under this dancing room, without carpet with a board floor, on one side of it, there is one, on the other side two receiving rooms, these of course carpeted: the furnitures, sopha, chairs, armchairs tables are very handsome & even splendid: — of course the lighting up could not be better, but above all pleased me the Music, I may call them even massive. Gardians, some of red, others of yellow woollen stuff. — A flourish welcomed the Count Bludow Altona, when he made his appearance, he is a venerable looking old man, who to morrow completes his 80th year, the birthday a number of young Altonaers had celebrated by means of a procession with Torches, which at eleven I went to the house for the Polonaise, which, I am told looked very pretty. He was talking to Senator Hoyer was sitting near him & I took there by, when Hoyer introduced me to him. he enquired about my family, but as he is deaf it was rather difficult to make myself understood with the noise of the music. He left before Supper. — A daughter of Fritz Davis guides a young woman, married to a Hollander in Hamburg, near whom I sat on the 23 Jan[y] at dinner at Fritz Davis's, was sitting by herself on an armchair. I approached her & began conversing, but she kept quite aloof, as if her pride prevented [illegible] conversations with me, which as soon as the Brazilian things d'affaires spoke to her, she was all affability. — this amongst me a little, tho'. to say the truth — not a good deed. then again Mistress Georg Davis spoke to me without my addressing her. — At about midnight a number of small tables were placed in the different rooms & cold Supper served. Mr Hoyer called the gentlemen to take the Ladies, when I entered one of the smaller rooms. Mr George Davis was [illegible] just in front. I offered her my arm, which she took & led her to a small Table in a Corner of the Saloon, round which the following took their Seats. I, at the Corner, Mr George Rau, Daniel Schmitt, Mr von Halle, Mr Schnell (my fellow lodger at Rainville's, who knows very little in Albania & Hamburg) Mr Schneider, still a good looking elderly woman — I believe Mr Heuer — Mr Doctor Abendroth — & Mr George Rau. I was told, the Supper was excellent, but I did not taste anything except a few glasses of Champaign. — Mr Schon, the partner of Carl Wettink of St Thomas, a very handsome man, at the request of Mr Hesse, gave the Toast of Consul Blücher. Abundance of refreshments were handed round the whole evening by Servants out of the in Livery. After Supper many people left, but dancers were still danced, I left before the last was over & bade good bye to Mr Hesse, Mrs Hesse I did not see, and accompanied by Schmitt & his nephew I walked home to Rainville's hotel. The weather was now quite mild but at 9 h the Cold has been at 13 R equal to 2 °F. Upon the whole I divided myself well the evening.

Thursday 29 February. At 7 h Cloth precisely I was at Henry Siemsen's, with whom I rode to Blücher's house on the Colonnade, to listen to instrumental music & singing performed by the Hanseatic Band, which the Hamburg Senate had send out to compliment Consul Blücher on his birthday. It was pretty enough but hardly worth while getting cold feet by standing upon the snow covered steps before Stricklmann's house. At home I translated Daniels until about 11 h when I put on my consular uniform & went to Consul Blücher to congratulate him on his birth-day, just when I entered, the clerical body left. I saw in the receiving room there were but a few officers; the Consul received me very friendly; I introduced myself to the Consulin, whom I addressed in French. She still remembered my few words, of which she spoke in Flemish home: wine. chocolate & cake were handed round. I left after having been there about 10 minutes, well pleased with the manner in which I had been received — At home I waited in vain for my Italian master. At 12 h I went to Mr Clemendorff to congratulate her. She is 64 years old. I met there Senator Meckmann & his wife from Hamburg, Pastor Horn, Chamb: Benedix, Miss Mathilde Wedekind, whom I did not know, then she knew me and Pastor Heimann, which latter is become very old and weak — I again returned home & felt rather knocked up. even a short Nap did me hardly any good. Past 5 I went to Th. Clemendorff, where his mother's birth-day was celebrated. I felt far from well, one moment I felt quite cold and then again my head burned, so that I really believe, I had a little fever. — Consequently at dinner, which was very sumptuous, I ate hardly any thing and drank nothing. We sat as follows: at the head of the Table Mr Clemendorff & to his left Theodore — then followed to his left Mr Bernhard Donner, Krauss, Mr Gobler, Hayne, Mr Mansdorff, Gobler, Bernhard Donner, & Mr Fiedler just arrived from England; at the foot of the Table, Arthur Donner, who has just returned from Tondern, where he has paid a visit to his brother Otto & family & a Mr Haagen, a very talkative, by no means unpleasant, I believe, clever man; then Mr Siemsen, I old Mr Jean Donner, Warnholtz, Mr Krauss, Mr Siemsen, Mr St. Blank old C H Donner & then again to his left, Mr & Mrs Clemendorff. My female Neighbours on both sides were very insignificant & rather tiresome: how can all Haagen made up for them, with whom I conversed a good deal. — Various Toasts in margin: Mr Clemendorff's health, Consul Blanker's, C H Donner's & Mr Jean Donner's. After dinner we smoked in the smoking room how C H Donner had a tumble, he might have hurt himself, but escaped: he stumbled over the Carpet & then over the chairs:

I appear to me: that he has become very well towards end, and a word did we speak together. Verstand ist nothing particulars, it is strange, I cannot get acquainted with his wife, which with the wife of the two young Dacres I am on such good Terms. When we came down Stairs, I tried to remain with the ladies. Wilhelmine Reinecke & her father had come after dinner. but as no body followed me, & the Carpet, which is very handsome, where I was, the ladies are busy embroidering for Count Blücher, for his yet dawn festival, the 50 anniversary of his wedding day, which will be on the 1 May next. I left them and listened to a long conversation between Seemann & Mr. Hagen regarding the Temperance Societies, of which, here in Altona already, the former is the main prop. The Altona & Hamburg Temperance Society prohibits only the use of brandy & similar spirituous liquors not of wine. I finally played a few rubbers at which with Mrs. Clemenson & the Reinecke, and walked home at 10 h. Immediately went to Bed & could myself up well. The Countess Blücher looks very poorly & old: upon her forehead she has a large blister plaster, she having burnt sore, which will not close, neither has she any teeth; her husband looks ~~old~~ more robust, tho' a fall with his horse, which he had last year, has pulled him down considerably. Thirty Ladies are embroidering for the Count & Countess a Carpet for the 1 May, as already said above, the directresses are: Mrs Ammemann, Mrs Stahlmann; Mrs Dohm & Mrs Bockelmann; these thirty ladies belonged to what is named and Altona's aristocracy; the natural Consequence has been that those who have not been included, have been rather offended, and now another Society has formed itself, also of thirty, with Mrs Gustav Wall & Mrs Doctor Hayek at the head, who are busy embroidering the backs of two arm chairs, red velvet with gold—

Sunday 1 March. I awoke this morning much better & almost quite well: only my throat seems to be a little swollen inside. My dinner upon, my breakfast consisting of a good number of cups of tea & three small loaves, the reading of three chapters in "les mystères de Paris" the writing of a short letter to Abell & Ford and of my diary have kept me fully occupied from 7 to 2 with the exception of a few minutes, when I called upon Mrs Reed & Mrs Hopf. I remained quietly at home the whole day, occupying myself very pleasantly & went to Bed at 10 h. Yesterday Count Blücher's birthday has further been celebrated by a dinner of the members of the Museum at Rainville's and by a ball of the civic guard in the theatre. — The Mr Hagen who was yesterday at Blumhoorts is a brother in articles of "cotton"

Saturday 2 March. I rose pretty well with a tickling pain in the throat, to remedy which I fomented at 8 o'Clock a small piece of flannel from Newyking, which I tied round. I then remained quietly at home, till it was time to drive in the omnibus to Hamburg: a little past 5 o'Clock I alighted at Reid's beautiful hotel in the Jungfernstieg, where Daniel Schuetze had invited a large party to dine with him. we were received in two anti-rooms. I was introduced to various old acquaintances, whom I had not seen for a number of years and whom I shall enumerate by & by. and at about 6 o'Clock, Schuetze took me, as in honor of whom the party was given, by the arm and led me to the dining Saloon, where the Table was laid out in the most splendid style. Every thing was as genteel as in a rich private gentleman's house. we began with oysters & Hock, then Soups and all the dishes, with which dinners are overcharged here, succeeded. Port & Madeira stood of course on the Table. Towards the end of the party champaign was rapidly poured out in quick succession by various servants out of livery which has been making much Noise of late both in the political & literary world. — I heard a melancholy piece of news about Schmidt & J. M. Boehringer, the little hunchbacked & clever man, Hamburg Consul in Valpar°, has stopt payments one day & shot himself the next. It was added, that he had advanced 200000 $ to a man in San Juan upon hides, which were not delivered and also that he had entered into extensive and disadvantageous Nitrate of Soda speculations —

Sunday 3d March. I rose early & after breakfast, passed the time partly reading, partly conversing, partly playing with the children, Alwin & Louisa. — At ½ to 12 a Droschka came to the door & in the same I drove to Albert Schmidt's, then to Gustav Schmidt's, I took a cup of Tea with his most amiable wife — to Johanna Limprecht's, where I was some time with him, his brother & mother in. law, before his pleasant wife came down, who had been busy up Stairs with her little sick child. — Further down the same Strasse, St Georg an der Alster, live Professor Wurm & his wife, formerly Jemima Tytler, whom I went to see; both very nice people. Finally I called upon Mr Hermann Berger — he himself was not in — a common looking by no means agreeable woman from Hanau. My intention had been to make four visits more, but it got too late & I drove home to old Mr Siemssen's in Altona. The air is mild, but the Streets are nearly impassable owing to the abominable Snow, which fills them with floods of mow water. At Mr Siemssen's we dined quite "en famille": the 5 ladies of the house, Lehmann & his sister, Siemssen, his wife, his 3 children & myself. Dinner was of course quite plain, no hard roast, afterwards Tea; and from the time, candles were brought in until I went away, near half past eight, Siemssen and afterwards Lehmann reading some foolish little things, written in the jewish & Berlin dated. The remainder of the Evening I passed at the lawyer Stahlmanns who gave a so called musical Soirée. The persons present were: Retired Beher & his Lady, he is polite towards me, but it would almost appear to me as if she avoids my conversation; Christiansen Baas who is always very friendly; Christiansen & Christmas Callisen with two daughters & companion; Johannsen Schmidt, an elderly lady, sister in law of Commissionair Stahlmann, a Miss Tunch, a Miss Vogler, Miss Auguste Baas & Miss Wilhelmine Kinsch, with these two last young ladies I talked a little, and the ladies of the house, Mrs Stahlmann & Miss Tetzoff, who are quite ladies of [illegible]. I had little opportunity of conversing with them. The Gentlemen were: the landlord, lawyer Stahlmann, his brother, Mr Hillers Cousin Reinecke, Beher Hallisen, the auctioneer Behre, a Mr Gulich, Mr Lang the lawyer, Andreas Donner, a Mr Markus & myself. Miss Tetzoff played & sang, she plays pretty well, the songs, Mr Markus played & Andreas Donner sang very prettily. I amused myself pretty well & was home a little past 11 o'Clock.—

Monday 4 Mch. I am almost quite well again, the weather is mild, the Streets full of water.— I took my Danish & Latin Lessons and was busy the whole morning till near 1 o'Clock, when I looked in at Sievking's and drove in an Omnibus to Kramer's in Hamburg, at whose house a Dinner party of 22 or 24 persons assembled, who they all were, I really cannot tell: I only know that at dinner I sat near Mrs Kirchner (formally Madchen Handel) a very good & pleasant woman, with whom I conversed very agreeably, her husband and his brother, a Doctor Prisson, far from disagreeable,— a Mr Carstens, with whom I conversed a great deal after dinner in the smoking room, where the Tobacco smoke was so strong, as to make my eyes water,— his wife,— Mr Moll & his Lady,— an old Mr Langhans, who had not seen me for more than 30 years,— a Mr Chevallier, quite an old man who apparently is approaching his dotage, [illegible] daughters of his and various other persons made up the party — with Mr Stoll, Mr Langhans & the Oberalt. I played 6 rubber whist, they all left at about 11 & I soon went to bed —

Tuesday 5 Mch. I intended an Omnibus at Kramer's house, which (the Omnibus) just ran down to Altona at Schaub's, where I took my Francis Lepsius looked me at Mr Henry Sieveking & returned to my lodgings. The ice in the Elbe is broken up yesterday. I am told various steamers have come up: the weather is mild & is thawing continually. I remained the whole day quietly at home until in the Evening, when I went as usually to old Mr Reinecke's. Mr Semper whose confinement is now near at hand, & her husband were not there, but in their stead Mrs Mr H. Ehrenberg. Mr Kramer has received a letter from Hermann Reinecke of 18 Nov. he had actually left Galle, & my wife was thinking of going to Cherrillos. The Brainers yesterday have broken down the Ice, which was already rather soft.

Wednesday 6 Mch. I took my Parish & Paris Lepsius, otherwise I did not go out at all, not even to Sieveking, but was busy bringing up my Journal & Ledger. I then read a little "les mystères de Paris" and when I left off, went to Bed, it was 2 o'Clock. In the morning I had two pleasant visits, Alfons Schmidt came to me in a Droschke from Hamburg, also the Egyptologist Dorbelmann, whose Nose is being eaten up by a Cancer. He told me, that the Chief Clerk at his house is now transferred from Friday to Saturday & invited me to dine with them on Sunday.

Thursday 7 Mch. The Elbe is now a great measure free of Ice; the weather is getting fine. Mr Field, the Italian master, again did not make his appearance, tho' I have written him a Note the other day. it is clear, he will not come. I staid at home, busy writing, till noon, when I paid a visit to Sieveking & his wife: on my return I found a card with Mr Semper under her name left the letter. Otto Curt and I found Mr Semper under her name left the letter. Otto Curt and Objects (Here are the children of Semper's first wife, Betty Wegner) play a game of Lotery, which contains much geographical information and afterwards a similar game, which contains historical Information. I am much pleased with the kindness with which Mrs Semper treats these children and wonder at the great many things, which Otto, a lively boy of a little more than 13 years of age, is already acquainted with. When Semper, the father, came, we went down Main to the drawing room and played Whist till past 11. I lost 2, gained 1 game. Mr Semper withdrew at about 10½, at home I translated german into Danish till 1 o'Clock.

~~Thursday~~ Friday 8 March. whilst I was taking my danish lesson from 8-9 from Mr Bark, Semper sends word, that at 4 o' Clock in the morning his wife had been very happily delivered of a little Boy. After my danish master was gone, I went to Steckling's house, but became 9 h. and to a Stationer's Brannen, so that it was as late as 11, when I came home. I now turned myself with writing a number of invitations for a dinner party, which I intend giving here at Rainville's on the 16th. The Post put me ~~Unoccupied~~ till 2½, when I sent out these notes with the words, Jaa Kinds. The weather is beautiful, & I took then a walk in Rainville's garden, which was since I have removed hither has been filled with Snow. - even to day some parts were not yet quite free of the same. I met the two young daughters of Knauer and also the sisters of Clemenson with their governess. I spoke a few words with Maria Knauer, a very nice girl. - When I left in 1823, the two gardens of Klausing & Rainville were thrown into one, they are as yet not divided, and when walking all over both. I could not help feeling some melancholy, when I remembered, how often in the times of my childhood, my dear mother & sisters have walked up & down the very last avenues close to the shore of the Elb, on fine summer evenings, quite solitarily & quietly, whilst now one for a carriage road and the End of the said road will annihilate her very vestige of Country, & instead of their delicious abroad and the singing of the nightingale, we shall have here a locomotive & the shrill whistle of the Steam engine. The age of Poetry has no fairy Ladies dwarfies elves fond of walking in the shadow of trees, of gazing at the moon and of listening to the nightingale. In Mackoff's garden labouring men are busy pulling down the Corner, the South Eastern, of Rainville's garden will be swallowed up by the railroad, which, as far as I understand, will be carried on in a S. Western direction to the very margins of the Elb, close to the limekilns of Stublemanns. Large heaps stones are brought down from Tetschen, they are lying on the beach and will serve for the building of the quays, Steinsetzen, which will be carried much further into the Elb than where they are now. To the Westward Rainville's gardens confines with that of Salomon Heynes who in 1814 bought the ancient Stern mansion called "Stadtmeister Berg", where, when child, I have gone many a day to catch butterflies. I dined, read "les mysteres" wrote some more considerations to my Hamburg friends & new my diary. To day it had just struck 6, when I lighted my Candles & wrote an English letter to Herrmann Reinecke & went at 9 o'Clock to Kramer's, where a rather larger party than usually assembled round the supper table. Mr & Mrs Kramer, their two amiable Daughters, their two sons, old Reinecke & Wilhelmine, Edward, Surgeon at Stublemanns, old Libby, Wenkel & his wife, a Miss Hellingsbrecker, the female companion of the house & myself. Nothing worth mentioning occurred.

Saturday 9 March. A strong S.W. Wind blows against my windows my room will not get warm. — With the exception of my going out for a few moments, to Steinberg's Conrad's house & home I remained quietly at home till about 7 h in the Evening, when I went to Reinecke's, at whose house I took tea & played games at chess against old Jones from Standing. We left at an early hour, and a little past 10. I was in bed. I finished the fourth and last volume of "les mystères de Paris", the latter part of which, compared to the previous ones, is rather tame. In the morning I had a letter from a Gibbes & a private one from M. Gibbs, who offers me a place in his London House with a Salary of 1200 £. His letter is couched in the most flattering terms, and in his absence he offers me the management of the house. However the reality is, as far I can see, that Robertson is about leaving & that I am to be the head Clerk. I intend refusing their offer, but lay myself open for entering again their Establishments.

Sunday 10 Abt. Smarted 7 after breakfast I drove in an omnibus to Post in Brit's hotel in the Jungfernstieg, here Schuette's pleasure are stored, he had almost every thing before me, he asked me my opinion, he gave me his, and I believe, the result will be, that he & Schuette continue together, and that in long he will again return to Valp., to take the management of the house there. For a moment I called upon Kramer and afterwards to Altona, when I first called upon Semper, who was not in, then upon the young lawyer Sillem; he & his lady are very nice people & I remained with them a pretty considerable time. Theodor Reincke & I did not find at home and at Knaust's only the daughter Marica, who was taking care of a little brother & sister of her. Mr & Mrs Semper were gone to their garden in Eppendorf with a few friends. At old Mr Siemsen's I staid a pretty long time, a Mr Collet, an English architect was with him, but left soon, gradually the various ladies of the house made their appearance, also Schumann and the young doctor Siemsen, son of Eduard Siemsen of London, who appears to me to be very self sufficient and who for this reason does not please me. At Henry Siemsen's I met him again, and after Theodor Reincke & his wife had come, I staid there a long while. At home I remained about two hours & there would be a small dinner party at Ingenieur Wolff's. Buddenbrooks he introduced me to the lady, a pleasant woman, whom he also regarded me to lead to the dinner table. There were besides us, Capt Klarmann, Ingenieur Capt. Fiedler, he with the crooked neck, Pr.

Reinecke & his wife, who sat to my left, Mr Consul Peel, the editor of the "Allgem. Zeitung" & his sister, Miss Buddenbrooks, the Ingenieur Wolff's sister, of course an elderly lady, her eldest daughter, not handsome, but lappar[illegible] in my annuals, her youngest daughter Francisca, pretty, about to be confirmed, and her son, a boy. Dinner was plain, but conversation pleasant & general. After dinner we had coffee, conversation in the smoking room, tea & again conversation, which was in a great measure carried on by the gentlemen by themselves. Mr Buddenbrooks is a pleasant well informed man. I spent the evening agreeably enough, but not particularly so. There was also this day a small party at Professor Behn's. I left with Reinecke & his wife at 10 o'clock Monday 11 Aug. A very bad day with rain, then & then S.W. Wind. After having breakfasted at Henry Fletcher's, I drove in an Omnibus to Kramer's on Eimsbuttel, and with them and clergyman Geffcken & his wife in a Coach to Professor Wimer's, in his very small rooms, hardly large enough to turn about a party consisting of the following assembled, Kramer & his wife, Geffcken his wife, he pleasant, the rather insignificant, a Doctor Petersen rather at the Hamburger Gymnasium & his wife, both my plea but not disagreeable, a Dr Petermann, his wife, another young Dr. a Dr Schröder, who has an extensive boarding school & his wife, these eleven persons I merely saw and had no opportunity of forming an opinion of them, a Mr and a Miss Campe, Mr Reinhard & Mr Otto Speckter. Dinner not abundant, but good, wine served in a nice way. Room: to my right I had Miss Campe plain & insignificant, to my left Mr Otto Speckter, who is a very Henry Sieveking's. I was quietly at home busy reading to Johanna die Tristan, translating Danish & preparing myself for my Latin lesson. I did not even go to old Reinhardt.

Wednesday 13 Mch. I took my dansk & Latin lessons, spent some hours at the booksellers Arndt-Lorentz and at Mr Henry Sieveking's; on my return home Johannsen called upon me, and stayed a few hours, and I have done nothing else but reading the foregoing. - It is not my old hometown. The streets are partly dry, - the Elbe is nearly free of ice and the North winds allows vessels to go up and down the river, which looks very pretty. - The shares of the Altona Kiel Railroad, which stood, when I arrived, at about 90 have yesterday been sold at 110. - Wandrey as Prussian Consul sells for the town of Altona, Zerrenner for the Danish government, Baur for the Town of Kiel. - The major part of orders for purchasing come from Saxony & Berlin. - A Branch from Rendsburg is to join the main railroad at Elmshorn; also the signatures for this branch are already selling at 67 premium.
At 7 h in the evening I drove in an omnibus to Hamburg, fetched from Kramers the keys of the house door and went to Alfred Schmidt, at whose house, besides his brother Gustav and myself, the only warm people, 9 old bachelors assembled; after having taken tea, we played short whist, rather high, and then sat down to a cold supper; we had punch and some rather decent stories; there were Mönch, Sonnenschmidt, Mielck (Alfred's partner) Kraft, a Mr Palm, a Mr Hamburg & his companion (Mr. Gustav have been up & down the African coast) and one more, whose name I do not recollect. - It was nearly 1 when we broke up. Mönch, a little in the wind, accompanied me to Kramer's door. I went to bed & was immediately asleep.

Thursday 14 Mch. After breakfast I left Kramers as early as I could to the engravers Buchan about my coat of arms, which I have invented for my carriage which is building in Halifax.
I also looked in at a jewelry bookseller, Pollack N° 46 at the Stramm dinner party, in the course of the previous days, Laeisz, Mr Siemssen & I had arranged, how the gentlemen should divide, &c. &c. Day I wrote my observations upon cards, which I just rounded the Table, sat out by Messrs, the present Landlord of Rainville's Hotel, in the large dancing saloon. I had arranged with Messrs, that, exclusive of wine, he should place an excellent dinner on the Table, he should pay the candles, the fuel, give coffee, cake & tea, for 6 Currency a head.

Thus I had nothing to trouble my head about and occupied myself in the morning as usually, writing & reading till about 2 o'Clock, when I dressed and sat down in the large rooms at Rainville's, to receive the Company. The following head of mine I have Lawyer Muhlmann, being engaged at a party in Hamburg. — Tiedeber because his health does not allow him going to any dinner party. — Lawyer Tiedeber on account of his delicate health. — Krames, being engaged at an usual Club of his. — Herrmann Dreyer, having to attend to a meeting of the "Convent-Richter" of Hamburg, to which number he belongs. — Pet. having started for Bremen. — and Bauch, my fellow lodger, because he is too stout. — This very morning I received Notes from Edward Rincke & Georg Baur, and finally just before dinner, a verbal message from Sommer in Half Mahlmann all three excusing themselves with illness. — The first, who made his appearance, was old Senator Hesse, who wanted to have some chat with me by ourselves, the next was Fischer, then Schröder, young Tiedeber, after which they commenced dropping in in rapid succession. Peter Gustav Schmidt & Wandelly came, when we had already sat down at 4 the waiter told me, that dinner was on the Table, I then first went to Lindemann & Dauer & Mitterdorf Baur, requesting them to show the way. We formed walked a few steps a head of the table, when I pointed down the Hesse, who then had to the Saloon, my place had been, that Dreyer sitting opposite to me should have Hesse to his, & I old

Next to my right, Donner as there two did not separate, my arrangement was a little disturbed, and we sat down as follows:

Herr Siemering

Jean Donner — Johannes Lingnicke Kramer — Gustav Schmidt Wm from Baden — Schuster Rosenberg — Lehmann
Fischer — Wannholtz Ammann — Senator Henry Daues young Gibb, son of G.W. — old Fritz, Rathsherr, Daues J — C.H. Donner, Sen[ior] mbr Senator Hesse — Mr Hagen, Consul Daniel Schutte — Schütte Semper
Conrad Donner — H. Rauenhorst Otto Reincke — Bernhard Donner Arthur Donner — Jean Donner
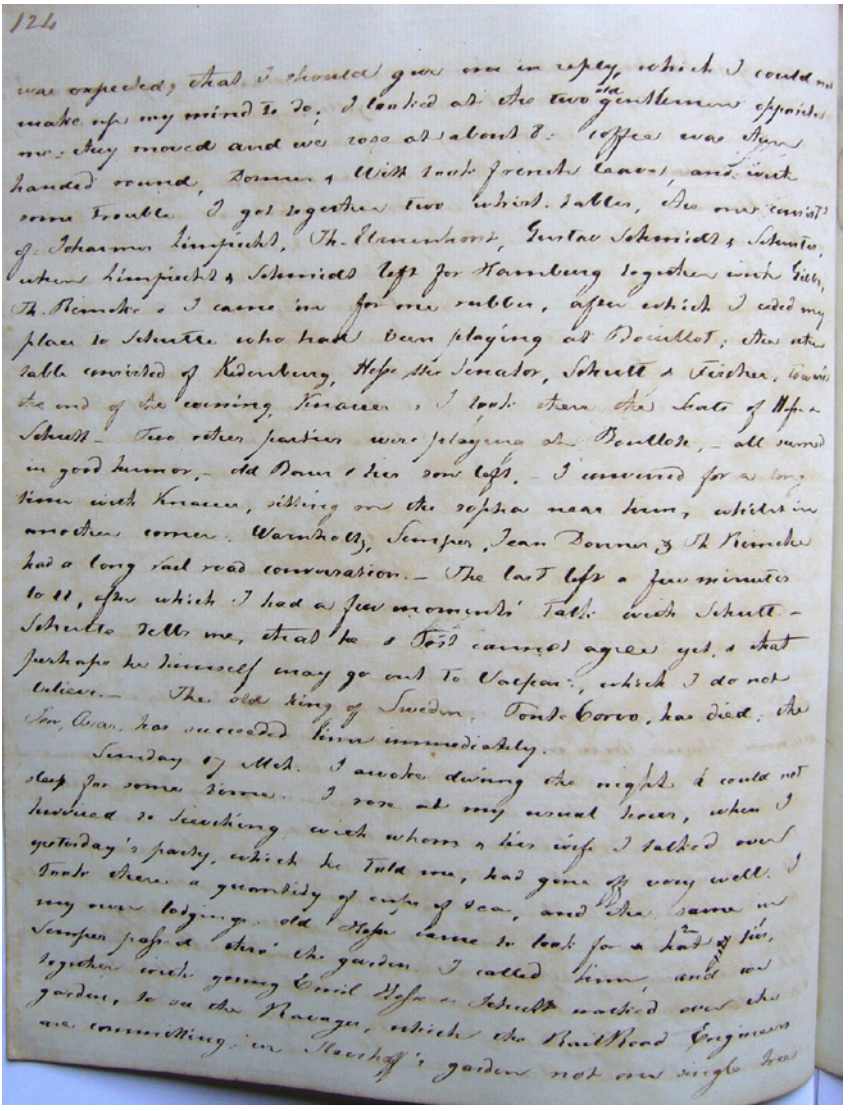
George Hesse



Heinrich Reincke

Every body says, that the dinner was good: by the copy of Meyer's account shows, how much wine was taken:

30	Diviers c.	℔	180	℔
12	Cotten Mad[r]	℔	4.8

At dinner I conversed of course a good deal with old Hesse & with young Gibb. Donner & Daues were also in a very comical, (too) jubilation. Donner was very affable towards me. He took with me a glass of wine drinking the health of the daughter, Mrs Lehmann. He wish me the health of Mrs Witt. — Kramer gave my health, Ammann that of Mrs Witt and I do not know, who of my daughters. — It was expected, that I should give one in reply, which I could not make up my mind to do. I looked at the two gentlemen opposite me: they moved and we rose at about 8: coffee was then handed round, Sommer & Wilh took French leave, and without more trouble I got together two whist tables, the one consisting of Johannes Limpricht, Th. Klencke sen., Gustav Schmidt & Schmeltz, the other Limpricht & Schmidt left for Hamburg together with Fritz, Th. Klencke & I came in for one rubber, after which I ceded my place to Schmeltz who had been playing at Boullott: the other table consisted of Kirchberg, Hofe the Senator, Schmidt & Fischer, towards the end of the evening Finance: I took leave of the Lady of Hofe Schmidt — Two other parties were playing at Boullott, — all were in good humour, — old Baum & his son left. — I conversed for a long time with Finance, sitting on the sofa near him, whilst in another corner Warnholtz, Semper, Jean Sommer & Th Klencke had a long sad read conversation. — The last left a few minutes to 11, after which I had a few moments' talk with Schmidt — Schmidt told me, that he & Fazy cannot agree yet, & that perhaps he himself may go out to Caspar, which I do not believe. — The old king of Sweden, Gustavus, has died, the Son Oscar, has succeeded him immediately.

Sunday 17 Mch. I awoke during the night & could not sleep for some time. I rose at my usual hour, when I breakfasted & smoking with whom & his wife I talked over yesterday's party, which he told me, had gone off very well. I took there a quantity of cups of tea, and the same in my own lodging. — old Hofe came to look for a lady & tie, Semper passed thro' the garden. I called him, and we together with young Emil Hofe & Schmidt walked over the gardens, to see the Ravage, which the Rail Road Engineers are committing in Moorhoff's garden not one single tree departure from Lima, when for the time being Peru seemed to be entirely quiet and submitting to the authority of Vivanco, with the exception of the department of Trujillo, which the Ejpd had been sent with a pretty considerable force, and as in the letter received, no mention has been made of this expedition, I suppose, that Ejpd succeeded in subduing the insurgent spirit, without any difficulty. Tacna had never cordially submitted to Vivanco, and thus, as my son Juan writes me under 2 June, it declared for Torrico, some troops which belonged to Ferreira Castilla's corps, passed over to Torrico, and with the remainder Castilla saw himself under the necessity of retiring to Arequipa; all the generals & officers, whom Vivanco had banished to Chili, excepting Bermudez, amongst whom Ramon Castilla and José Rufo are those of the greatest Note, had returned to Peru, landed in Arica & joined Torrico in order to subdue them entirely which, who amounted altogether to about 6000 men. Ormeño Guarda left Callao on 23 June in the Steamer with 600 men a similar number of Troops being embarked on board the Junguy & the Limeña. The ports of Arica & Iquique Vivanco blockaded with some of his vessels. On 18 Sept. Juan writes that Torrico accompanied by San Roman had fled to Bolivia but that Ramon Castilla was in possession of Tacna at the head of about 2000 men: how he brought together such a force I cannot conceive. La Fuente was quietly in Chili; of Vidal no mention whatever is made. Juan further says in the same letter: "Since your departure numberless arrests have "taken places, amongst whom Nolea, who is in prison since "3 months. Mr. La Fuente, Mr. Riede & Mr. Castilla, all three "sons of the generals of the same Names have shutteries in "their house, in consequence of the confessions of various, who "have stated that these persons had given them money in "order to assassinate Vivanco. Guerra, the Charge d'affaires for Bolivia. Guerra after having asked for his passport, had left Lima with the declaration that he had been infamously treated by the Peruvian Government & that his government would take signal vengeance." On the 6th Col. Garland informed me of the death of La Torre, the minister of finances, Vivanco's brother in law, adding that Iquique & Arica conspiracies had been discovered & two officers executed. — On the 8th strong Guard to Mequinez, and tho' it was feared at first, her life would have been sacrificed, he was ultimately treated with very kindness back by Caïd Hillo, and he is now considered quite safe." — To continue with my diary. — After having been busy the whole day & quietly dined at home, I went in the Evening to old Blanchi's, several of the usual number were wanting. Mr Kinnaird & I sat on the sofa together, it was quite an understanding Evening. Tomorrow my Gentleman called upon me in the morning. —

Wednesday 21 March. It snowed the whole day long. I was busy bringing up my diary for the month of January and at 7 o'Clock went to George Dawe's, where a nice & genteel party assembled, viz: Mr Stirling, Mr Wilmot, Lehmann & Gardiner & Heyde & lady, Bernard Dawe & lady, a Mr Rapsamonge (Mrs G. Dawe's brother) & wife, Mr H. Montgomerie & wife, (these four from Hamburg), Hayne, Kinnaird, Mr & Mrs G. Dawe & myself. — Here at George Dawe's every thing looks so very genteel. Here are also two somewhat different faces from those which one is in the habit of always meeting in the Altona Societies, & there I am very fond of being seen. — When the gentlemen took the ladies to the dinner table, I was one of the last who entered. Mrs Dawe was still sitting & there I offered her my arm. My place was therefore nearly at the head of the table, to my left Countess, next to her Doctor Hayde, — to the right of Mrs Dawe an empty Chair for Semper who was prevented from coming by his being occupied, as director of the Rail Road, to value some property in conjunction with various others, — next to the empty Chair, Hayne, with whom Mr Dawe seems to be very well acquainted and accordingly conversed a great deal. With me she conversed therefore not quite so much as I could have wished, but having on the other Side Countess I could not be placed more to my liking. — In the smoking Room Bernard Dawe & myself, sitting with Hayne the smoking Room Bernard Dawe & myself, sitting with Hayne in the Sopha, had a tremendous yawn; then Tom passed away very quickly fell on mine again upstairs, when I had to sit down at whist with Hayne, Meyenbecher & Hayek, the other played a round game. We left at somewhat past 10, I having amused myself very fairly. In bed I finished the fourth volume of Wuttke's year till nearly 4 o'Clock in the morning.

Thursday 21 March. To day I am here 3 months, it is the commencement of spring. The ground is covered with Snow, but the sun shines warmly, the fine weather induced me to pay the long promised visit to William Matthiessen, who lives N 23 in the so called Grindelhof Weg, which is a prolongation of the Johannis Strasse in a more W. Northern direction. In this neighbourhood many good looking & starcked houses are built, here about new houses are springing up and hence a little to the N. E. towards the Schlachthof, a the large piece of ground which Baumann has purchased not long ago and which he is parcelling out for houses to be built upon. Also in Hamburg those parts of the town which were burnt down in May 1842 are being rebuilt very rapidly and in a manner, on account of their great height, they being almost invariably 5 stories high, as to give room for, it is said, 3000 people more than the number which lived on the same quarters before the fire. I can therefore hardly form an idea, where all the people will come from, to occupy these new buildings. Wilhelmine Matthiessen lives in a small but apparently pretty comfortable house with a fine view over all the surrounding country & also a middling sized garden behind the house. Her husband is in reality doing nothing, except acting as agent for his brother Adolphe, whose considerable fortune he lays out to the best as well as he can; but he having inherited some little money from his father, he manages to live upon the Interest, & is apparently and I believe also in reality, quite happy. some may call this Philosophy, others Lazyness. he himself was in his dressing gown, his wife, Emma Rodde, looked very well in her plain but [illegible]

I remained with them about an hour conversing, when Matthison accompanied me first to the new Church yard, which is very prettily enough laid out in various compartments divided from each other by avenues. Here we walked over the open ground which forms the Northern frontier of Altona to the railroad, where number of people are now working raising the ground. It runs in a straight line past about the village of Langenfelde where it passes the highroad to Kiel just leading to the Westward the public house called the Rahlenstaung, to the Grasweg, which is the Western extremity of the Königsstrasse, across the same and then finishes in the open space South of the Western extremity of the Dallmall, which lies about in front of the Indian which Ahrensmann has purchased from Jungfel, and where the Railroad Station is to be built. Over a stile I entered the Altonaer church yard from the Grasweg, & passing over the same I emerged in the high road and was just on the point of entering Rainvillers garden, when I met Linaeus with whom I turned back, we met again Mr. Ahrensmann, a strange but much of hand lady, but good looking devil & not disagreeable and with her, her little girl Margaret & a French Bonne we entered the garden purchased by her husband; this is very extensive and will always remain a handsome property, even though the rail road & the carriage road towards the Elb will take off a considerable part of the same. — We accompanied Mr. Ahrensmann to the door of her house. — Old Mr. Clemenhorst gave a dinner party, to which I was not invited, but she had sent me an invitation to last Sunday, which I could not accept — I remained at home the remainder of the day, occupying myself in different ways, but lost too much of my time with reading "1000 a year" which is certainly very instructive, but occasionally a little drawn out.

Friday 29 March. This morning I wrote amongst others a letter to Crenkelen, who also sent me ad. the regard of Mr Henry Edwards the drawing of a Great of the England Wife, which is really very kind &

Mondrive. At about 3 h I called upon Sieveking. Mrs Sieveking scolded me for my not having been there since Monday. Miss Petit was again there, she is spending Mrs Sieveking in embroidering her pearl of the carpet for Emmeline's Cradle. I drank with them more than an hour. Whilst taking my solitary dinner I took up Wilhelm a year and did not leave off till I had finished it at 8 h in the morning, when of course I retired to Bed.

Saturday 27 Mch. This morning I was occupied a long time with examining & sorting the contents of three portfolios, which had been preserved in the large Box in Sieveking's house. I destroyed many translations of mine but of course kept, what I thought interesting amongst which Letters of my dear sister to me, — Letters of mine to Maria from Woodford — & fragments of diaries. — With the exception of my calling upon Sieveking I was quietly at home and went to bed at an early hour. I commenced a great undertaking, viz: an Italian Abstract of Allen's & Dahlmann's Danish history.

Sunday 28 Mch. I was busy in with the my new work until it was time to dress & to go out; my first call was upon Sieveking, where he & the ladies vary in their kindness towards me. Then I went to old Reinecke's in the Ellerstr. Wilhelmine was not in, but the old gentleman was up stairs & Edward still higher up in his rooms. — Thence over the way to Baumholtz, he was playing below with his two boys, but he immediately followed me up stairs, and both he & his wife were very kindly towards me. Old Mrs Clemendorf was with them her grand daughter Malvina, that she begged me to excuse her, she was up stairs & did not wish to make her appearance. — At Bechtelmann's I arrived at a for the family rather important moment: not long before they had returned from the principal Church, where the younger daughter had been confirmed, jointly with about 180 girls & boys, by the first amongst the girls, there had been besides Miss Bechtelmann, Miss Bertha Sieveking & a Miss Blacker, the second daughter of Lewis Blacker who died some time ago, Mother Lucy

I closed my Call with Theodor Clemendorf's, where meeting old Simon a= fterwards conversing with him & his wife, I spend a very pleasant hour.
I remained at home about an hour and at 8 o' Clock went to Hoffs, where I arrived rather too soon; I was received up stairs in the comfortable Room where I had been before, by Miss Mary Hoff, a very pleasant unaffected girl, who has rather a plain face, but is well shaped; soon afterwards Mr Hoff entered, she is a clever woman of the world, speaks french very well, but towards me she seems to me to be not quite so agable, as to some other of the visitors who were the professor Gabler (as I now the third Sunday morning I met him at different houses), a frenchman from Hamburg, a grey haired little man, who speaks german pretty fluently & who was by no means disagreable: however on his neck, as well as on account of the spaniard, whom I had already got acquainted with at Hoffs Ball & with whom I conversed in Spanish, a good deal of french was spoken; there there were as well Behrend from Danzig, a pleasant young man, whom I took to be young Dr Vienking, Daniel Schutte who is here quite at home, and the two sons Emil & George. At dinner, which was good, but not my particular, no Champaign was given — Mr Hoff headed the table, to her right Gabler, Schutte, Spaniard, old Hoff, Behrend, George Hoff at the foot, Emil, I, Mary, the frenchman & again Mr Hoff. With the young lady I conversed quite pleasantly; — we withdrew to a room close by, where coffee was handed round; the door was shut, in the twinkling of an eye the door was re opened and all appearance of dinner had disappeared; some gentlemen went to the smoking room, others, amongst whom I, remained & conversed a good deal with the ladies, chiefly the frenchman. The Spaniard & I together for a short time, at 9 we sat down to Cards, Miss Hoff made the tea, & at about 11 I left, well pleased. It was a very bad night; the wind blowing, the rain pelting against the windows, then I suppose, the tea, which I had taken, kept me awake till a late hour to her and amused myself very well conversing with Mr Clemenhorst After dinner & coffee was over I had a pleasant talk with Haynes Sampers, when we returned. It was now nearly nine, Theodore Clemenhorst & myself, who were afterwards joined by Mr A. Samper, got told of Mr Arnemanns, she was in high spirits and I really amused myself conversing with her. By chance I mentioned Michlenbeck, which had once, I believe, belonged to Arnemanns and then she began relating various adventures, which had happened to them there. The next day I heard from Mr Heerking, that Mr Knaake had observed, & very properly so, how impolite Mr Arnemanns had been in leaving the ladies & conversing with the gentlemen. At last Mr Arnemann joined the ladies, I spoke with Mr Clemenhorst senior, Mr Knaake & Wildenmeier and finally again, till I left, almost the last, with Mr Arnemann.

It was now about 10 h., but I had so ill inclination to sleep, that I finished with Haynes many pieces of a dozen papers. The first pas[s]ed before the new house of Baur, then a short distance on the Stollbeck road and finally as far as the Rathsfüllen[illegible] & back again. It was about midnight, when I came home. Yesterday & to day there has been the Altona Fair, which takes place four times a year. The market place is filled with miserable booths, where, as well in the neighbouring streets many valueless things are sold. The weather is getting mild, there is no ice in the Elb & hardly any snow in the streets.

Wednesday 17 March. At about 9 o Clock I went to professor Brandes's house (id est, who teaches me latin) and with him to the room of Selecta (the first high in the College) where the Scholars were examined. Since I visited this room, or rather this Class, which I left in 1814 at midsummer, Isthamie, no other alteration has taken place in the same except the removal of the small Gedrung. desk (Pultpult) which stood between the Gymnas and also a small Lange in the Shafts of the Calesch. Besides myself, only the Prinz Taubman & Fabricy Klawier were present, the latter left soon. — This Examination was commenced by a small latin speech of Director Eggers', then followed the examination of the first Class, Selecta, in Herodotus (Greek) and Tacitus (Latin) by Saunders, these scholars are about 18 to 20 years old, and some of them affect the students' dress, long hair, the so called german coal, the thick collars, frangirgedrehte, with none or only a bit of a neckcloth. There were only 3 or 4 of them and a few of them I thought * * pretty well advanced. — Next followed the Class of Prima with about the same number of Scholars. — They first were examined in Homer (Greek), then in Virgil (Latin) which some of them translated very fluently & prettily. Schwebel examined them in French: they pronounced very fairly & translated well. Those of Selecta first had also examined in Danish. — Those of Secunda were the last, about 10 or 12 little boys of 12–14 years of age. I was astonished to see how much they knew of latin, also of geography they knew a good deal. At 1 o'clock it was over, in the afternoon from 3 to 5 the lower Classes were to be examined. — This Collegium will now be regulated upon a new plan. Selecta is abolished, & the five Classes, of which it is to consist hereafter, are called Prima, Secunda, Tertia, Quarta, Quinta. — Senator Hoyer paid me a visit which lasted nearly an hour; when he was gone, I took a hasty dinner, paid a visit to Seemanns and took the omnibus which drives to Hamburg at 23 m. past 6. I drove to the Thalia Theater, where I got a seat in the first Row of boxes, the third row of Seats in N. 11, where, in order to see what was going on in the Stage, I was obliged to stand. — The house is rather small, but very prettily arranged, decorated & painted. It looks light, nothing clumsy. In the pit there are only five or six rows of seats for sitting, between the pit & the orchestra is the so called "Fangnet", which costs 2½ ß, which is also the

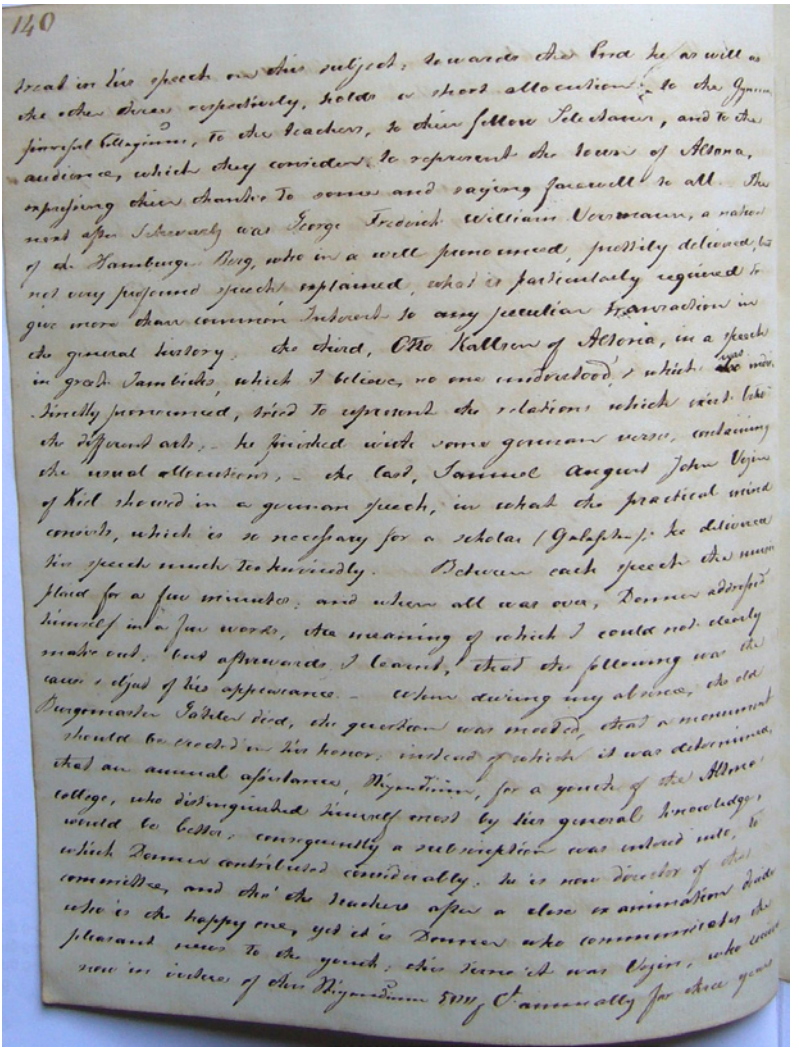
join in the first tier of boxes, in the pit and boxes and in the balcony, which is on a level with the first tier, which is in front of the stage and which then extends in one row of seats before the boxes, the difference between the boxes & the balcony, is that the former are separated from each other by low bars, whilst in the balcony and in rear the others merely with the seats' arms between them. — The stage boxes cost 9/, the 2d tier of boxes & the amphitheatre, which, I suppose, is the same as the balcony in the first tier, 6/, pit 10/, gallery 5/. The house was quite full. The piece performed, a comedy, called "Doctor Wespe" with which I was not particularly pleased, notwithstanding there being two strangers who performed: Mr. Schneider — D. Georges & Mr Raeder, both who are considered good actors — In the Omnibus in which I drove home, I broke a glass, for which I had to pay a Mark, and home & to Bed. —



Thursday 28 Oct. I took my dutch & Italian lessons and occupied myself various ways until it was time to dress. With Sievekings I went to Commissionsrath Buhl-mann's, where we sat down as follows: Empfehlungen Schneider / who is the Mr Buhlmann's sister in law & lives with him / as the head of the table; she is very quiet, to her left Frances, Miss French / Line, her companion, as quiet as she / Sievekings, Mrs Knauer, Herr Buhlmann, Mrs / Charles / Buhlmann, old Libbie at the head of the Table, Mrs Warnholtz, Charles Buhlmann, Mr Percy Sievekings, myself, Miss Garstone Tetzoff & Count Reinecke & I conversed very pleasantly on both sides, with Miss Tetzoff & followed up a certain plan, that is to say, I took little notice of her at first, & then she came to, otherwise she is sometimes inclined to carry her head a little higher than she ought to. — We went up stairs to the smoking rooms and afterwards I played & lost various rubbers at whist, with Mrs Chas Buhlmann, Mrs Sievekings & Knauer. — I amused myself well enough — The weather is improving & getting milder. The view from my sitting room is lovely and the various steam boats, which are progressively going up & down the river, amused me above all. —

Friday 29 March. At 11 o'Clock I went to the so called "grossum Forsal", which is a fully large saleen in the "Store Vest Bygn", to hear the farewell speeches of four Scholars of the first Class, Selecta, who leave the College for an university. This Saleen is mostly white washed, as the one End are the Lecturing-Desk, painted white with some gild ornaments and covered to a small Estends with red colored with gelt fringes (they may also be gold for aught I know). The largest Stand on is destined for the professors, the lowest and which stands before the other, for the scholars. In the middle of the room a few rows of chairs & forms were placed, which were pretty well filled mostly with ladies. Here I also took my seat, between the audiences and the desks a small Space is left for the Gymnasiarchal Collegium, which consists of 4 Individuals, the president (Consul Stricker Altona) Dr. Rudolph Paulsen & Begemann & Landrath Beken, who are the superiors of the director & the other Teachers, and on the other side for them Teachers, amongst whom I observed Director Eggers, professor Francksen and also Gymnasial Damen. Soon then the four young men, who have to make their speeches, have their seats behind the Gymnasiarchal Collegium the other Scholastici. On both sides of the Lecturing Desks against the wall are hung up two large old paintings, the one representing King Frederick V, the other Christian VII. The four youths were dressed in black with white kid gloves, a dress hat and had in their pockets a few sheets of paper, written together, and a light blue cover, which contained their respective speeches. When every body had taken his seat, a small band of musicians, placed on a gallery opposite the Lecturing-desks, played a short while. Then, the first of the young men, Philip Henry Schwarz of Altona mounted the desk and in a Latin speech, which he pronounced distinctly but for the greater part read by of which I understood something explained the advantages of which the Altona college is to the fatherland; according to the will of a certain Stricker, who has left besides a certain sum of money, annually, (Stipendium) for the young Student, whom the professors consider worthy of the same, such youth is obliged to running. Before returning to my lodgings, I Walked myself a considerable time in Tivoli's, now Ammianus's, garden, where I looked on for a long time wondering at the progress, they are making with their rail-road works, or rather with their preparations for them. The weather was excellent, in my room the windows stood open and outside at about 2 o' Clock in the afternoon, the Therm. stood at 12° R. warmth equal to 59 F. Lyngby Bachelormann paid me a pretty long visit. I was busy studying Latin say Horace, & translating into Danish. Past half past 7 in the evening I went to Krauses, neither of the daughters was visible, Emily is unwell - there were Peders & his wife, both pleased me, old Mr Clemendorff, Theodor & his wife, Conge Bachelormann, Lübbe, Edward Reinhardt & myself. Mrs Peders made it more lively than usually & it was 11 when I came home.

Saturday 29 March. Yesterday I have forgotten to mention, that last Saturday the Labourers on the Rail-road made a strike, the Danish Dragoons were immediately called in and brought them to order. They complained, that their pay was not sufficient, - but did have been discharged, they receive hence forth 12 Sk daily - The plans & subscriptions for Danish Rail Roads in Holstein increase rapidly, the main road is the Kiel-Altona, which stands at 113; then there are to be: one from Ulzburg, joining in Eyhee, one from Neudorf, & the last which is hitherto brought in the Papirs is from Flensburg to Rendsburg. A new Russian Polish loan of 35,000,000 Rbl paying 4 % has been contracted in Berlin at 86 %, Sievecking says, that the Hamburg and London have taken considerable Interest in the same - Thorwaldsen, the famous sculptor, died in Copenhagen quite suddenly on 24 March old 73 years 6 m. 5 d; he was born 19 Dec 70. Dr Gadt has died 84 y old. The fellowbrother of the king of Sweden (Oxenstierna 8 March), general mayor de Canipe, likewise born in Jan. died on 20 March 79 year old. Praising Latin, Holland, and Translating yesterday into Danish occupied the whole morning. I dined at home & spoke as usually a visit to Henry by the manner in which I received his proposal, that I was not inclined to make him this advance. With the exception of my Latin Lesson at Frandsen's & a momentary Call at Svendsen's Corn & House, I remained quietly at home & occupied myself mostly with my Danish Translations. —

Tuesday 2 Apr. I took a long Danish Lesson, and from 10 to 11 my Greek Lesson at Schmidt's, after which I paid a visit to the two Misses Finke. — The weather is fine and Alsen has already been getting out all his small tables & chairs for the visitors, whom he now expects in his garden. — I was busy in my room till the Evening, when I went to the Mr Kaudts; several members of the family were wanting. Therese, who has a bad Cold and must keep her bed, Ludwig who remains at home, to keep her company, Mr Semper, who cannot leave the house yet, and Theopolda, Hedde's wife, who has been confined yesterday evening of a little Boy. In Jungfr's, now Ancumann's, garden, they have been blowing up the trees to day with Gunpowder.

Wednesday 3 Apr. Again a lovely morning, nothing can be more delightful than the View from my window. I took my Latin Lesson and was quite busy the whole morning. The English post brought me a letter from Mr William Gibbs in answer to mine of 17th, he writes very politely, says, that my objection founded upon my wife's determination to live in London is quite sufficient for my rejecting his offer, and adds that many difficulties are in the way to my occupying Hayne's Situation in Lima as I suggested to him. — I am by no means sorry, that I remain at least for the present still an independent man. — I only received Letters from my wife & Susan of 6th & 16th Dec. acknowledging receipt of my letter written from London 27th & 29th Sept. which must then have reached them in about 60 days. — After I had dined I heard some people, who were taking tea just before my window, speak French, I went out to see, who they were & they turned out to be the first actress from the Hamburg Thalia theatre, an elderly and two young French ladies) and found old M. Pinnebe, who was enjoying himself in the beautiful weather, admiring the delightful view over the Ill, which one can never get tired of, surrounded by a number of little ones: Minnie & Margaret Shoemakers, Malvina Lindau, Julius & Maria Warnholtz, Emily & Maria Kreamer, and the daughter Wilhelmina: all the young ones, but with Anna and the two latter I remained some time conversing. both are nice girls; how I like to see such a young girl as Maria Kreamer just blooming forth into womanhood; I cannot say, she is pretty, her Eyes are too prominent like her father's and her Teeth have too yellowish a tinge. — When they were gone, I wrote a letter to my wife, caused by heard some dainty words, & from 9h to about 10h took a walk down the pallmall, then as far as the forth mill, and in Painville's garden to the balcony at the pavillion; it was a splendid moonlight night; the moon's rays fell like silver upon the plaited Ill. Nature was in a state of the greatest quietness, very few or hardly any people were out to enjoy the beautiful evening. I recollected the scenes of my youth and how often, more than twenty years ago, I have been standing upon the same balcony, looking at & admiring the prospect before me in the same manner as I did this Evening. — In the morning I paid a visit to Miss Ulsh Thursday 4 Apr. Holy thursday. Quiet day as usual. Again a lovely morn, the sun shines merrily, but there is a little more wind than yesterday, which makes the Ill curl; its waves have a brownish look, and are generally seen of the waves are white crested. I had my lunch from 8 to 9; was then busy writing till nearly 12, when I called upon Siedhoff. Thence, his wife, is again unwell since Sunday. dressed, had some conversation with Warnholtz & his wife, who with their children were taking coffee in Painville's garden; he showed me a broker's Note for 25 Altona Kiel railroad shares sold by him, Warnholtz, who manages their business for the house of Altona in Hamburg, at 118 pCt. At a little past 8h Schiött, my fellow lodger at Mistow's, who by the bye is agent for Schimmelmann of St. Thomas and acquainted with all the first families of Hamburg mercantile Aristocracy, and I went together to Simonsen's Dinner, the party, which assembled, consisted only of Mr & Mrs Burchard Senr. Dexter Hayek, architect Hansen, Schiött & myself. Senr told us that four ladies, Hannchen Willink, Mr Hayek and old Mrs Amsinck had been prevented from assisting by indisposition, and Mrs Constances Amsinck by her husband's indisposition. We sat down.

Senr Senr was again as polite towards me as he was Mrs B. I in the beginning invited after my arrival, to Schiött Hansen drank the health of Theodor Amsinck this wife Dexter Hayek who have to day been married 10 years, also the health of Mr Wm & Mr Hayek. Dinner was not abundant, but well the wines we had, were only Claret, Madeira (which bottle Senr ordered to be placed near me, tho' I did not take more of it than the first glass) splendid red champaign, non mousseux, of which I took half a dozen glasses, and superior Bordeaux wines. Mr Burchard Senr was also very polite towards me, in the smoking room I had as usually my long yarn with Burchard, after which, exclusive of Burchard - played at Whist, for Sixpence we played a high game with double tricks and with jokers, with which very tricks, as well as we turned up, three aces, 4 ens, 2 or 4 honors, 7 or more trumps & in one hand, are paid extra, these fishes count points as well as the points of the games & rubbers, the rubber is 7 points: the points we played at 4/. I lost 56 of 14 Cr. We left past 11 & I must have well pleased, but could not sleep till a late hour, probably owing to the Tea. I had taken, as by myself in my own lodgings I do not take it, I am then not accustomed to it.

Friday 5th Sept. Whilst I was busy in my own room, my fellow lodger, Schiött, came in, to thank me for the 12/ lost yesterday, which I had sent him with a waiter, his object was probably to whisper

away the time, as, owing to to day being holy-friday, the inn-keeper ~~could~~ journeymen did not call them to Hamburg. We in not exactly proceed fund of talking it was or late as a quarter past 12, when we left the and I walked for a long walk. The weather was fine, not a cloud visible. The wind blew only gently sharply from the land, but as I walked windward, I had it on the back and did not feel much inconvenience from the same. Shortly after I had left Sainville's hotel, I arrived was to Ottensen and a town, called in my childhood the philosopher's walk but now altered a little, I took me to a somewhat high spot, where a mill, called the Roland Mill, stands. Here to it is a round shaped country house, formerly belonging to a certain Jelaner, now inhabited by the architect Hansen. Here is also a very deep gravel pit. From this spot one has a pretty extensive view. To the East ward the few steeples of Altona & Hamburg, to the South some of the mills & country houses which line the main road from Altona to Pinneberg are visible, to the Westward close by, a few thatched houses, which almost concealed by trees, form the village of Ottensen, there to the right more to the Northward, another village, which with its red tiled roofs looked quite gay, a few other villages to the North, then various windmills, which terminate round towards Altona finish the circle. It is true, that the trees are not yet covered with leaves and, though some fields & meadows are covered with young corn and grass, nearly are only just ploughed & look still brown, yet upon the whole I was much pleased with the looks of the country, the many trees, which are planted here & there, and above all the live hedges, so different from the nasty mud walls in Jena have a cheerful appearance. I enjoyed our hedges, small dikes, meadows & fields, sometimes the wet grass obliged me to return and I reached them after about half an hour's walk the red roofed houses, the looks of which I admired from a distance. On my arrival I was told on enquiry, that it is the village of Bramfeld. Judging from the looks of the houses, many of them must belong to People from Altona, Hamburg, also the thatched houses are large & look respectable, large panes of glass and Curtains as the windows are seen in many places. Today being such a close holy day, hardly any people were at work, all dressed neatly & cleanly, boys occasionally playing in the streets, and here & there a girl coming home from Church with her prayer-book in the hand. — From Bekenfeld a Carriage Road leads to Groß-Flottbeck, this village is also pretty extensive, but the houses do not lie so closely together as those in Bekenfeld, neither are here so many country houses belonging to Town people, on enquiring my way, I was told, that the one to the Northward led towards Ottensen, another to the West towards Blankenese by way of Osdorf, the third to the South towards Klein Flottbeck. I followed the latter, came close to a large building with a small Steeple square, of which I had still quite a faint recollection from my childhood, I learnt, that it then belonged to a certain Gerardt, now to a von Dalow from Mecklenburg. Klein Flottbeck is again much more frequented by town's people than Groß Flottbeck, I emerged at the back of Friedt's Jagdh. (the Flottbeck wood) passed the house of which has been Mr Cramer's where the two Armenian had been at school (see 21st Dec), but instead of taking the direction towards that Ville, I kept more inland and followed a Carriage Road, which runs of round run parallel with the main Turnpike road, & after a pretty long walk reached the village of Osdorf. I walked through the same and keeping a little to the left (to the right the road leads to Wedel) a few minutes longer walk took me to Dehnenbusch. here art has materially improved and transformed Nature. The Country is here not quite level, but a few sandy downs cause a little variety, in Town you would not even call them a Berg, hardly a Knuppe, but here they are ennobled by the name of mountains. — They are planted with various kinds of trees, particularly pine birches, tasteful gardens are laid out on the same, and beautiful houses built. The first, which struck me, lying at the top of a gentle ascent, I believe, the Rosenberg (rose hill) is that of Mr. nearly opposite the same on another hill are the buildings belonging to Klünder. I stopped there and wended my way to the top of the "Düsselberg", which, when a child, I had gone many a time with some other boys, to eat butter-flies, now on the top a pretty Inn is erected; it is built in a circular form, but the rooms are in my opinion rather too low. the landlord, to whom I made the observation, answered, that he had not built it higher, being fearful, that it would not have withstood the winds, which blow here with great violence. The view hence is splendid: just below lies the village of Blankenese most picturesquely; the fortunes streets wind themselves and up & down the hills or downs, upon which the village is built. when I left, the houses were thatched: now they are almost without any exception covered with red tiles and built of bricks: during my absence it has been twice destroyed by fire. further on than the village, appear some buildings belonging to Baur's garden, just peeping forth from the surrounding trees, and thence forward only trees & bushes, belonging to the various country houses lying on that direction; turning the eye a little more to the right, you have the magnificent Elb, enlivened by vessels, with the Hannoverian shore: on a clear day the Staple of Lüneburg are visible from here: nearer the steeple of Harburg is visible then follows the "Vierlanden", the bay, which the Elb forms nearly opposite Altona, and sundry villages with which I am not yet exactly acquainted: Altenwerder, Moorburg, Finkenwerder &c: exactly opposite Blankenese I noted a steeple, which belongs to the Church of Neuenfelde. then by a small river, called the falls into the Elb, and near its mouth is a spot called "Im

Quay, where in former years many travellers used to pass over from to Blankenese. now the route goes generally over Harburg to Hamburg the little river, the , comes down from Bergedorf, the Steeple of which place are also visible from the Sichtberg & with a spyglass I distinguished those of Hamburg. On the Holstein side to the Westward from Blankenese extend sandy hills, the nearest of which is called the Mastberg, a german mile from Blankenese lies Wedel close to the Elb and further on, but more inland Uetersen, looking from the Sichtberg Northward, first the road to Wedel and then the hill with Reimers's buildings completes the panorama. I got a plain dinner, consisting of cold veal, potatoes and gherkins (10ßl) and two large glasses of white french wine (Graves), which, conversed much with the landlord, who told me, that sometimes on a fine Sunday in Summer perhaps a thousand people frequent the Inn, of whom by far the greater part come by Steamer from Hamburg. I left the Inn at 4 o'clock and meandered now very quietly & leisurely thro' the village of Blankenese; I refreshed myself a long while in the handsome garden of Reimers, walking up & down the lovely walks, I was quite delighted with a bed of multi-colored Cresses. I observed two or three little girls, catching 'em small plaice the fine waters was dripping out of the supports of a birch tree, I asked them, what they were doing there for; they answered, that the waters is very wholesome. I then entered the splendid property of Mr Trog Baun; it is quite a domain and includes various of the originally sandy downs, which by dint of expence & labour are now changed into a most delightful garden; there are several dwelling houses, hothouses, a so called ruin, grots, a chinese pavillion, a temple, fine avenues &c &c. but the quay to protect their large property against the waves of the Elb, is in my opinion the handsomest work of the whole; it is built of large stones brought down the Elb, probably from Norway

with a splendid massived stone balustrade. Of course I had no time to go all over the garden, for it was getting late & I was still a good distance from home. I returned now along the high road. I passed the country houses of various Hamburgers, among whom I recollect the names of Cesar Godeffroy, Oswald, Anderson, the last belongs to Richard Godeffroy, which is said to be very handsome, he wants to sell it. the places where this house & garden are situated is called the Dust, and the landlord on the Pöseberg told me, that Hugo Grotius has been living there. The distance from there East to Nienstädten is short; this is again a handsome village of some importance; it has a Church, to which not less than 10 village, even the two Methods, Blankenese, Ottensen to belong. its churchyard looks quite romantick. the inscriptions over the two gateways very appropriate: the upper one is from Ovid, & the other from me. Here is an excellent Inn, that of Jacob, and many handsome country houses, belonging to Richard Parish, Sola & Thompson & Heinemann, that belonging to the latter was in former times Köhnke's School, in one of his rooms lives Doctor Nelson, Oldenburg, the second brother of my old friend, Fritz. Here about I met Mr Schwab and the Spaniard whom I had met at Hope's and who now lives at Schwab's, he returned with me. The road from Blankenese to, & then Nienstädten runs upon the sandhills along the Elbe, on the East side of Nienstädten it gradually slopes down, passes over Langenfelder Brücke and gradually rises again when it continues straight on as far as Altona. It was rather beautiful evening, for the wind had decreased. The Spaniard & Swiss somewhat tired at my lodging, he took tea with me & towards 9 o'Clock I went to Kramer, Mannheltz, old Reinecke, Wilhelmine & the usual visitors were there. The two girls, Marie Emily had to go to bed at 9 o'Clock much against their inclination, because the former is looking so pale. Altona Kiel

I walked to Hamburg; when entering the town thro' the principal, the Altona, gate, I went upon the rampard to the left, but instead of keeping upon the higher part of the wall, I descended towards the wide limpid ditch, which surrounds the walls, & near to which pretty walks, avenues & bowers are laid out. I emerged at the Dammthor, crossed over to the Esplanade, where I called upon Daniel Schmitt, whom I did not find at home, then over the Lombard bridge & thro' the Ferdinand gate & the handsome street, called St Georg an der Alster, here about the country is also very pretty; to the right you have the Thurm Alster with the two Pumpsprings & the third building, to the left the Thurm Alster with various small villages & country houses lining the same — In this street I called upon Mr. Malmedie, whom I did not find at home, upon Mr Wimmer, who, as well as her husband, the professor, was very agreeable, & I staid with them nearly an hour: & upon Mrs Limprecht, with whom I remained less than half an hour: the husband was not in: she is pretty & agreeable, but I thought Mrs Wimmer more pleasant — I also called upon Alfred Schmidt, whose birth day it was; he is 25 years old: he had caught cold, complained of pain in his limbs & was not quite well — At 2 o'Clock I was at Kramer's, with whom I dined, dinner was good, but plain: Thurm Mompell, who dines with them, had to give up his place, for as Kramer have but one servant, she cannot cook & at the same time attend at dinner — After dinner Kramer, Nelly, little Maria (Louisa, the adopted daughter, is not quite well) and I took a walk together out of the Dammthor to the botanical garden, which towards the left is very prettily laid out and watered (the paths gently ascending & descending,) to the ditch, which surrounds the sidewards walls of the Town, but the water of which does not find one in mind of ditch water, so clear & pellucid is it — Nelly & Maria walked home, Kramer &c.

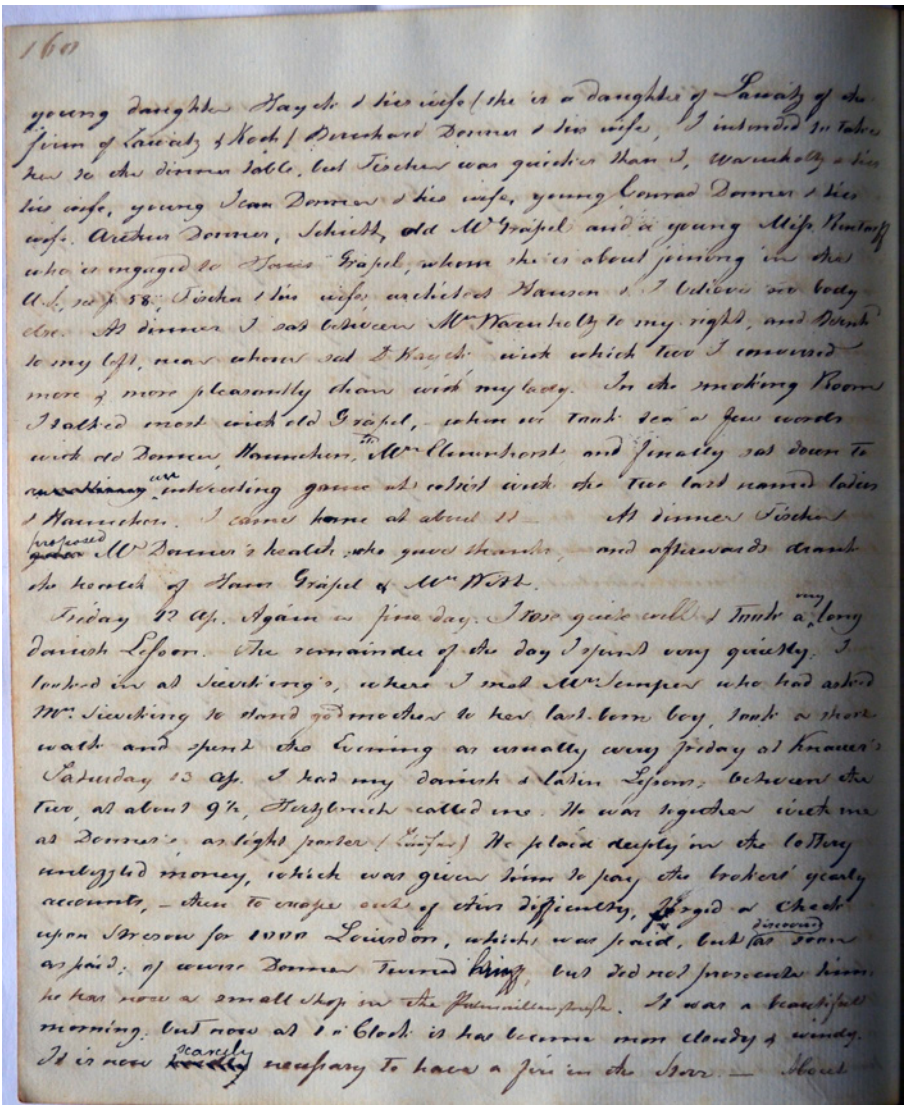
old Mr Baur about his garden, and when the two Card Tables broke up. I lay at 10 o'Clock, pretty well pleased & sufficiently tired —



Tuesday 9 Ap. The weather was less fine. At 12 I called upon Henry Sieveking's. they had already breakfasted & were busy with their children Mrs S. in getting letters. From 11 to 12 I took my Latin Lesson; my hand trembles much as the foregoing, which I have just written. shower — In the morning I was tired and sleepy, and was obliged to have recourse to the reading of "Debrett", however towards evening I came round, and was usefully employed with Latin and Danish: at about 7 I went to old Mr Sieveking, where with the Ladies of the house and Petermann, who came in, I spent two pleasant hours: of course the supper is always quite plain. — Altona Kiel Shares 122, Flensburgs nearly the same. Petermann tells me, that the Rhenish people have relinquished their plans of a direct railroad from Rhenish to Hohenhorn, and that they have now agreed to join their line with that from Flensburgs to Elmshorn, and that it will then be prolonged to Husum.

Wednesday 10 Ap. A cloudy Day like yesterday, — towards noon the sun came out, at about four Sieveking & his wife came to Rainville's garden, I walked about with them, to see how the people are getting on, who are working at the Rail Road in the formerly Staudthoff's garden. I dined by myself at 1 o'Clock there in an Omnibus to Hamburg, I looked in at Kramer's to fetch the key to the street door, where I heard from Nelly, that a new Senator had been chosen, and that the choice had fallen upon a young lawyer, Doctor Halle, who is Swiss-born, but who is the Son of the old respectable jewish merchant Mr Halle, which is of course a great triumph and cause of great joy to all of the persuasion. I then walked to Gustav Siemssen's, who had assembled invited a small party in celebration of Albert's birthday, we were the following. Gustav & his wife, Albert, his young daughter Hayek & his wife (she is a daughter of Lawaty of the firm of Lawaty & Koch) Burchard Donner & his wife, I intended to take her to the dinner table, but Teschen was quicker than I, Warnholtz & his wife, young Jean Donner & his wife, young Conrad Donner & his wife, Arthur Donner, Schmidt, old Mr Grapel and a young Miss Hentsch who is engaged to James Grapel, whom she is about joining in the U.S. in 58. Tschen & his wife, architect Hansen & I believe no body else. At dinner I sat between Mr Warnholtz to my right, and Mrs Hayek to my left, near whom sat Hayek with which two I conversed more & more pleasantly down with my lady. In the smoking Room I talked most with old Grapel, whom we took sea a few words with old Donner, Hannchen, Mr Clemenhorst and finally sat down to an interesting game at whist with the two last named ladies & Hannchen. I came home at about 11 — At dinner Tschen proposed Mr Donner's health, who gave thanks, and afterwards drank the health of Hans Grapel & Mr West.

Friday 12 Oct. Again a fine day. I rose quite well & took a long my danish Lesson. The remainder of the day I spent very quietly. I looked in at Siewking's, where I met Mr Semper who had asked Mrs Siewking to stand godmother to her last-born boy, took a short walk and spent the Evening as usually every friday at Kramer's. Saturday 13 Oct. I had my danish & Latin Lesson; between the two, at about 9½, Hertzbruch called me. He was together with me at Donner's, as light porter (Einleger). He plaid deeply in the lottery and got his money, which was given him to pay the brokers' yearly accounts, — then to escape out of their difficulty, forged a Check upon Strosow for 1000 Louisdor, which was paid, but discovered as soon as paid; of course Donner turned him away, but did not prosecute him. he has now a small shop in the Fahrmillenstraße. It was a beautiful morning, but now at 1 o'Clock it has become more cloudy & windy. It is now scarcely necessary to have a fire in the Stove. — About an hour later young Bethelmann, the son of the Legationsrath called upon me; he is the particular friend of Charles Repsy, and he gives it as his opinion, that young Repsy is certainly predisposed to consumption, but that just after his return in Italy may have crushed the disease in its very beginning. Mr Bethelmann is a very pleasant young man. I believe he has only a very short time fought a duel; he has two frightful scars across his face. He gave me some very good ideas about my future travels in Germany & Italy. About an hour after he was gone, I had another visit: the two young Gibbs, Henry just come over from London, Anthony, who is at Dibb's counting house, Mark, the sons of the late Georges Henry, and another young gentleman called upon me, they were on horseback and in a great hurry, they wanted to gallop down to Blankenese, and their friend had arrived only the day before yesterday, they went back off to-morrow or the day after to Berlin, then on to Frankfort & back to England in three or four weeks time — In the evening I went at 8 o'Clock to Bethelmann's, Pearson & Jones were playing, the latter gained upon a very hard fight. I then played with Jones, Pearson gave me occasionally advice & the Result was, that at 9 4, when Jones had to leave for Hamburg with the Omnibus, I had decidedly the advantage over him: Pearson & I play then a Trial Game, in which I had again rather the better of him, we walked away together & walked up & down the Palmaille several times, he endeavouring to give me some ideas of the immensity of the universe, with regard to the Stars and their distances from the earth, distances, which one may pronounce in Numbers, but which to imagine or rather to form an Idea of, is impossible. One Astronomer has lately succeeded in making a calculation of the distance at which one fixed Star, a small Star in the constellation of the Swan, is from us, & he has found out that its light takes 9000 years in reaching us, whilst the light travels at the rate of [illegible] miles (german, 15 to a degree) per minute!!! interesting. To my left sat Mr Warnholtz, then followed lawyer Stubbmann, who was rather entertaining. — after dinner I had a few moments talk with Constance Blumenhorst, who is always very kind towards me. Nelly, Theodor & Thorpa joined us. — when the gentlemen went to the smoking room, Blumenhorst & I remained behind by ourselves, then soon Gyllenhaal, Mr Blumenhorst, Chester Davis, Hansen & I paid three visitors, I sat down near Mr Warnholtz & Mr Fischer talking about cripples & went home at an early hour — Altona Kiel Rail Road Shares 127½ — Hayne is chosen Commune Dinyan — Warnholtz is now president of the Commune: he gives himself, I think, rackes for many days —

Tuesday 16 Apr. I spent about two hours in the "Johanneum" from 11 to 1. Director Eggers made a speech in Latin, which I did not understand, introducing professor Dindorf as second Teacher in the College & professor Brandis as second Teacher in the Altona College. the former has a salary of 1250 Rbsp and 200 more as Teacher of the Greek language equal to £178.10.0, the second 800 Rbsp equal to £114.5.0 £ after which, the two professors made each a german speech, the former had a better delivery, the latter a better german pronunciation — generally speaking I hear that the speech of professor Dindorf has been pleased. The remainder of the day I was quietly at home, translating Danish & endeavouring to understand Virgil. — for a few moments I called as usually upon Mr & Mrs Henry Siemssen & the evening I spent in the usual manner at old Mr Reimke's. Mr Semper & Mr Theodore Reimke do not appear yet

Wednesday 17 Apr. After having taken my leave I walked over the ramparts to the Theater in Thunberg, where there was an Exhibition of flowers, which was pretty enough, disappointed me however as to its small extent. I met there Christiansen Davis with her Companion (Miss Bertram) Emmy Stubbmann, Mr & Mrs Mohrdieck after having detained me there quite long enough, it was only 1½ and as Albert Schmidt had invited me to dine with him at 3½

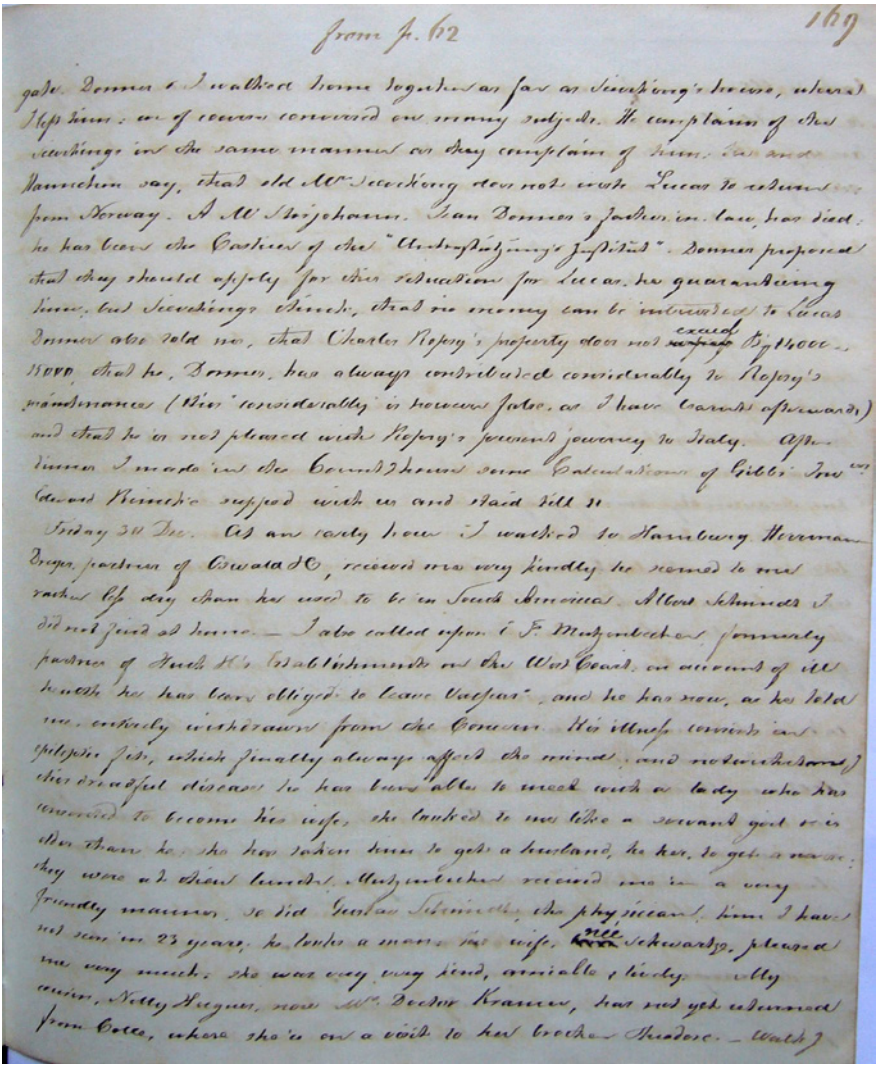
Thursday 18 Apr. A most beautiful day. I was greatly absorbed, until late in the Evening, when I took a walk to the Rolandsmill, to enjoy the splendid weather, how I like to hear the Larks sing, they rise so high in the air, that one cannot see them. Nainmill's gardens at Nightingale has also commenced to make itself heard from 8 to 10 I spend a quiet Evening at Home & write.



Friday 19 Apr. I dined with Kramers, who had invited me to eat Tyroler Käs, with them, Mrs Kramer, the two little girls, Maina & Lenor, played for about an hour & some, at Ball in their garden. I then returned with my Cousin and at about 8 o'Clock I went with her to Mrs Meyers, who every Friday Evening are at Home & expect their friends; there were Mr Warren, her two sisters (Fra & Adelheid) a Mr Keth & another lady & the Gentlemen I know Mrs Meyer, Kramer & Hermann Peter, Otto Speder, M'Pherson, (the U Mess.) besides them, there were three or four more. We had Tea, Wine & Beer, bread & butter and Cakes were handed round, and in Conversation the Time passed pleasantly enough. We had a long distance to walk home to the Fischbrunnen, which we reached at near midnight.

Saturday 20 Apr.

Saturday 20 Apr. After having breakfasted at Kramers, I went to Herr Berg to speak to him about a box of Curiosities which he had received for me from the Antiquarians Society in Copenhagen. I then walked to Altona, took my Cheque, was busy the whole day, dined at home & played Chess in the Evening at Professor Buff's Schumacher. Dethelmanns, Jones & Petersen were there & Comedies again were Jones from & defeat, but when De & Dethelmanns were gone, I played a game with Petersen, I got the advantage of a knight & bishop gade. Donner & I walked home together as far as Simpsing's house, where I left him: we of course conversed on many subjects. He complains of the slanderings in the same manner as they complain of him. Lars and Jannichen say, that old Mr Schierbeck does not invite Lucas to return from Norway. A Mr Stejohansen, Jean Donners father in law, has died: he has been the Cashier of the "Andrupstjänings Institut". Donner proposed that they should apply for this situation for Lucas, he guaranteeing him, but Swedenborg's friends, that no money can be entrusted to Lucas Donner also told me, that Charles Ropsy's property does not exceed 8 or 10000 Rdr, that he, Donner, has always contributed considerably to Ropsy's maintenance (this 'considerably' is however false, as I have learnt afterwards) and that he is not pleased with Ropsy's journey journey to Italy. After dinner I made in the Second Chamber some Calculations of Gibbs Inv.s Edward Reinicke supped with us and staid till 11

Friday 30 Dec. As am early I went to Hamburg Herman Dreyer, partner of Oswald & C.o, received me very kindly he seemed to me rather less gay than he used to be in South America. Albert Schmidt I did not find at home. — I also called upon J. F. Mutzenbecher formerly partner of Huth & Co but Westphalen and the West Coast, on account of ill health has been obliged to leave Calpas, and he has now, as he told me, entirely withdrawn from the Concern. His illness consists in Epilepsie fits, which finally always affect the mind, and notwithstanding this dreadful disease he has been able to wed with a lady who has consented to become his wife, she looked to me like a servant girl & is older than he, she has taken him to get a husband, he her, to get a name: they were at about hundred. Mutzenbecher received me in a very friendly manner, so did Gustav Schmidt, the physician, whom I have not seen in 23 years, he took a more for wife, née Schwartzop, pleased me very much: she was very very kind, amiable & lively. Ally cousin, Nelly Heyner, now Mr. Doctor Kramer, has not yet returned from Celle, where she is on a visit to her brother Theodore. — Walked back to Altona as fast as I could. I was just in time to clean myself to go to old Mr Sieveking, where besides the family, Henry Sieveking & his wife, Miss Matthew Sieveking, Dr Sieveking Miss Augusta Baum & myself sat down to a plain dinner. I sat near Emmeline, who complained of the headache & ill will with which her mother & brother treat her husband Lucas. Dr Sieveking, a physician, is the son of Edward Sieveking of London: he may be clever. Miss Matthew was the "lion": she makes herself very meritorious by establishing & forming in Hamburg all kinds of benificient institutions; of late she has been called to Copenhagen, where she has been received with the greatest kindness by the Queen, for the purpose of establishing there similar institutions.

During her stay there she has written a diary, which she read after dinner to the party (Sieveking & Lehmann having left). It's amusing but occasionally vanity peeps out. Towards 8 o' Clock, Sieveking & his wife went to Semper, where besides Benn: Theodor Reincke & his wife, Fischer & his wife, Otto Reincke & Otto Heyne. Fischer, who was in Donner's Commingshouse, after I had left, is partner of Heyne & seems to be a clever man: his wife is a Miss Faulkard - Except my good friend Sieveking, who is a little limitted, they all appear to be able men and their conversation is interesting, tho' I cannot always take a share in the same as frequently Hamburg or local subjects, of which that which engrosses now the attention of all, is the Kiel-Altona Railroad, of which Ahrenmann & Semper are two of the leaders, and Theodor Reincke Vorsteher in Hamburg. The Ausschuß, a committee formed by the shareholders may be called the legislative, the direction, the executive power of the undertaking.
The principal men Altona's, Baur, Donner, Hoyer are decidedly opposed to this undertaking & of course the greater is now the glory of the, compared to them, young men, that they have succeeded in carrying it into effect not only without the assistance of the said persons, but even in spite of them. 12500 shares of 100 Species have

Saturday 30th Dec 1843. Early in the morning I called with Sievking upon George Baur, a pleasant young man, his father's partner. His wife was not visible yet — What I saw of the house is prettily furnished. After having occupied myself in Sievking Schreiber's Office hours &c. the usual hours. 12h. I went with Sievking to Hamburg, we took the road along the so called Jungfern Stieg, which runs on the high Elbshore, with houses to the right nearer the Beach, with avenues & rows of trees to the left. on approaching Hamburg, we had to descend gradually, on entering the town, the way leads over handsome quays with fine houses to the left and the with large esplanades [illegible] harbour to the right. — At a shipbuilder's yard, we purchased some fine Appels for Susan, and in Hamburg I saw Bethl, Schultes & Heidenberg, to which latter I delivered a Letter of introduction from his partner Paulsen. I called upon Alfred Schmidt, an old friend of my childhood, he suffers of a dreadful disease; it is called a lameness in the Spine and Dr Langenbeck says, that he has not the slightest strength in his Legs, he sits on the sofa and can hardly live, with the assistance of his Servant he walks about with much difficulty on even ground. he is partner of the firm of Schmidt & Müller and tho' he cannot do any thing, he is still an Interest in the business. His determining to see, what good spirits he is, he received me with the greatest friendship & kindness and I spent a pleasant hour with him. I returned to Sievk. Schreiber's Counting house, stayed and punctually at 6 entered the Company's Dinner's house, he received me into his Library guided by himself, a servant in livery opened the two folding doors and with a deep bow advised him that dinner was on the Table, their Servants attended during the whole took at 4 after dinner we had a great deal of conversation; he was very polite, thinking he does not like us all. I visit drove at about 7 and supped with Steinberg & his amiable wife. —

Sunday 31 Dec. I had hardly done dressing, when old Nepitsch came to see me: after he was gone, Steinberg & I started to pay visits. first to the Mr Little in the Elbchaussee, who was busy in the Thomas he received me very friendly and showed us all over his comfortable house: in the second place to Legationsrath Bedekemann, a pleasant elderly man, with whom we had a long talk about Charles Repsey who is young Bedekemann's most intimate friend. I fear, there will be some difficulty & disagreement regard^d Charles Repsey's future career.
Bedekemann wants him to enter one of the Government's offices (especially which he himself as well as Bedekemann is most inclined, that he should try his luck in Wandsbeck; — in the 3^d place to old Frau Baur who dwells nest, — she not bed — but chair-ridden, — an very amiable; — their large drawing Room has a very comfortable appearance; — to Young Baur, the Senator, who, united from boyhood, lives in the house where old Mr Stockfleth lived in the times of my childhood; he cannot bring forth a connected sentence without difficulty. Lives wife a Miss Wattenbach from Hamburg is visibly, clever & amiable: they have no children. Now back to left me by myself I called (3^d) upon the Commerzjustizrath Stubbe -mann, the widower, president of the Admiralitätsgericht & a pleasant, rather a little prosy, elderly man; & finally (4^th) upon Warnholtz's to whom since my arrival I have not paid a regular visit; Mrs W is a good healthy woman. — When Warnholtz returned he came accompanied by a Doctor physician Bamann, an old chum of mine from the Gymnasium, who seemed to be glad to see me & gave me a kiss. Friedmann Rinecker dined with us at Henry Steinberg's: the young man has left Hamm

January 1st Monday. I commenced the new year with a terrible headache, the consequence of last night's debauch. In order to get rid of it, instead of going to Church, which I ought to have done – I took a walk with young Heinrich Siemering about as far as half way to Flottbeck. I enjoyed the beautiful country, the sun was out, but the wind blew pretty high. I dined and began my new year's Calls. Siemering and all the officers of the Civic guard were obliged to pay their complimentary visit to Colonel Bluhm Altona, the so-called Vorsteher, the King's representative in Altona. I first landed at A. Schroeder's, where I only saw Mr. Schroeder, an apparently good natured, insignificant woman – thence to Kramers, here only the daughter Emily was at home with a bad cold; all the others had gone to Church, – to Theodor Reinecke's, where I left a Card, nobody living at home, – to the apothecary Siemsen's, he a pleasant man, she an insignificant woman, – to Mr. Jean Donner, where a good breakfast was laid out, to which young Emil Hesse, two young men from the counting house, – Conrad Donner – old Frederic Donner – afterwards Warnholtz & his Lady, – also myself sat down in good humour, young Jean Donner's niece, a Bergedmann, has just been confirmed & her father died a few days ago, – Arthur also came in, – after having paid some visits, Mr. Donner, Jean, Conrad, Arthur, Warnholtz & his wife together with myself directed our steps to the old Siemering Haus, where this day held a complete levee at his house, united we were amongst others, Bernhard Donner's father-in-law, a rich Mr. Schroeder from Hamburg also came in. I now went over to old Reinecke's, where I met Theresa, Kramer's Emily, with these two ladies I returned to their house & there of time Beecher entered, also D. Kramer, the husband of my cousin Nelly Huguer, in search of me, he did not please me, he

& the usual Sunday's Evening party at old Reinicke's. Below: the Reinicke, Knauer, Lüdke & Wasserbolz played whist: the ladies: Emily, Louise, Auguste, Therese, Wilhelmine (the only unmarried) & Thekla sat round the table, busy with their work, the husbands, brothers in law, brothers & I conversed on subjects not very interesting and ate &c &c as usual upstairs to Supper. I took Mr Knauer & I sat between her & the very pretty Henriette. Supper was quite plain but all were in good humour & I amused myself, that nothing particular occurred.

Wednesday 3 January. At 7 a.m. a complete hurricane blew. The ground was covered with snow, when I rose. Both in the morning & in the evening till 8 o'Clock, when I went home with Siewking to take tea, I was writing in his Consul's house.

Thursday 4 January. The weather becomes colder, tho' it thaws occasionally. During the morning I was occupied in Siewking's Consul's house, till 4 o'Clock, with the exception of two Calls, which I made, accompanied by Siewking, the one to Cr Blücher, whom we did not find at home, the other upon Amsinck, Mr A was gone out, but his husband, Theodore, received me very friendly in the Consul's house. At 5 o'Clock, Siewking, his wife & I drove to Carlswerk in Baron Dawe's, she had invited a large party in celebration of the espousals of Lehmann & Miss Sophie as Witthoft so far as I recollect, the party consisted of the following. Mrs Christoffersen, her companion (a Miss Bertram), the Mr Siewking, Consul Wittich, his two daughters (Sophie & Caroline) Miss Götz, Mr Lehmann, a Mr Callisen (Lehmann's friend, a physician, who has the title to do), Consul Schlichtkrull from Hamburg, his wife (a Miss Daw) the old Mr Fritz Daw (a pleasant man) his daughter Auguste, his son Johannes, old Commerzjustizrath Stuhlmann (a widower, his wife was Miss Voght) Eduard Reinicke, always a little prosy, — the lawyer Stuhlmann, his wife & his daughter (Miss Caroline Terhoff) the Sinder, now Justinely Gables, whom I now saw for the first time. She is not much altered except her hair having grown quite white. Receiving her after myself. In the Room below, where the Cloaks are deposited, we entered just at the same time with the Gentlemen. I then had to accompany Miss Tetroff up stairs, & it instantly appeared to me, that she was not a common girl. When we entered the Room upstairs, the whole party was assembled, the Servants threw open the doors & announced that dinner was on the Table. I led Caroline Wellinds and had the pleasure to have on the other side Miss Tetroff, who, with the exception of a somewhat large mouth, is pretty & certainly amiable. I conversed a good deal with her, without however neglecting Caroline, who is pretty good looking, but has not the savoir vivre of Miss Tetroff. The dinner & wines were of course good. I ate little & did not drink much. After dinner the gentlemen went to the smoking room with the exception of Commerzienrath Stahlmann, Secretary Z myself who endeavoured to make ourselves agreeable to the young ladies, who had sad times on a Septr in a rep. however Conversation flagged & I was glad, when the other gentlemen returned. I conversed with the Miss Daws, with the Caroline Stahlmann, with Mr Stahlmann & Commerzienrath Daw, afterwards, when tea was brought in. I sat down near Mrs Sinckling and finally I got a Seat near Miss Tetroff, whilst she was looking at our Illustrated Leipzig papers, published in imitation of the London Illustrated News. I amused myself pretty well & with young Sinder home at 10 o'Clock.

Friday 5 January. After having written a little on the Odyssee, I started at about 12 and paid a long Visit to my old master, the Rector, now Obrist-ly Classen, who for 35 years has been Teacher at the Altona College (Gymnasium) he is now nearly 82 years old & looks very venerable. He keeps up his health & has all his senses, with the exception of a very trifling difficulty in hearing, and

him and his wife, an elderly lady, I conversed pleasantly for about an hour. I then walked to Kramer in Hamburg. now Nelly was visible, she really felt glad to see me, and she nearly smothered me with kisses, which I received, but did not return. Kramer insisted upon my calling him thou, which I agreed to. I went on change, where I saw Hermann Dreyer, Johannes Lienpicht, Heinrich Schaar, in former times, my father's Clerk, now broker in Cloversaad, Daniel Schultz Broker Reinicke's brother. Old Donner, who nonchalance me with politeness, patted me on the back in a very friendly manner. I returned to Kramer, with whom I dined and returned to Altona in an Omnibus at 3 o'Clock. Kramer is not quite so disagreable as he at first appeared to me. Nelly, of course older, looks still pretty fair; she has improved in the way of expressing herself, she is very kind & her attachment to the family of the Wiedenbrücks is extreme) but what I do not like is, that we could not mention a single person, against whose character she had not something to say, often in such a spiteful manner as to preclude any doubt on the subject — In the morning when I called, I met Mrs Mahmke formerly Lotte Geller, and Miss Jacobsen from Altona, formerly Hermine Spehr, whose conversation, short as it was, pleased me better than that of Frau Doktorinn Kramer's. Besides her daughter Maria, she, Nelly, has a little adopted girl, Louise, her second daughter, Cornelia, died 1841 unmarried after the great fire. Kramer am. I believe, pretty well off in the world. he has a good deal to do, & old Mr Heyne left each child 85 000 Mk. — At dinner we had several wines, soup, fish & a pudding, and liberally no attendance, they keep only one servant girl. After having come home I dressed and went to Wandsbeck (it was Mrs Brandts's birthday) I read a Letter from my wife of 28 Sept) the usual members of the Reinicke's family were assembled, also old Mr Reinicke. old Mr Clemenhorst, Theodor Clemenhorst, his wife & Grandson. Adolf Clemenhorst

I was rather a dull party. I played two rubbers at whist & then engaged with the younger people, but it did not go off well. At Supper I sat between W. Stubelmann & Mrs Semper, with the Altona people I have so very few Subjects in Common, that it is difficult to keep up a Conversation. We had a cold, but nice supper.

Saturday 6 January. The whole morning till 2 o'Clock I was busy writing to my wife in Siemsting's Counting house. I now paid visit to Siemsting a Visit to Senator Hoyer, an old, rich, baptized Jew. He lives in the Tallonall in the first house, which formerly belonged to Jenisch, a servant in livery showed us to a handsome room, where Siemsting introduced me to him, who was pleasant enough. His daughter Mary came in for a moment. Siemsting said, her curiosity had brought her in, to see here I looked. Mrs Hoyer was not visible, she being occupied with her dress to go to a large party at Senator Hoyer's in Hamburg who was celebrating her jubilee, it having that day been 50 years in Hamburg. At old Mrs Siemsting, being Xmas Eve also a little of their dinner, in the shape of a lunch for us, and at about 10 o walked, Parsens drove to lawyer Stubelmanns, where a rather large party collected. Mr Stubelmann himself was very polite. after dinner he apologized for not having left me to lead his lady to dinner, to which she added, that as Siemsting had taken her & Mrs Kramer, she suspected that this had been a thing arranged between us. I of course disclaimed the possibility of this being the case & finished with expressing the hope, that next time I might have the pleasure. Mrs Stubelmann has been the widow of a gentleman in Bordeaux, where unfortunately suicide is suitable & gradual. Her daughter, Caroline Foster, played the piano & sang after dinner. I had only a few moments opportunity of conversing with her. She is 22 years old, but has a great deal of self possession. The other Mr Stubelmann is a little party, otherwise pleasant enough. Mrs old Stubelmann Dans I spoke a few words, but not a syllable with her companion Miss Bedman, nicker with Frau Professorin Schmidt, who lives with her brother in law, Commissary Stuhlmann in the same house nor with her Companion, a Miss Tench. There were besides: old Mr Siewking & Miss Götz, Hayne, the lawyer Henry Poppel, an old College Chum of mine, who at once addressed me: Thou — the architect Hansen — Dr Callisen — Sievk & his wife — Semper & his wife, he pleases me much: he is quite the same as formerly, very pleasant & occasionally a giez — Knaus & his wife, he a good natured man without much polish, led led to dinner, & I had a long pleasant & confidential conversation with her. she gave me an account of how her marriage came about and tho' I believe, that she is now quite happy, yet I am sure, that she felt or at least she felt in the beginning the want of devotion & polish (Bildung) in her husband and his family. she spoke a good deal of my wife, wished me to describe her, and seemed to take an interest in her. I really think, she looks upon me as upon an old friend. & I should not wonder, if 20 or 22 years ago she was a little partial to me. I observed that in the way of holding her knife & fork she is not quite up to what are considered the rules of genteelity that is may be wrong to take any notice of these things but such a well versed woman as she is. — To my left I had Frau Siewking, whose her neighbour Semper kept in conversation: to Mr Knaus's right sat a Mr Marxen, a music master, solely invited for the purpose of accompanying Miss Osterloff. They have here a strange plan of giving part of Madeira immediately after the Soup & not at the end of the dinner. — The Caballer as well as dinner, except Claret, of which each Gentleman has a bottle near him, and handed round by the Servants, when the dessert is over, plates are handed round & the Table cloth is not removed. Ladies & gentlemen rise together, when each gentleman leads his lady to the sitting room, when coffee Musseiel &c commences. There, who give parties, are there very anxious to got together as many gentlemen as ladies, then coffee is handed round, the making of which Miss Forbes herself attended to. the gentlemen then went below to the smoking room. a nasty disagreeable custom, however as I did not like to remain quite alone with the ladies, I joined the gentlemen and listened to Knaus's holding forth in his usual funny yet original manner. — Coffee, fine Engravings were looked at, Miss Forbes played & sang as already said. I conversed here & there and walked home at 10 o'Clock, well pleased Sunday 7 January Soon after breakfast I drove to Hamburg in an Omnibus & walked to Daniel Schmitt's lodgings on the Esplanade. We conversed nearly two hours, but with less animation than the first time. he then accompanied me over the Lombard's Bridge, which is separated by the Inner Alster from the old fortifications which faces it on the side of the rampart, where even to day on a Sunday exercise was busily employed, as far as the Schwab St Georg, where a fine row of houses is build along the Alster, a handsome walk with trees running between the river & the houses. Herr Hermann Dreyer, whom we did not find at home, now Schmitt left me as I intend Johannes Limpricht's house, who live here very prettily the house is his own, he having built it about three years ago. he & his brother Bernhard, who live at Rio, do a very nice business together. he introduced me to his wife a Miss Abbot, an amiable good natured little woman, as round & short as he. his children were out — From his rooms he has a pretty view over the Alster to the Country beyond it, & to the left towards the river Jungfernsteig I remained a pretty long time conversing with him & her. I then called upon Gustave Schmidt & upon Kramer, neither of whom were at home. I walked back to Altona, a pretty considerable distance, and after having dressed, amused [illegible], his wife & children, and after having dined, rested myself with reading about some parts of my diary 1826 - 1827 which Edward Pinkerton had kept for me. At 8 h I went to bed Temperance Tavern, where a small party assembled, consisting of Haunchen Williams, old Mr Clennchorst, Theodor Clennchorst & his wife, Mr Hayne, Mrs andulated Hanover, D. Williams Hyde, whom at first I did not recognize, his wife, & a Miss Romberg, daughter of the deceased drawing-master. At about 4 Clock we went to dinner. I sat between the old & the young Mr Clennchorst, the latter I had to my right, & conversed much with her. A plate full of oysters is placed before you before the soup is eaten, which is very nice. — While the other gentlemen went to the smoking room. I staid with the ladies Hannchen Williams, old Mrs Clennchorst, Hannah & I formed one Team, Hayde, Hayne & Th. Clennchorst the other united table. Miss Romberg & Mr Hayde left at an early hour, Constance sat by herself occupied with her needle work. We left at about 11.

Monday 8 January. During the forenoon I was writing in the Consul's house. Mr. Ferdinand Reinecke dined with us. when writing had gone to work, the two brothers, Mr. Fiedling & myself amused ourselves with looking at my Collection of Coins. — I had arranged with Semper to play at chess in his house. But as "living images" or rather "Tableaux Vivants" were to be represented at the Theater, it was decided, that we should go thither. Semper procured me a ticket for the first tier of boxes, which cost 2 g. the three sisters Reinecke, Augusti, Lewis & Thurow were in the same box; also their husbands came at a later hour. The house is not badly painted. it was quite full a great decent people in the boxes. First a comedy, or farce, stupid & badly performed, occupied some time. then followed those living images, or rather known statues represented by human beings, who are placed in the positions, in which the statues are sculptured, without moving or slackening in the very slightest degree. They stand upon a large pedestal, which turns round, so that they show themselves to the public from all sides; the house is darkened, so that the light falls only upon them. The part of the body which is to represent nakedness, is covered with flesh colored "Tricot" and fects highly. the female figures are covered with a super abundance of drapery The director is a certain Mr Miller, who calls himself a professor. The following statues were represented: the Triumph of the Amazons (Amazonenschlacht) Tasso, a splendid & beautifully arranged Group Ariadne Racchus: she sits on a panther, this statue belongs to Veltmann in Frankfurt, it is beautiful. but this representation is a failure Tatius & Romulus, David, Vulcan Thorwaldsen; Vulcan & Venus, Hartmann; Rape of the Sabines, an antique, Mars protects the daughter of Regulus on the wall, Drāga; Suicide of the Mexic, Hartmann; Hermann & Thusnelda, Schadow, this called down the greatest applause. & also pleased me most; they are represented as warriors, clad in shine of gold beads, apparently have = Kings, the Gladiator, an antique; Mars & Amor, Thorwaldsen, assign. the wrestlers, an antique, the ravaged, Thorwaldsen; Ajax & Cassandra; the murder of Abel, Jaenisch; the priests of Cain, Banck, the burial Abels, Thorwaldsen; rape of Hylas, Schick. Then marched some all represented in a superior manner by Miller himself, who is an athletic, well formed man, a little inclined to corpulency. in my opinion, such a man, in flesh colored tricot with a short apron round his loins is not exactly a proper object to be looked at by young girls. These performances continue for about from 2 to 4 minutes according to the difficulty of the same. Mr Miller, formerly a so called Magr. Hermlee, is now representing these statues in imagery with the assistance of the Actors of the Athens theater, amongst whom a Miss Seitz is rather good looking; but he also carries with him his own artists, men & women, who are tolerable. I believe, I have represented statues in a state of nudity with a mere "caparabo". the performance was a failure, & various of my acquaintances have seen it, but they all agree, that it is by no means exciting one's sensuality, which I do not believe. These representations have very properly been prohibited by the police. When the theater was over we went to Swigers, where he & his lady, Mr. & Mrs. Wanderley, Mr.

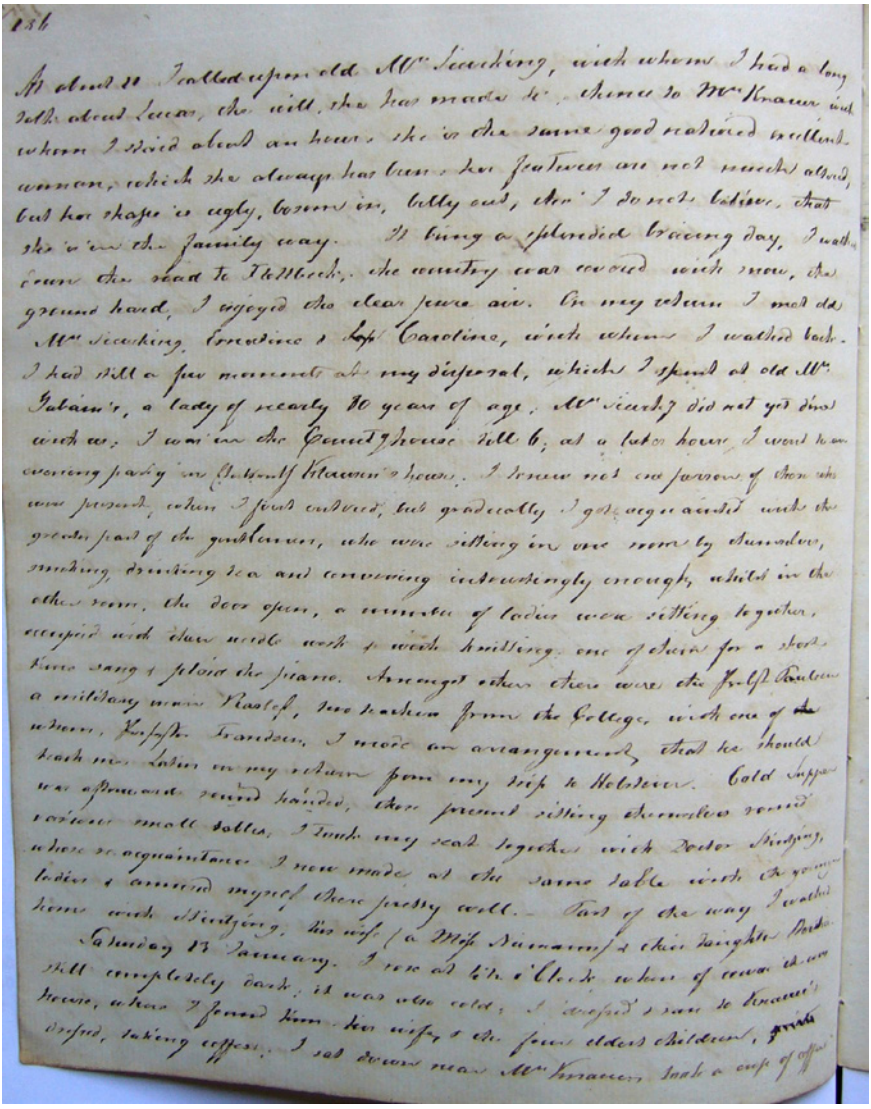
& Mr Isenberg, Mr & Mr Ammann. Edward Reincke & myself dined to a nice cold Supper, consisting mainly of oysters & ham. Mr Ammann, a Hannoverian from Hamburg, is considered clever; she may be so; I did not admire her. She is certainly not genial. — The Railroad people, to whom the whole town belongs, with the exception of the family of Baare & Ott Bonnes are in high spirits to-day; as Reece has come from Copenhagen fixing the spot, where the Station is to be built. Ammann & Reuper directors, have determined, that a Ball by Subscription is to be given at Reincke's in celebration of this happy event.

Tuesday 2 January. The Cold is increasing. I was busy in the Counting house the whole day. In the evening at about 9 I went to old Reincke's, where, with the exception of Isenberg & his wife, who was unwell, the usual members of the family were assembled. I took pretty Mr Theodor Reincke out on the sopha. — We made a drive from Eimsbuttel, a not disagreeable barrage which was however decidedly disapproved of on account of the danger there is in making it. — In a tureen a bottle of Rum is poured, over the tureen a pair of fire tongs is placed, which tongs hold a large piece of sugar. The rum is lighted & the flames melt the sugar, which trickles into it. Rum. — If the curtains had caught & the burning rum run out & over, no water would have extinguished it. — I accompanied Mr Kramer home.



Wednesday 3 January. In the morning I called upon Miss Linck & upon Mr Reincke, formerly teacher of Charles Pappy. He was smoking his pipe & drinking his coffee after dinner. in his conversation he was pleasant enough. On my return home I met there Mr & Mrs Kramer, who told me to my sorrow, that poor Theresa was very poorly of a severe Cramp in the Stomach, of course the 2nd not done with us. After dinner I staid at home till about 6 o'Clock when I went to Kramers in Hamburg. When I arrived there, the Christmas presents were already distributed, my Godson Hans Hans to Nelly was much admired. A number of children, amongst whom little Maria undoubtedly the prettiest, were in high glee. Nelly a good kind of woman, is much given to exaggerations & wants to have every thing in the old Wellink Style instead of advancing with the times. There was also a Miss Schuster, an elderly daughter, lady, of the late Clergyman of the same name, Mr. Kirchner, formerly the pretty Maldchen Handel, still good looking & amiable, her husband a Tea dealer, rather insignificant. Mr. Aufmordt, in former times the beautiful August Handel, pale, sickly looking but pleasant in her conversation; her husband, who also came, is director of an Insurance Company & has much to do. We sat down to supper consisting of fried apple dumplings. Asparagus, &c. the visitors left past 11, was midnight I withdrew to my bed room, which Kramers have been so kind to allow me in their house. I slept on a bed stead used one by one of my sisters.

Thursday 11 January. When I rose at as late an hour as nearly 9 o' Clock, the ground was covered with snow, it continued to snow. After breakfast I conversed with my Cousin and then called upon Rodenberg, a forward persevering Coward in Hamburg, to whom I had a Letter of introduction from his partner Daubert in Cathpen: he received me very friendly in his Counting House & when I was on the point of leaving, he took me up stairs to his lady, with whom we breakfast. He is said to be a man of very low extraction & little education. Thence I went to Heinrich Backmann, extremely not a very interesting man; his former partner, Brandt, was in the Town looking up for shares in an Insurance company, which he is desirous to join. — I walked back to Altona, the ground was covered with snow; but it was neither cold nor the road dirty. Mr. Sievking was a little better, but not yet visible — I spent the day writing & reading an interesting Journal written by Sporschil of the battles of Ligny & Waterloo Friday 12 January. The Elbe innavigable; the Ell full of drift ice, no cloud visible, the sun shone bright, but without any strength

At about 11 I called upon old Mr Leucking, with whom I had a long talk about Lucas, the will, that has made it. Thence to Mr Knauer and whom I staid about an hour; she is the same good natured excellent woman, which she always has been; her features are not much altered, but her shape is ugly, bosom in, belly out, &c. I do not believe, that she is in the family way. It being a splendid blazing day, I walked down the road to Hattbeck, the country was covered with snow, the ground hard, I enjoyed the clear pure air. On my return I met old Mr Leucking, Emeline & Miss Caroline, with whom I walked back. I had till a few moments ago my disposal, which I spend at old Mr Fabian's, a lady of nearly 80 years of age. Mr Leuck did not yet dine with us; I was in the Council House till 6, at a late hour I went to evening party in Colonel Klaveren's house. I knew not one person of those who were present, when I first entered, but gradually I got acquainted with the greater part of the gentlemen, who were sitting in one room by themselves, smoking, drinking tea and conversing interestingly enough, whilst in the other room, the door open, a number of ladies were sitting together, occupied with their needle work & with knitting, one of them for a short time sang & played the piano. Amongst other there were the first Professor a military man Rastof, two teachers from the College, with one of whom, Professor Francken, I made an arrangement, that he should teach me Latin on my return from my trip to Holstein. Cold Supper was afterwards served handed, then several sitting themselves round various small tables, I took my seat together with Doctor Kindzey, where no acquaintance I now made at the same table with the young ladies & amused myself there pretty well. Part of the way I walked home with Kindzey, his wife (a Miss Baumann) & their daughter Bertha.

Saturday 13 January. I rose at 10 o'Clock when it was still completely dark; it was also cold; I dressed & ran to Knauer's house, where I found him, his wife & the four elders children, finished dressed, taking coffee. I sat down near Mr Knauer took a cup of coffee

Knauer got shaved, we then packed ourselves willing and saddled in Knauer's own carriage & with his own horses. The sort of Carriage, we used here, is here called a Chaise: it is half covered like the Chaise Berliche from behind & from the side, whilst from before one can shelter entirely with a Leather cover, which can be drawn up as high as one's breast &, when it is very cold, as it was this Coach the morning, some wood work with windows can be let down, so that no breath of air can come in. Knauer had had us a large foot bag, lined with sheep skins inside, whilst he himself, to keep his feet warm, put them in a large sack filled with chopped Straw (Häcksling). We drove down the Allerstrasse turned to the left, when we were in the "Kutschenthurmstr". it struck 6 o'Clock, we passed the large pond, called Dr. Diebitsch, & under on we passed the Langen Felde, where the Danish Custom-house officers ought to have examined our luggage, which however they did not do. Allenau having the advantage of being a free port, where no duties on shews are paid, it is of course closely surrounded by a line of Custom-house officers, there for instance the villages of Ottmuth, of which the head of Ramdeller is the first house, is subject to duty, whilst the last houses of Allenau only a few steps off, are not, by a bye the bye we were well wrapped up as it was very cold, nevertheless the cold penetrated a little, but very little only. In the Bensen mill we breakfasted at 9 o'Clock, hot beer with eggs & sugar (Einlim) & sausages. Knauer paid for every thing. We then reached Bramstädt, situated on a little river, called the Brannau, this place has a somewhat romantic appearance, which a book called "Topographie" &c to which I beg to refer for many particulars, states to Holstein, also observes: the market place is adorned with various sorts of trees & also nordeum and in several stands a so called Roland of Rhau, and ends of Granite and representing a warrior with helmet, shield & sword We stopped again for a short time in Bramstädt but saw nothing. The next place, we came to, is Rummelsburg, this is of more importance than Bramstädt. Knauer was here quite at home & we dined upon an excellent Jewish soup. A Mr Rendtel kept us company all this while we were here, he & his brothers have an extensive cloth manufactory & whose

…a very pleasant room. Knauer called and we went together to the "Harmonie" – this is a kind of Assembly Room or rooms, to which at the time of the 'Umspring' the entrance for a stranger is 1 Species, the rooms below were crowded to excess. Knauer & I were known a good many people, with whom we conversed, whilst we zigzagged our way through: nearly all smoked & the tobacco smoke became at last insupportable. Refreshments were of course to be paid for: cards were (plaid?) there, mostly Whist & L'ombre, no Hazard. – The Umspring lasts generally from 10 to 12 January. Knauer had come here to recover from his tobacco. Gentlemen all over the duchy, instead of money mortgaged in Estates, is paid here: mortgages are paid off and money again lent on new mortgages. – After having staid a considerable time below, we went up stairs, where are two large rooms, principally adapted for balls: the pillars in the Ball Saloons are much too slender: at first few people were here, but by & by the rooms filled and from 9 o'clock to between 200 & 300 gentlemen sat down to supper. – Knauer & I took oysters & hock. About 11 o'Clock we went home, I up stairs to my bedroom, without Carpet, a luxury which is by no means general, but else well lighted.

Sunday 14 January. I rose at 8 o'Clock: it was a cold day, the windows of my bedroom were frozen over. Our breakfast consisted as usually in Kobstein of Coffee with bread, here in Kiel: Zwieback. I then ran about and out of town, the town itself is small, the streets with a few exceptions small, the bay, which forms the harbour, goes far in: it was now frozen over and few vessels lying in the same: Kiel lies on the North Sides and opposite (on the) side lies a fine part of Holstein, called the Fuhlsbüttel. For a short distance I walked along the bay to the Eastward: this is a pretty road and leads to a handsome village called Düsternbrook: the Castle is a poor building as the university also very insignificant. I mean, the interior of the Edifice. – The Harbour communicates with a basin of water to the N.ward of the same, called the Dänen Pool. Hermann Willink junior, the son of Hermann senior & of a Hunter, called upon me: of course I should not have known him: he & his brother Charles, which latter is now in St Thomas doing well as partner of Schön, were educated at Kohrsche's in Neustadten. I believe at the expense of Mr Donner. Hermann has now rented a farm in the neighbourhood of Lütjenburg & is getting on: he is pleasant & good looking, but it is a pity that his stutter a little: he is not much less than 40 years of age, but not married. the Langsby had also brought him to Kiel: with him I went to Mrs Lilles whose two daughters & mother were touching. both have grown older, but Mrs Pillinck, who limps a little, more than her husband. they received me very kindly & I drove with them to their farm Stift, about a german mile distant. for some time the Kiel the bay & in Summer the view must be beautiful to the footpath it there passes the canal, near Bollmer where it communicates with the Baltic: as soon as we had passed a few bridges over the same, we were in the Duchy of Slesvig & on the territory of Seitzaup, an Estate of Count Schack: of which Estate, Stift is a farm, rented by Hermann Pillinck &c: his dwelling is small, but he was received with the greatest friendship. On entering the house, the sitting room, well seasoned with tobacco smoke for both father & son smoke almost continually, Charles in St Thomas rests lying there with the head, or to the right: the old people's bed room adjoins: to the left is the dining room & next to it the bedrooms, which they had arranged for them two & for myself. Mrs Pillinck has a decent girl with her, who assists her & keeps her company: — we dined soon, after dinner coffee & conversation: before it got dark, Hermann & I called upon his sister, Henriette, who was educated in Mr Donner's house jointly with Betty, now a great lady in Copenhagen — Henriette is married to a Mr Lütkens who is a kind of superintendent (Inspector) for Count Schack: her husband is pretty well off in the world: her house is quite near that of her parents & she lives very happily. On Sunyear's night she was brought to bed of her eighth child: she was already well enough to receive me, which she did with the greatest kindness. I almost think she looks somewhat better than in her youth. We returned home supped at ½ 8 went to bed at 10 o'c.

A Tonne measures 280 Pfunden, a Pfunde = quat to 16 Square feet. Rent of a Tonne varies from 20 to 7 Dollars Currency annually.

Monday 15 January. This day O Connel's Trial was to begin. Mr Williams had been so kind to have Hermanns & my Cab ready headed. We rec'd at 9 o'Clock Upstreet breakfast at Mr Williams. Hermanns & I took a very pleasant walk to the beautiful Estate of Kroop, the grounds round the large mansion house are so publicly laid out, that they please even in the present unfavorable season: in the summer season the country here about must be delightful. From Kroop we walked for some time along the Canal and reached Veldman, near which as already said yesterday, is running into the Bay of Kiel; at Kroop they were repairing a sluice, and in order to enable the bricklayers to work, whilst it freezes so hard as it does now, the atmosphere is heated by stoves; navigation upon the Canal being at present interrupted by the ice, the time is very properly taken for making the necessary repairs. The Canal, I understood, is 18 feet wide, and 9 feet, which draw 10 feet, can pass thro' the Canal. It is highest at the Flemhuder Lake, and between this Lake & Rendsburg, where the Canal joins the Eider as well as between the same & its mouth in the Bay, there are three sluices on each side. Further to the N. E. near Veldman over which bridge we had to pass, to return to Kiel, along the Entrance of the Bay, lies a small fortress, called Friedrichsort. We came back in time for dinner, after dinner we conversed. Mr Williams is pleasant enough, but I should say, he prefers spending all his time in good of her acquaintance: at a later hour we called upon Henriette, whose acquaintance husband, I now made. Henriette felt well enough to request us to remain, but on account of her recent Confinement, we thought best to return home, however before I go aboard, all Mr Williams shewed us his new house, his barn (Dépense) and other buildings belonging to his farm: he thatches his barn with straw by manual labor. I left him at very general, being chiefly those of bricks only, but owing to the wood used, the houses built there are much exposed to fire, for which reasons it is now prohibited in Hamburg, & all the houses building there at present are "Brandmauern" that is to say, of bricks only. Knauer told me, that the value of houses is declining daily in this place; whilst a carriage was ordered for me, I walked about a little: on the top of a low hill a Castle without any pretensions to architectural beauty is built: in front of the same is an avenue of lime trees and I injoyed here a beautiful view over the lake. – the castle originally of stone, is patched up with bricks. – I returned to the Inn, Mad Jandtberg, which is the name of the greatest part of inns in this part of Holstein, and is a common open Wirthshaus but of by majesty for custom, I miss it. the road leads thro' a pretty, pearly woody country with lakes in every direction – to Eutin to the Mad Landtberg Barrings, considered to be the best hotel in Holstein. – I washed, dressed & dined and was then shown by the waiter "Jantkampf" to the house of my brother-in-law, the archdeacon Lindfield: he has married many years ago from where he lived 21 years ago, when I visited him of my dear sister Maria. January 1823. his house is now a large one, the last but one when going out of town, the very last, a smaller one is Lobeyberg? – when I opened the street door. he opened the drawing room door, he is little altered, only his hair is much greyer. he received me very friendly: he embraced & kissed me, and introduced me to his present wife, a stout, rather coarse looking woman, of whom I must however say at once, that, tho' she is not interesting, she is far from being unpleasant: her pronunciation is a little vulgar, but withal she says, has always much common sense: she is strong active & a good house wife, but has left quality is her uncommon love towards her stepchildren: Elizabeth speaks of her with the greatest affection & she Mrs Lindfield, is now nursing Elizabeth's boy Hannchen, 10 months old, who is not quite well. I am anticipating & return. The first who intend to educate Orbel Jemmy, was the third child of my poor Sister, Winifred, he is of course a little unlike either, but he is by no means a bad looking young fellow. his health is not very strong. I observed in him his grandfather's remarkable inclination for chemistry, natural philosophy &c. & his father intends sending him to the polytechnical institutions in Brunswick. Next came Elizabeth, now Bolwag, she is the eldest of the three children of my Sister's. I felt much affected, when I saw her. I embraced & kissed her on the forehead: it was rather dark, when she entered the Room, but when Candles were brought in, I saw, that she is good looking, tho' I believe, her marriage at the age of 19, the birth & the nursing of her boy a very stout little fellow, have spoilled her figure a good deal. Of course she is also of a sunburnt yellowish complexion, but not much more so than Rosa, with whom, she has altogether some resemblance, she is fat, but occasionally with a pretty delicate very singe, like my sister Maria had; she calls her eyes grey, I thought them to be blue. she has fine long black eye lashes, her nose is large & ugly, her mouth large, but adorned with a fine row of white teeth. she is tall & slim, Bolwag says, that she has had a very slender waist, now, I think, she does not show it. At first she was a little reserved with me. — The other brother, Johannes, is a strong stout fellow, he is in primis in the college and his intention is to go to the university, probably to study law. Hermannus, the present Mr Limpricht's boy son, is a round faced vulgar looking boy of about 8 years. Bolwag, Elizabeth's husband, is teacher at the college, about 30 years of age, his salary is very trifling, however he takes a pleasure in teaching: he is rather small, not handsome, but agreable. — I gave Elizabeth Mr Brandt's present of the baby's dress, which was much admired, but too small for Hannchen: the portfolio which I had bought for her in Liverpool, the brooch in Glasgow, she also was much pleased with. We conversed, supped at 8½ o Clock, talked again & spent the evening very pleasantly till past 11.

Thursday 18 January. Limpricht's house is large, he occasion-

Knauer, who had arrived in the morning, looked in and immediately made himself at home, as he always does. I then accompanied Elizabeth to her own house. she took me to Oelenbag's Study & the drawing room, the latter pretty enough, but not expensive. In a book Case she had various little nick-nacks and also many good books, amongst which I observed various, which had belonged to my dear sister. of whom there were likewise some handsome drawings & paintings. Elizabeth and I then sat down on the Sopha and had a long Chat. she is a most amiable Creature. — Oelenbag returned from the School house, he sat down with us, we returned to Lingnichidt. From 7 to 9 M^rs M^rs Oelenbag & I played whist. Heinrich & Johannes understand it & take an Interest in it. Elizabeth like her mother dislikes it. I gave to each of the three Boys three Dutch ducats. after Supper I shewed them the Lima Costumes. they had a portfolio full of Engravings & drawings, amongst which I found the Lima Costumes, which I had sent my Sister Marica many years ago. At 11 we went to Bed.

Friday 19 January. I again rose later than the remainder of the family, took coffee, wrote my diary & resolved to take a long walk. — First Eastwards thro' the town, then to the right, Southwards, thro' a village, called Tessau, until I came to a Turnpike road, which led me Westwards, this approaches the lake, here some pretty walks are laid out in a small wood, called Teltowerbeck, and taking me North-wards, I reached the town again, having thus made a circuit round the Lake. It was now about 1 o Clock. a Miss Reinecke, daughter of the music master of the same name, with whom Charles Pigny has been brought up after his father's death, was at Lingnichidt. She is a very young, rather handsome and pleasant little girl. she lives in the capacity of a companion with a young noble lady, whom she is instructing in the piano, upon an estate called Sterbagen, a mile or two distant, belonging to the family of the von Rosens. she had to come to town, well wrapped up. it is true, but in an open carriage, Nijmegen, in this cold, to attend a subscription ball, which was given that evening at Ramaiges. We dined. I went with Behrsday to purchase a pair of gloves, and also borrowed from him dress coat & trowsers. Hail & snow fell. We then all went to drink. Miss Reinecke came down at 7 o'clock, she looked well enough, tho' her gown was a little too high & enough rather too parsimonious: in order not to take "la fraicheur from it. She kept walking up & down the room from 7 to 8, tho' afterwards in the carriage, which an acquaintance sent, I imagine she had to sit down. Elizabeth in a rose colored silk & yellow dress looked very genteel: she was pale, had put on the breach I had just presented her, and the silver earring, which I had sent her from Cöln some years ago, also a set chain of her mother's. Limpricht, being still an invalid of the gout, & his son Heinrich, who is not yet confirmed, stayed at home. Behrsday & Johanna walked, Mrs Behrsday & Mrs Limpricht, who requested me to call her Emma, which however for the present I refused to do, Miss Reinecke & I drove to the Ball. The room is pretty large, but merely white washed & of course not carpeted. It was lighted up with a chandelier and branches with Candles fastened to the wall: I believe, the candles were stearine. About 100 people were present, more ladies than gentlemen. Behrsday introduced me to the two directors, who afterwards did not take any further notice of me. In Nijmegen, where I was as little known as in Cöln, many people at the ball spoke to me and endeavored to draw me into a Conversation: here no one spoke to me, tho' a great many enquired of Mrs Limpricht about me. With Behrsday I conversed often a great deal. They do here nothing but waltzing & dancing one or two Cotillons, they have the common waltz step, the Jäger step and the Lancier, as they call it, or Polka Step, as they call it in Allema: they all keep time extremely well, particularly the gentlemen, but the ladies are little graceful. Elizabeth & Mrs kind an apothecary's wife, were the most genteel looking. — I just tried to dance with Elizabeth. Miss Reinecke a clergyman's wife, but not knowing the steps, was soon obliged to leave off. At about midnight Supper a paroli was made for Supper, which was laid and eaten in an adjoining room, in the dancing saloon small tables were placed and every one who had paid, which, before leaving, was paid for at the Buffet — I ordered a bottle of Champaigne, per Stuck. thro' it cost 6f. There was a ball of the Easter assembly (Fremdlinie) Families of men, who are in Local employments, clergymen, teachers &c, occasionally also Burgesses, whom I consider to be little shop-keepers & handicraftsmen gain their dances in the same rooms, but then of course those who are present this evening, do not assist. We don't leave at 4 in the morning: hardly had Elizabeth slept 1/2, when she ran into the bedroom, to see how her Finger was —

Saturday 21 January. Johannes & Heinrich, before they went to school, came to my bed to wish me good bye! I rose at 8 o'Clock, when I went below, Mrs Lindpaintner was already making the Coffee, Lindpaintner Miss Reinecke & Elizabeth also made their appearance, the conversation turned of course on last night's & the ball occurrences. At 10 o'Clock I went to bid good bye to the three ladies Willank, on my return I made Elizabeth read English, which she did fairly, she also understood some rather difficult passages in Lord Byron's Corsair. Miss Reinecke left for Copenhagen in the same manner, as she had come, in an open Carriage. Mr Rinck called at part 11 in a similar one, as Mr Flensburgh. I bade good bye to this whole family, I gave Elizabeth a kiss on the forehead and off we started. The Road is from Sorø, but the road hard & smooth, little is to be said of the Country, that which we drove, is upon the whole plain, here & there a little woody, with occasional Lakes & ponds. Our Conversation was not very interesting and now & then both fell asleep. We came upon the Kompisse road (Chaussée) and at 3 we arrived at Schwanbeck, the last place in this direction, which to complain of my yesterday's conversation at dinner with Ernestine; at home it appears, she had been riding the high horse, sounding terror upon my opinion agreeing with hers with regard to her friend.

The truth is: she ought to live with him in Norway, as I told her, but she her mother & brother ought to relent in their harshness towards him I of course apologized Mme Miss Gad, to ola Mr Steenberg for any disagreeableness of which my conversation with Ernestine might, unwillingly on me, have been the cause, and then went to the left (Nr 7 in Steenberg house, where I was a long time occupied with examining the contents of the large box, which I had left there with Lucas Wellmuth. At 6 o'Clock Sunday I went to George Bauer's, where the following assembled: Mr his lady, both very agreeable, after tea had been taken, I took an opportunity of conversing a few minutes with her — Mr Fritz Bauer, with whom I had a long talk in the smoking Room & with whom I am engaged reading myself yesterday — Bayer, pleasant, both generally good enough to the records — Esq of this city — lawyer Buchtenmann, his lady & daughter, the two latter very amiable, but with whom I had no opportunity of conversing — Augusta Bauer, whom I led to dinner, a plain but amiable girl, the only unmarried daughter of Bauer's — a Mr Fiedler from Bingen & his nephew who is Clerk at Bauer's — a Mrs Hasenclever, an elderly lady, whom I not agreeably with — Mr Hildebrand, near whom I sat yesterday at dinner, his husband and perhaps one or two more. — Dinner was not so splendid as yesterday's; — all indeed I myself went to the smoking room, and soon after tea had been taken, Buchtenmann & then several of I left in order to go to the Ball at Rainville's, whither we two drove in a Droschke. This Ball was given by Subscription, for a single gentleman including Supper 6f, for a gentleman with one or two ladies 10f. Jaeger's Armenians had played themselves at the head. — Steenberg & I met Edmundsons & his wife Countenance who was prettily & genteely dressed, in the anteroom, where the Cloaks supper. they say, was good. I ate little. as usually on such occasions. Marshall ordered a bottle of Champaign & so did I. it was excellent, as was it. I accompanied Miss Tolstoff out of the ballroom, then Mr Knowles & finally a young lady, who had come with the apothecary Simson, with whom & his lady I drove home & Sievking's house at somewhat past 2 o'Clock.

Tuesday 23d January. see page 63.

Saturday 14 October 1823. see P. 2, p. 190. I rose at half past 8 & after breakfast I took a walk by myself. Doctor Robertson's house lies at a corner, on the South Side of the long narrow Street, which is 3/4 miles long from the extremity of Strood, over the bridge, thro' Rochester, to the extremity of Chatham. the Street door opens of course to the street, whilst on the west side of the house, a neat pretty steep rises up a hill, the high ground, which extends behind, to the Southward of the town. I walked up, and had thence a fine view over the surrounding country, enlivened by many windmills, over the town just before me, then the River Medway, in which many ships of war are lying at anchor; they are, what is called in ordinary, that is to say, the small part of the guns, of the masts & various other things, are taken off and kept on shore, and can quickly be fitted out, when required. I continued my walk over the high ground, descended, and returned thro' part of the long street, in which I observed but few pretty shops, to Robertson's house. I talked with the girls, Mr R. being unwell & in bed. when the Doctor came home from his visit, we walked out together. We went down the town the same way, which I had come in the morning. he pointed out to me the village of Frindsbury, which to the Northward lies on the other side of the Medway and various fortifications, which were built at the time, the french invasion was feared, but which are now gradually going to ruin. to the South are Fort Pitt and Fort Clarence. We then turned our steps to the Barracks, which a little out of town are situated in a wood S.E.

of an Iron Tube, more than a foot long, and filled with powder. There were two large pieces of the main mast of the Royal George, a large piece of her Cable, some meadick which by the action of water had been joined into one compact mass, various implements, such as a fife, a piece of leather and various other things all gone to the bottom of the sea, when this man of war, the Royal George, was lost off Portsmouth in 1782, and brought to light again in 1839 by means of an apparadus, of which I saw the model on a very small scale of Copper in the polytechnic Institution in London Piccadilly and I drove round to the dockyards, which cover a large space of Ground, all walled round. At the Entrance I had to write my Name in a Book kept for the purpose, as Henry Witt, merchant of Edinburgh, no foreigners being admitted without a special licence. The grandeur, with which every thing is carried on, is astonishing. there are 3 or 4 Slips, where vessels are building, covered with roofs with glass windows, these roofs Inclosure of copper are now made of thick brown paper tarred & painted, which is cheaper & lighter than copper. The Trafalgar with Nelson's bust at the head is building, she is a beautiful three decker for a hundred Guns, about 200 feet long; the Admiral's Cabin is on deck, she is nearly finished. also the Wall, the largest man of war Steamer is building. of another ship the keel was just laid, as are represented upon Lord Alexander Cochrane's plate they are building the James, a Steamer which is to move both ways & forwards & which does away the necessity of turning. she is 180 feet long & only 29 feet broad. Various other vessels are in the different State of progress, when they are at a certain point, they are left uninvaded for two 7 years for the wood to get well seasoned. Considerable quantities of Timber are kept in large depots formed by the Medway the water of which is impregnated with a solution of a certain mineral, the name of which I do not recollect. after the timber has been kept in these depots a certain length of time and been well penetrated by their waters, it is said to be sayasoned * is expected to withstand the dry rot; also sails are preserved in the same manner and do not rot when they are kept in a damp state. Under one of the very extensive Roofs all kinds of boats were building. Instead of timber of the boats has been placed lengthways, thus now it is placed outside then, and inside another coating is given of which the timber is placed cross ways, between the two, common oiled paper is put. The boats built in this manner are very strong. I saw here one of the boats belonging to the Deacon's yacht. outside it is painted black with a gilt line inside green with a similar gilt line. the Jarrin to sit upon, the grating, and mahogany. There was a life boat, which is kept buoyant by the sides being hollow, also by a hollow case in the shape of a coffin being placed in the middle, and the air which is kept in these Cavities renders it impossible for the boat to sink. generally these boats in these life boats are lashed to the seats, that they may not be washed over board. We went to the smithery, which puts me in mind of the fabled Regions of the Cyclops, forty or more fires, each a forge, burn in all directions. One of the labouring men, handsome & intelligent, tho' rather sooty & blackish, explained very thing to us. To blow the fire, bellows are now more used, by means of a Steam Engine two pumps are put in motion and these create a Current of air, which thro' a number of pipes is carried to each forge respectively, a valve easily graduates the quantity of air to be admitted. The same Engine moves in the Smithery two hammers, the one weighing 7 or 8 Tons by means of a spring, the principle of which I did not understand, comes down upon the Iron with the weight of 5½ Tons and gives 130 blows in a minute: the others, called the Hercules, reduced this spring - comes down upon the Iron with [illegible] weights of [illegible] and gives [illegible] blows in a minute[illegible] somewhat less power and two or three Seconds elapse between each blow. We were told that the Iron, when thoroughly heated or rather melted is white like snow (however when I saw it in the Yard at Low Moor on the 14th Dec as p. 21, it appeared to me rather of a light red colour) and that it can easily be pulled out of the furnace by means of Iron hooks and then be shaped in any way required. Outside of the Smithery some finely worked anchors just finished were lying, one weighing [illegible] The same Steam Engine puts in motion in another large apartment Steel Screws, which with the greatest Ease bore holes into Iron; it serves for clearing out the remnants of water out of the Docks, for lifting out Beams from the water in which they are floating, up to the Saw mill, where again it puts into motion a number of Saws, which cut the wood with the greatest Ease & Nicety in planks of every thickness. The Remnants & sweepings of wood, which are of no further use are piled up in heaps and sold monthly by public Sale. In many of these Establishm[ents] Convicts are employed; they were all dressed alike in ordinary light brown short Cloth Breeches, waistcoats & jackets, grey & white striped Stockings, thick shoes, and round low ankle an Iron which does not impede their walking, whole gangs of them walked about with hardly any guard attending them, also on board the Convict ships, where they take their meals & sleep, they are very slightly guarded. The whole Dock yard is walled round, and there is then little Chance of their escaping, which happens very rarely. The Convict ship, now called the Forbidden, which I went on accompanied by Mr Daly, an assistant Surgeon of Doctor Robertson's is an old large man of war, there is on board a very Chapel, where divine Service is said twice a week, the ship is extremely well aired & clean in the Extreme.

staging the "Belagerungszustand" which, tho' very plain if compared to Chopin's however not so very bad. After having dressed, I started with the object to pay visits, first to Lehmanns, with whom her sister lives for the present, he is busy altering his house, as soon as it be finished, the marriage with Sophie Leibrock will take place, perhaps about the middle of June. Thence I went to Mr.
Thorndike Rencher, where little girl is 3 weeks old, the mother is very pretty & amiable — also visited Mr. Neumann, whom I visited next. I was much pleased. her great liveliness is very amusing, ah Lawyer Liebe's, his wife was not in: but in his office I remained with him a short time, lawyer Stuhlmann also called. Liebe is very sickly, — now I visited my stepfather Hesse's, he was abroad, having gone on a short trip to Holstein, but his wife was very gracious. As we young Hesses, Miss Mary & young Mr Neumann were present. I had still half an hour at my disposal and having met Warndorf, his wife & children in the Palmaille, I went with them to old Mr Clemenson's. At three o'clock I dined in family at old Mr Siemssen's. Lehmann & his sister, Henry, his wife & children were of course also there. With the Belagerungszustand we talked an hour or so, until it was time to go the Altona theater. the Mr.
Siemssen had taken sufficient seats in the first tier, the house is old, small and dirty, however it was crowded and the actors performed very finely, indeed I may say, they performed well, there were several from the Hamburg Stadt-Theater, I amused myself well: there was only too much of a good thing. The plays performed were all comedies or rather Vaudeville & Farces: "der Sohn im Sandwerken" "Einer muß heirathen" "Klopfjagen Gast" a Ballad or rather the waltz of Thiele out of the Ballet "der Wilde", very possibly danced by Miss Horton" "zwey Mädchen in Uniform" "finally "Münchhausen in Grünberg". The last we did not see, as it was already getting too late, past 11, — we took a little Supper at old Mr Siemssen's & I reached my lodgings at Rainville's, past 12, having spent a rather quiet but by no means disagreeable Sunday — Yesterday I called also upon the two Misses Finch — pleasantly at dinner: after dinner, whilst coffee was handed round, I had some talk with Mr Raue & Mr Lenford, a plain but pleasant woman, in the smoking room with large Reinecke. and finally I played at whist with Lawaty, Miss Thuname & Mr Sterking, the place of which latter Reinecke took afterwards.

Tuesday 23 Apr. I passed a very quiet day. I commenced making out the genealogical tree of the Wellenbergs, took a walk after dinner towards evening when the weather was very pleasant. it is pretty to see now, how everything is sprouting now and the delicate new green commences every where to appear. The leaving in the usual quiet manner at old Reinecke's. Kil Aloes said road Meares 12 6. Edward Reinecke has sold his signatures for 10 Shares in the Flensburg Rendsburg, for which there is no conception yet, with 7 ½ advance; the other 10 he keeps still.

Wednesday 24 Apr. The whole morning I spent in a quiet manner. at half past 5 o'clock I drove in an Omnibus to Hamburg, and went to the large Theater in the Dammthorstraße. it is a pretty large edifice, built in the inside in a plain but not tasteless style. it has three tiers of boxes & a gallery. the pit is divided in the real pit, which is the hard lowered floor the Stage, and the so called "Parkett", which has no further advantage over the pit, except its being nearer the stage & the seats on the former being divided from each other by arms, & that each seat is former an armchair. I took a Seat here for 36 ß. the house was empty. however the opera Norma was very well performed. I was highly pleased with Miß Ewer, who sang the Norma. she is much younger and also thinner than the Pandanelli. her Norma is thus less majestic than the Pandanelli's, but pleased me quite as well, Mlle Richringer's Adalgisa is perhaps less pleasing than the Rosi's, not owing to her inferior singing, but on accounts of her less engaging Exterior. she is too fat. too short & not young enough. Orveda's Roman general is by far superior to Diedi's. I was highly amused and was home just past 10 o'clock.

out by a boy. that he was the young Count Schimmelmann, Blücher's grandson, a man of very large property, Emil & Georg Hope and a Miss de Jong, a nice girl. When we went to dinner Count Blücher took of course Mrs.
Hope. I not knowing who Count Schimmelmann was, followed and took Miss Hope, Schimmelmann Miss de Jongh. — I had of course unwittingly committed a blunder, — I was not well pleased at dinner, to my left sat Mrs Hope, who is so very polite towards big fools as the Counts are, that she has not much attention left for little me. Miss Angelo, Miss Mary to my right was rather over amiable, — and then I should certainly have been better pleased if I had had Miss de Jongh near me. But Count Blücher is agreeable enough but his deafness rendered it very unpleasant to converse with him. — After dinner I had some pleasant Conversation with Mr Donner, who has been a good deal abroad in the world both in the Navy & as Captain of Merchant vessels, but as his complaint, has not been able to get on; — he lives now with his wife, a Miss King, whose sister William Hope is going to marry, his family reside at Fordain & he is employed in the Providence Service. — In the Evening soon I talked with the young Count Schimmelmann an insignificant good kind of young fellow. He has hurried back from his travels in the East to be present at the 50th anniversary of his grand-parents' marriage-day (goldene Hochzeit) which will be solemnly celebrated on 1st May. His mother, Fanny Blücher is dead: his uncle, Gustavus von Blücher & his lady are expected to-morrow. When the two Counts were gone, old Hope, Newman, Mr Donner & I played at whist, which was very disagreeable, for the old Hope, with whom I unfortunately played four Rubbers, continually finder fault in a most annoying manner, without knowing more about it than I, old Mr Hope & Arthur Donner played at Gabriel which is a simple game young Hope & a young gentleman, who came in, followed. Miss Hope & Miss de Jongh were occupied with sewing

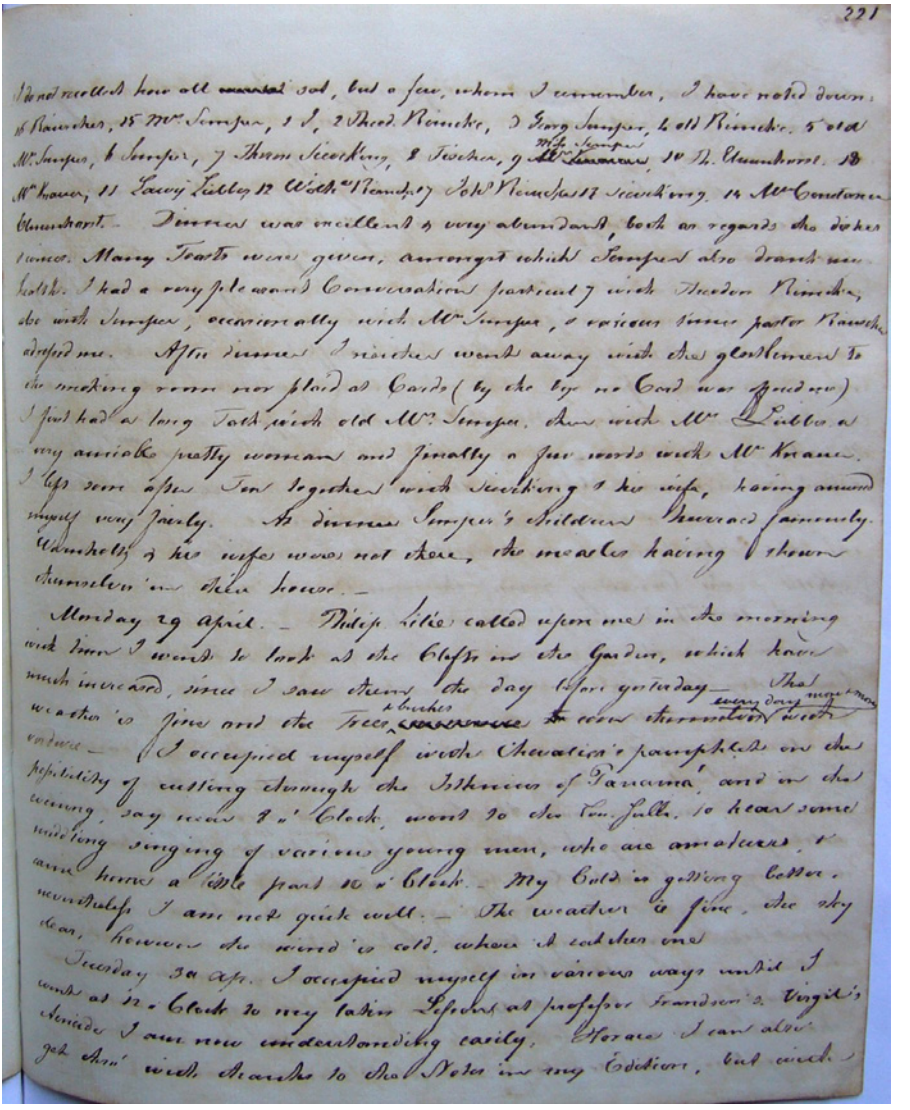
near the Ottonau church yard, and reached my lodgings at 2 h. Oclock, shortly afterwards I went to Krauers, where more than the usual Serenation was assembled viz: Professor Bohm & his wife, Wamkolz & his wife, Mlle Reinecke, Mlle Emmanuel Mendelssohn, Hiller & myself. William Krauers keeps his bed, little Julia is still very thin & weak, and Maria & Emily must go to bed early, the former because she has an attack of the Chlorosis, the latter to keep her Company. Hillers holds out little hopes for me to get back the Coins which I have lent, as the money changers will not give them back without their getting for them, for what they have paid and the money found in the waiter's possession is not sufficient for so much. We left past 11 o Clock.



Saturday 27 Sep. I have a tremendous Cold. Young Mendelssohn was with me an hour & a half occupied with pointing out to me the Route I ought to travel thro' Germany & Switzerland to Italy. In Consequence of the Excavations which have been carried on for the formation of the inclined plain in the former Sloe's hop garden, the foundation of the hill upon which Radowitz's garden stands has in some parts disappeared and accordingly deep Clefts appear in many places, some deeper, some less deep, some longer, some shorter, and if some measures efficient are not taken very shortly I should not at all wonder, if part of Radowitz's garden was to fall in. Many people come to look at these ruins. A cold high wind blows & the ill looks rough & uncomfortable. My cold became so bad, that I was obliged to send word to Mr Mendelssohn, that I could not go to the Club, I managed however to go to Sievekings where with him & his wife I spent two pleasant hours till half past 9. Tea Sunday 28 Sep. I felt so unwell in the morning, that I sent word to Semper that I could not assist at the christening of his new born & even thought of lying down. However just previous Semper came to lay out for me a route for my travels in Switzerland, then Semper came. I played with him a very amusing drama

Do not recollect how all ~~were~~ sat, but a few, whom I remember, I have noted down: ~~Saunders~~, 2 Mr Semper, 3 I, 4 Theod Reinicke, 5 Geo Semper, 6 old Reinicke, 7 old Mr Semper, 8 Semper, 9 Thom Steerbing, 10 Fischer, 11 Mr Semper, 12 H. Claussenius, 13 Mr Hoyer, 14 Lewy Tobler 15 Wilh Reinicke 16 Joh Reinicke 17 Steerbing, 18 Mr Condanius Claussenius. Dinner was excellent & very abundant, both as regards the dishes & wines. Many Toasts were given, amongst which Semper also drank my health. I had a very pleasant Conversation partic[ularly] with Theodor Reinicke, also with Semper, occasionally with Mr Semper, & various times pastor Rauch addressed me. After dinner I & others went away with the gentlemen to the smoking room & played at Cards (by the bye no Card was spoiled) I just had a long Talk with old Mr Semper, then with Mr Tobler a very amiable pretty woman and finally a few words with Mr Krause. I left soon after Ten together with Steerbing & his wife, having amused myself very finely. At dinner Semper's children ~~behaved~~ behaved famously. Wimbolt & his wife were not there, the measles having shown themselves in their house. —

Monday 29 April. — Bishop Tobler called upon me in the morning with him I went to look at the Clefts in the Garden, which have much increased, since I saw them the day before yesterday — That day was more warm & the weather is fine and the Trees & bushes ~~are~~ are now thoroughly green with verdure — I occupied myself with Thwaites's pamphlets on the Possibility of cutting through the Isthmus of Panama, and in the evening, say near 8 o' Clock, went to the Ten Falls, to hear some singing of various young men, who are amateurs, & indeed I have a little past 10 o' Clock. My Cold is getting better, nevertheless I am not quite well. — The weather is fine, the sky clear, however the wind is cold, when it catches one

Tuesday 30 Apr. I occupied myself in various ways until I went at 12 o Clock to my Tutor Lefevre at professor Svanberg's. Virgil's Aeneide I am now understanding easily. Horace I can also get thro' with thanks to the Notes in my Edition, but with

Further I find the greatest difficulty, as the Notes are only written and do not explain the meaning.— From Frankfort I went direct to my Cousin's in Hamburg, and after having remained a little, she was so kind to accompany me to a very handsome Garden- and Glass-ware Shop of King Brothers, N° 22 Neuenwall, where I bought for Henny Sieveking for her birthday, a China Tray, white with gilt edges, with two dozen dessert plates for 4 ß. 8 for Lehmann & Sophia Willink as a wedding present, two handsome white glass fruit baskets (Obstkörbe) to put upon the dinner table for 32 ß. We then went together with Frances & little Maria to the New Hotel in the Jungfernstieg the City of Petersburg, which is open for inspection, and the rooms of which, which we saw, are all tastefully & prettily arranged & furnished. The greater part of the Rooms have a particularly pretty View over the Alster, the surrounding streets, the Lombard's bridge, the outer Alster & the Country round the same. On my return I looked in at Mrs Th. Sieveking's, dined at home, read a little and have now been writing the foregoing. It is 8 o Clock and I have only just lighted my Candle.— The evening or rather the hours from 9 to 10 I spent as usually at old Reinecke's.

Wednesday 1 May 1844. Mrs Sieveking's birthday who completed her 58 year; also the 25 anniversary of Count Blücher-Altona's marriage with Jeffrid and the good Altonaers made it accordingly a complete holiday. They say, that as early an hour as 4 o Clock in the morning, the Count & Countess were awakened by music: at 7 o'clock there was again music or singing before the house: I also I did not hear any thing, because I breakfasted with Sievekings. I started at about 10 o Clock, when the civic guard on foot & on horseback paraded before the Count's door. The Infantry dressed in short blue coats or jackets with short skirts & shakos, with black facings, lined with red lace, and white trowsers, and as about 8 hundred of them. Koch commands the 1st, Meinert the 2d Battalion. The Cavalry, the so called Prinz Carl, is only about 60 men strong, they are dressed in green short Coats and grey pantaloons with a black stripe down the Seam. I recollect three times, when there were two pretty large cups, the green & the yellow guard, which have dwindled down to this small Number. There was some huzzaing, when the Count & the Countess showed themselves at the window. He made a short speech of which I did not hear a word, drank a glass of wine and then accompanied by his Son, (Gustavus) his nephews, grandchild (the young Count of Schimmelmann) and several other military men amongst whom Edward Reinicke as aide-de-camp of Koch, walked up & down the lines, which being done, the troops returned home. There was a pretty considerable Crowd of the lower Classes. I believe Theodor Ehrentreutz & I were the only respectable looking people amongst them. I now went home for an hour, dressed, and at 12 o'clock called upon old Mr Siewching, but she having gone to the Count's I also went thither and entered at the same time with Theodor Reinicke: the Rooms upstairs were crowded. I went up to the Count, who received me not coldly, but very off hand: gradually I came as far as the Countess room, where several ladies, amongst whom the Jofemin Gabain, Mr. Siewching, Mr Cornelius Willink & Miss Gray were. I staid hardly 10 minutes and left with the Siewchings In this second room all the presents were put up, which the Count & Countess have received from various persons, as for instance: the carpet embroidered by the 30 Ladies, the two armchairs from the opposite Ladies, the silver Urn from the handicraft men, two gold Spoons from Salomon Heyne, a silver Tureen from Consul Kl Donner, a silver Stand in the shape of a vine with a gold basin on the top for flowers from Mr Baars, a Screen from Koch & partner of Tawah & Koch & a beautifully embroidered red Velvet portefeuille with a congratulatory address from the French Community &c. &c. I then remained some time with Mr Siewching and on my return to Rainville's found that many people were in the garden, some walking about, others sitting. Some of the Remedios to look at the Ball, how it was arranged. In the morning old Mr Bond & Wilhelmine, as well as the two daughters of Kranen & the two of Prof Ehrenfort had come for the same object. In the garden old Mr Bond was smoking his pipe, I conversed with him & his lady, also with old Lübbe, and made the acquaintance of a pretty, young, amiable, merry, but beyond exception stout Lady of the Jewish persuasion, called Jopé, who with her husband & children lives in one of the small houses of Rainville's, then was our neighbour is Mr Lübbe, who gave the day a dinner party to the younger members of the family, the two girls of Kranen's, Wilhelmine Reinecke, Lawyer Lübbe & his wife, Caroline Tesdorpf & others. — With reading a little in my old diaries I passed the time very pleasantly till 10 o'Clock, when the first ladies, I believe they were Hamburghers, arrived. Gradually more & more people arrived and as both the two receiving rooms were so crowded, that one could hardly move, the ladies were also obliged to stand up; the gentlemen were desired to leave the room, where the ladies were. I however did not stir, which was well done for Finders who had obeyed orders, could not get back thro' the Crowd to Mrs Ammann, whom he had asked, to go with him to the dining room, and there she had to go by herself with the Stream. — As soon as the Consul & the Baronesse had arrived with their Suite, all moved down the Stairs to the dining Saloon, which as well as an adjoining Tent, which is Temporarily erected, was very prettily decorated with orange trees, & various arms, flags & banners. — There hundred & fifty three persons sat down, and the tables were arranged about in this shape to read, but far from fluently; soon after Barbeck gave the health of the Brideroom & grandchildren of the Count & Countess, to which Gustavus von Blücher replied very pithily, drinking to Alsen's welfare. - the next toast was Herzfeld's "the Ladies" in four doggerel rhymes and the last clergyman Nebendal's "old Mr & Mrs von Quales" Mr von Quales being the Countess' sister, and they also celebrating this day their "golden wedding". Near 9 o Clock the Count & Countess rose, and the party broke up: I went with Mr Kramer & Mr Rhynes to old Mr Tiedtke where the two girls of Kramers were & where we stood some time taking tea; when Mr Kramer was gone in her Carriage, I removed to the dining Saloon, where still a good many gentlemen & a few ladies were enjoying themselves, I made the re-acquaintance of Gustav Wall. of Heinrich Schaar, with both of whom I talked a long while, also a few words with the lawyer Heinrich Stoppel, and after having listened to the amateur singing of the young men, I finished the evening with a long conversation with old Nyssen. Kramer was amongst them all & was not sparing with his Champaign. Near 12 o Clock I retired to

Thursday 2d May. Soon after breakfast I drove in an Omnibus to Mr Kramer's, with the object to invite her, to accompany me to the Hamburg Theater in the evening, which however she was prevented from doing: she is a good kind of woman and I believe she is fond of me; but I regret, that it is the same kind which we all know in the times of my childhood & youth. I do not admire her, the other day she commenced to hold a long lecture regarding my negligence in allowing a drawer with money to stand open to-day that did the same, because my shoes were not quite so glossy as they should be in her opinion; I also she thought it was very improper, that I invited Miss Teodorff to ~~dinner~~ lobby, which might injure her good Name; - now, was ever such nonsense heard! - I thank my Stars, in telling her of course mildly an early Omnibus to Kramer in Hamburg, they were gone to Church, it being the second anniversary of the Commencement of the dreadful fire in 1842, and at about 11h Kramer & I walked, whilst Nelly, a Miss Tandy (the School-mistress) and the two Children, Maria & Louisa (the latter, a little girl whom Kramers have taken to their house & whom they educate) jointly with Maria) drove to the Rail Road Station near the Dreich Thor, we had to wade a considerable time & started at 22h o' Clock, we together occupying the so called "Coupé", which is in the first Class conveyance the foremost read. The Railroad to Bergedorf, two germany miles distant, runs over an extremely low country, with ditches and low meadows, lying lower than the level of the Ell on both sides, and which for by far the greater part is called the Billwerder, the small river the Bille flowing to our left, only occasionally visible, to our right we had first the various dykes of the Marschdörfer, further on at a greater distance, for here the Ell makes a greater bend to the South, whilst the Rail road keeps on in a straight line, Moorfleth and Allermöhe, to the left or to the North of the Rail Road, we leave the suburb of St. Georg, which lies west of the Steinthor, further on more Northward, the two villages of Hamm & Horn, the road which passes these villages, which are filled with country houses, leads to the villages of Schiffbeck, Rienbeck, which lie in an extremely sandy Country on the top of the sandy hills, which many Centuries back formed the boundary of the Ell, I recollect that in former years, when with my parents we drove this way over Rienbeck to Ragnit, my grandfather's Estate in Mecklenburg close to Wittenburg, a few miles from this side of Schwerin, a hill was pointed out to me near Schiffbeck, where a famous Northern pirate used to anchor with his vessel, all the low land, which extends about 1 mile in width and perhaps three in length along the river & below its bend, has gradually been gained from the same and is now defended against its waves by dykes which surround it.

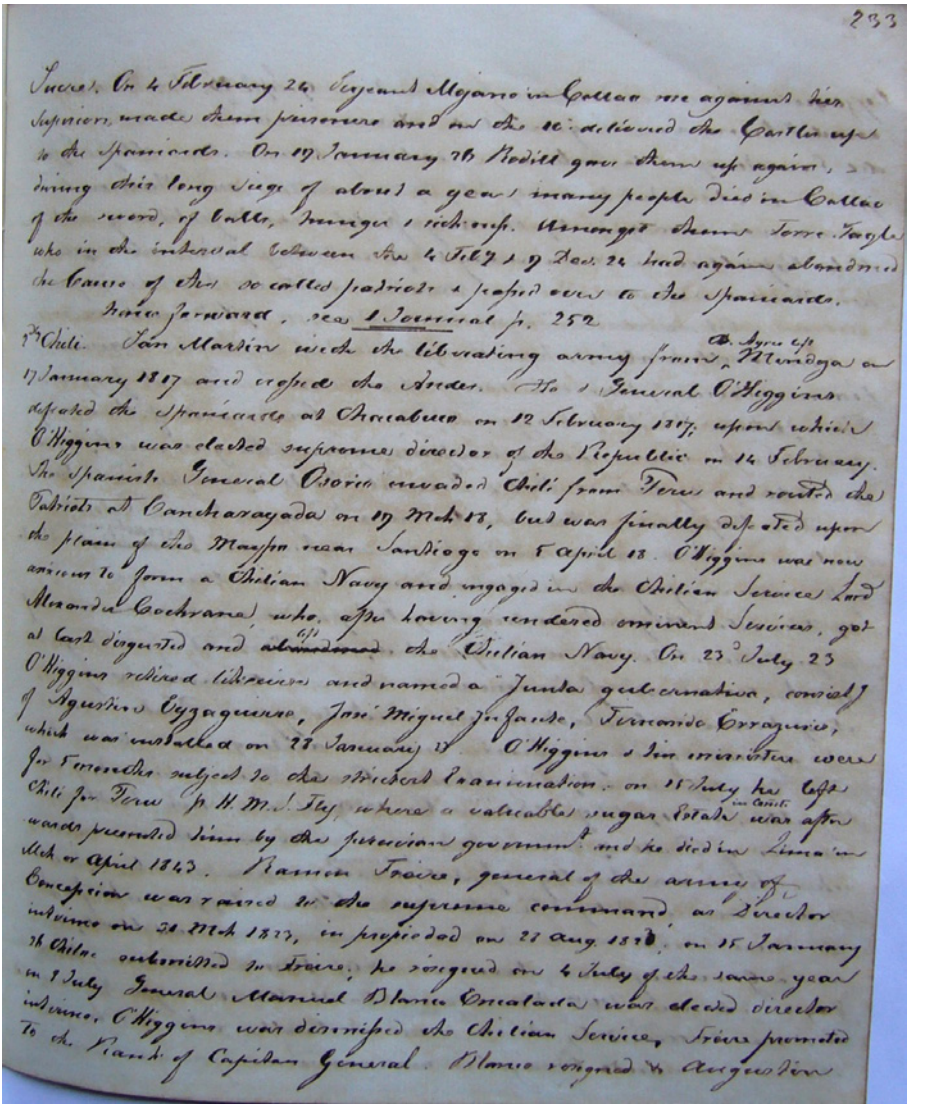
Memoranda regarding the Chilian & Peruvian Republics



On 6 Sept 1820 San Martin's Invading Expedition from Chili landed in Peru, 9 Leagues to the South of Peru. 5 Nov 1820 the Spanish man of war Esmeralda lying in Callao Bay was cut out by boats belonging to the Chilian Navy, headed by the Admiral Lord Alex. Cochrane. — On 3d Dec 1820 the Spanish Regiment Numancia, which was stationed in Lima, passed over to San Martin. On 5 July 1821, the Spaniards abandoned Lima, on 12 July San Martin entered, and the Independence of Peru was proclaimed. In the Beginning of 1822 the Spanish army in Peru amounted to 15000 men, viz. Canterac in Jauja, La Serna in Cuzco, Ramirez in Arequipa. San Martin, new protector, began to be disliked by the Peruvians, in 1822 he was joined by the Marquis of Torre Tagle & the Government. The Order of the Sun was created. In the Night of 7 April 1822 Don Tristan with Gamarra as Chief of the Staff was routed near Ica, at the Estate of la Madalena, belonging to the present general Salas, or rather to his wife, by Canterac & Carratala. San Martin who had entered into Correspondance with Bolivar sailed for Guayaquil towards the End of June 1822, where they had an Interview, which led to no satisfactory Result. During the Absence of San Martin, General Alvarado was appointed Commander in Chief, & Torre Tagle had the supreme executive authority. Monteagudo, San Martin's Secretary, now minister of finances made himself equally conspicuous & odious and at the Request of the Peruvians he was banished. Monteagudo returned to Lima in 1825 under the protection of Bolivar and was assassinated in the evening of 28 July by a negro near the Church of San Juan de Dios. It has not been discovered, who ordered the deed was done. — After San Martin's Return from Guayaquil, the first Congress met in Lima with Luna Pyarro as president, on 20 Sept 1822

San Martin retired from public Life, he left Peru for Valp. in Oct 1822. he soon went to Santiago, in the latter part of the took up his abode in Mendoza and finally left for Europe, where I believe, he still at the present moment lives in Brussels. The Junta Gubernativa, that ruled Lima after San Martin's Abdication, only remained in power 5 months & a few days. On the 28 February 23 it was deposed by Santa Cruz, then general, who headed a military movement, & who obliged the congress to recognize Jose Riva Agueros as president. he himself as Commander in Chief sailed from Callao for upper Peru with 5000 men, which army, without even coming to blows with the Spaniards, was completely dispersed & ruined. The Spaniards took again possession of Lima & invested Callao. Bolivar, after having defeated the last divisions of the Spaniards in Columbia on 24 May 22 at Pichincha near Quito and General Sucre to the assistance of the Peruvians; on 22 June 1823 the Congress invested Sucre with the supreme Command having deposed Riva Agueros who left for Trujillo, where he was again reinstated in the presidency by a portion of the Congress. - it is said, that he there entered into treasonable negotiations with the Spaniards, to put an End to which he was made prisoner in Trujillo by Antonio Gutierrez de la Fuente, then Capitan, who then for the first time [illegible] some attention upon himself. Canterac left Lima with the Spanish army and was followed by Sucre, who commanded the united Columbian, Peruvian & Chilian army, out of the latter 2 Battalions, there can at that time have been but few Torre Tagle remained in Lima, General Guido governor of the Capital. On 1 Sept 1823 Bolivar entered Lima and was invested with the supreme authority. The Arequipa Sucre was taken by surprise by General Ramirez & had to evacuate the town, when General Miller joined under Sucess. On 4 February 24 Sergeant Alejano in Callao rose against their Superiors, made them prisoners and on the 10 delivered the Castles up to the Spaniards. On 19 January 26 Rodil gave them up again, during this long Siege of about a year many people died in Callao of the sword, of balls, hunger & sickness. Amongst them Torre Tagle who in the interval between the 4 Feb. & 19 Dec. 24 had again abandoned the Cause of the so called patriots & joined over to the Spaniards.

3. Chili. San Martin with the liberating army from Mendoza on 17 January 1817 and crossed the Andes. He & General O'Higgins defeated the Spaniards at Chacabuco on 12 February 1817, upon which O'Higgins was elected supreme director of the Republic on 14 February. The Spanish General Osorio invaded Chili from Peru and routed the Patriots at Cancharayada on 19 March 18, but was finally defeated upon the plain of the Maypu near Sandiago on 5 April 18. O'Higgins was now anxious to form a Chilian Navy and engaged in the Chilian Services Lord Alexander Cochrane, who, after having rendered eminent Services, got at last disgusted and abandoned the Chilian Navy. On 23 July 23 O'Higgins refused likewise and named a "Junta gubernativa, consisting of Agustino Eyzaguirre, Jose Miguel Infante, Fernando Errazuriz, which was installed on 28 January 25. O'Higgins & his ministers were for remarks subjected to the strictest examination. on 15 July he left Chili for Peru in H.M.S. Fly, where a valuable sugar estate (in Cuzco) was after wards presented him by the peruvian government and he died in Lima in March or April 1843. Ramon Freire, general of the armies of Concepcion was raised to the supreme command as Director interino on 28 March 1823, in propiedad on 28 Aug. 1826. on 25 January 26 Chiloe submitted to Freire, he resigned on 4 July of the same year on 9 July General Manuel Blanco Encalada was elected director interino. O'Higgins was dismissed the Chilian Service, Freire promoted to the Rank of Capitan General. Blanco resigned & Argueldin Eyzaguirre succeeded as vice president on 9 Sept. 26. Freire was made "comandante general de Armas" and "Inspector general del Exercito y de la Milicia". A military commotion obliged Eyzaguirre to abdicate (he died 17 July 27, 70 years old) and Ramon Freire was encharged by the congress del mando politico y militar de la Republica on 24 January 1827, on 5 May of the same year he retired & was succeeded by Francisco Antonio Pinto as vice president who on 19 Oct was elected "en propiedad". Wie on 29 Oct inaugurated in account of ill health, when the president of the Senate Francisco Ramon Vicuña, took the reins of government. General Joaquin Prieto, whom Pinto had appointed to the Command of the army of the South, commenced a conspiracy against the government, which was held up by Colonel Bulnes & General Santa Cruz; the president Vicuña went to Valparaiso, where the Government was installed. Colonel Bulnes & others commanded the troops which were favorably inclining to Prieto after some insignificant skirmishing. General Freire was on 17 December 1829 acknowledged by both parties commander in chief, a provisional Junta was appointed, but Prieto refused to give up the command of his division. Freire & Vicuña disagreed, they however left both for the South to oppose Prieto: now the deputies of the provinces met in Santiago and elected Francisco Tagle president, and Thomas Ovalle vice president of the Republic, on 17 July 1830. On 16 April the two hostile armies of Prieto & Freire met near Talca and the river Lircay, where Freire was totally defeated, himself made prisoner and banished to Peru. Immediately after the battle, Colonel Tupper, who fought on Freire's side, was revolutioner and murdered in cold blood; he was a Guernsey man, born on 22 Apr 1801. His widow, Regina, is now Mrs Hennessey. On 21 March 30 Tagle had resigned and was succeeded by the vice president Ovalle, who died on 21 March 31. Fernando Errazuriz was named vice president, now presidente accidental was at the head of govern.t until 18 Sept. 31, when General Prieto was elected President and reelected on 25 July 1836: when his second presidency expired, three candidates appeared for the presidency: Bulnes, (Prieto's nephew) Pinto, and the third. I believe, named Tocornal, to unite the two former parties, Bulnes (Manuel) married Pinto's daughter & was consequently elected by a considerable majority of votes. He appears now to be firmly seated, a proof of which is that Freire has been recalled & entrusted with an employ of some importance — The Chilians say, that there exist no parties now: all are amalgamated — In June 1837, when the Chilians preparing to invade Peru (see D.y p 280) a military rising took place, at the instigation of Santa Cruz's (as some opine) Colonel Vidaurre placed himself at the head, and at a review of the Troops, the ministers Portales, the main prop of Prieto & the clever and most energetic man, whom Chili has had to boast of was vilely assassinated. The Rebels then approached Valparaiso, but were easily routed close to their post on the hill of el Baron daughters Lehmann, & Miss Lehmann, & Miss Frangen from Glindstadt, (Miss Lehmann) dd M. Reinecke & Otto Reinecke, some played at Whist, others amused another game at Cards. the society appeared to me rather dull, however as I was only a short time with them, I was well pleased, we had a light cold Supper, and we left at about 10 h. Lehmann & myself accompanied them home and we went to Reinickes, where a subscription ball, 3 y a head, was given still in honor of Count Blücher's anniversary. I was tired, but having refreshed myself in my bed room with washing & dressing, I went to the Ball Saloons, there were a great many people and the heat was almost insupportable, it was nearly 11 h. o' Clock, Count Blücher was just retiring. the company was much more mixed than at the dinner party, there were a great many whom I did not know. I amused myself however very well, tho' of course I did not dance, by conversing with those whom I knew. I spoke a few words with Mr. Hubbenmann, just stepped a few words to Prittwitz whom, who seemed to be on her high horse, congratulated Miss Faber, it being her birth day, conversed a good deal with young Newmark, with whom I walked up & down in the Room, with Mrs. Krause, with Mr. Wilhelm Matthiessen (Miss Rohde) who is very amiable, with her sister Emily, who is very plain and who the only one unmarried lives with her father, also with Mrs. Schubert & her sister, quite a young girl, Miss Schoss. Mr. Hesse just honored me with a Nod. There were some very young pretty looking girls, but not a single beauty — When all the ladies, whom I knew were gone, amongst whom I have forgotten to enumerate Wichelmine Reinicke, it was about 2 h. o' Clock, I then went to my bedroom & to bed, and tho' in my sitting room they were still playing at Cards & smoking and the music from the ball rooms reached to me yet with one or two indispositions I succeeded to as yet made her appearance, and Tibbs, who lives now in one of the small houses of Rainville's, leave before supper, then the family began to decrease a little. —

Monday 8 May. At 10 o'Clock I had to appear in the Townhall upon the two Justices Fabler & Olde, to give an account of the robbery which had taken place in my Rooms on 26 Apr. Fabler is the chief of the so called Justices, Olde, (Arnold Baum of mine from the College, but who now called me Jan Willem) I know Jan Justice of the Peace & Justices de aides magistrate; he made various questions, to which I replied and of the whole statement given by me, he drew out rapidly a very good account, it was 11 h. when he had finished and had read to me what he had written. I took then a Cabin Lesson from Francdown, and at home a Danish one from Bork & a French one from Schmidt, so that the whole morning was gone in an Instant. Schmidt was still with me, when at 4 h. o'Clock Allert Jordan Schmidt & the Ladies in question made their appearance, they sat down outside & Schmidt gave them coffee covered with; the Dead rabbits were Kramer, Nelly & the two little ones, then Sternberg, Theren & Withelmina Reinecke, the Ladies were Semper & his wife. we went to see the labours of the rail road-workmen, & the Chefs on the gardens which have considerably increased since I saw them last, at one spot for a considerable length the whole hill, with all the trees upon it, has lowered from about 60 feet feet, but Semper, who is one of the rail road directors assured, that this is only a change, that, tho' above it is very clear, that the hill gives way, yet below, near the Ill, no trace can be found of it having sunk. It was fixed 4 past 5, when we sat down to dinner in one of the pavillions which look upon the Ill, we sat thus: I to my right Mrs Jordan Schmidt, who did not fail in admiring the beautiful prospect before us, Sternberg — Nelly — Semper — Mr Sternberg — Kramer — the two Ladies — are empty chairs, as Edouard Reinecke had not come — Allert — Withelmine — Jordan — Mr Semper & again I. — a spinning, which is established in a Building close to Donner's. Mass washed or left the process in the following: first the wool is carded, then combed and died if required, which is done in the Carolinen Straße. it then goes to the so called "preparing frames" moved by Steam (which machinery comes from England) in which frames it is drawn out: 4 goe from one frame into the other (there are perhaps 7 or 8 of them) out of each of which it comes out finer than the other, after it has become fine enough, it comes to the spinning machine, where it is twisted into thread, and in another machine four or six or more or less threads are twisted together into yarn.

In the Establishment in the Carolinenstr. the yarn is dried, washed & finally dried. There also are the stocks of ready yarn and while we were there, parcels were made up for Texas & for Triest. The Steam Engines in the Elbstraße also pumps up the water, which is conducted thence to the Carolinenstr. One of the men told me that they have 1030 different colors & shades. It was past 5, when we had finished, when the greater part of us, not all, met at Old Remke, Wichelmann, Edward, Hayne, Th. Meyenburg, Krauss, Lienau, his wife, old Mr. Semper, daughter & William (the Hamburg apothecary) & his family sat down to dinner at the same table at which we had dined on 28 april. dinner however, tho' very good, was plain, if compared to the feasting of the other day. I sat between upstairs (so called Mamsell a pleasant young woman, next to her sat Krauss who also carved out, then Miss Olga Semper, to my left little Emily Krauss then Mr. Semper. I conversed a great deal with the children, but did not feel quite well, and after dinner, when the coffee was taken in the garden & when going to it raining we could not walk about. I was not at all amused, and was extremely glad it was light as last till 8 o'Clock: we then went in, did all kinds of Nonsense, Semper & I played at Cards & at 10½ I went home & to bed.

Friday 10 May. I rose too late, occupied myself with the Pamphlets regard'g the Panama Isthmus and at about 11 went to the mint, where my Parents master, Mr Dick, who is employed there, showed me about all of the furnaces, in which the silver mixed with a sufficient quantity of copper is melted, it is taken out in the fluid state into an iron ladle with a very long handle, and is then poured into moulds of a long narrow shape, which shut & open; in two or three minutes the fluid, - which in the ladle looks quite red and over which a little coal dust is strewed in order to prevent the copper contained in the same from oxidising (refer to the 6th & 7th of p. 32, where the same is said of Iron, - the noble metals, silver & gold do not oxidise by the mere exposure to the air in a melted state) - I say, this fluid gets so consistency, the mould is opened, another man with a pair of tongs takes out the silver, which appears in the shape of long thin bars. - These bars then pass thro' a number of cylinders, until they have the thickness, which Spanish dollars have. For these they were occupied with, whilst I was there) - ought to have, a machine moved by a man, cuts out the dollars, - a great many were occupied with weighing them; those which are too light must be melted again, those which are too heavy are filed off, when they are of the proper weight, they are stamped with the die, against they were not at work doing this, but the machine appeared to me very clumsy. It is put in motion by twelve men, & each dollar must be handled the first one by one by a man; - another machine, where small coins are stamped, made in Germany, was much more ingenious; it could be much more easily moved, and out of a tube full thick pieces off, blew, a pair of tongs takes out always the lowest and places it under the die. Another machine gives the edge & then the coin is finished. Spanish dollars contain in a mark, 14 Loth pure silver & 2 Loth copper, 7/8 to 1/8; also our Ducats 21 Carath pure gold, & 3 Carats alloy, also 7/8 to 1/8

For 3 a head, Meyson gave us a very fair dinner, the wine was good & then we remained at dinner a long time; we then adjourned to my room, where we took coffee — some walked about in the garden, & others did not — candles & tea were brought in, the Hamburghers left at about 9 o'Clock, the Albanians half an hour later. I hope they have all been pleased. — διάφορα μὲν γὰρ τερπνὰ τὸν ἄνδρα ἐπέδειξα καὶ δὴ καὶ ὀψὲ ἐπεδίδου.

Thursday 9 May. I awoke with a little headache, which soon passed over. Yesterday's party has set me back. I was quietly at home writing up my cash books for last month. The weather is fine, I have left off the fire in the stove. Just now, 11h. it has thundered a little. Having written the foregoing, I went again to the town hall, where Justizrath Olde delivered to me against my receipt Rt 136.64 in Convention, being 2 eighths ounces and a little gold chain of very little value. A silver watch and a gold watch ring, which the delinquent said, he had not purchased with my money, Olde kept in deposit. — Mr. Olde now put in mind, that we had been school fellows, were at Bartels', which I do not recollect. — I hereupon drove [7] spaan shewer to Semper, where a large party assembled to go over his factory, situated in the Gardinen str. When I left for England in 1823 Semper lived still in that quarter Mittel Str. where his mother still lives, and he was occupied, (whether he had an interest in the business I do not know) in his grandmother's establishment for dyeing woollen yarn; this business he has very much increased & extended, and he now receives orders from all parts of Europe, except from France, where the importation is prohibited, and also from North America: on his own account he hardly makes any Consignments, and I only know of his having sent a trifle to his brother-in-law, Julius Reinecke in Mundelsee who has sold it to advantage. — By far the greater part of the wool which he dyes, he purchases ready made from England, Belgium & Saxony, in the white state, and only quite latterly he has commenced the mint, where I arrived to be assay the silver, when mixed up with its alloy, before it is coined, was just busy assaying some pennies dredged with which silversmiths had been polishing their worked silver and which in this instance contained not less than 1/10 of silver. In a small assaying furnace, which he heats with charcoal, he puts two very tiny small cups or bowls, (Test) made of ashes, which are quite porous, into them he puts the silver, which is to be assayed, weighing 1/2 of course with the utmost nicety with the smallest imaginable weights & upon a scale, upon which a bit of paper of the size as already said made an impression: he fills these little cups with lead: expound to fuse the common metals, copper, lead, evaporates or sinks from the pores of the cup. the silver remains which is — weighed in the same scale: and comparing the two weights it is seen, how much silver & consequently how much alloy the mass to be coined contains — If by chance there should remain gold & silver mixed, then the mixture is exposed to the effects of aqua fortis, which gold withstands, but by which silver is corroded. — After leaving the mint I walked down the Burgstraße to the Inn, called the Jagenstamm, having never been here before. I entered & took some bread & butter & a glass of wine: the country here about is pretty, to the East and one has the steeples of Hamburg & Altona, to the South ward the steeple of Ottensen a few hours on the road of the Tidenhol, to the West Ottensen, to the North the rich corn of Langenfelde and all besides the vicinity green hedges, green meadows gilded with the yellow flowers called Hünde Blumen, and very where the loveliness of the present month of May. Close to the Jagenstamm stops the railroad coming from the Hamburger Berg & running out into the Eastern End of the Pahrenhol. Whilst I was walking about here pleased with the progress made here, I saw Tempes coming along accompanied by two Engineers Diez & Knoble

[illegible] and heard that new streets, an avenue and a market place are planned in this neighbourhood. They showed me the third class carriage, which was as good as the 2nd class Conveyance from Birmingham to Liverpool and better than the generality of the 2nd class Carriages in England, as here the seats of riders are not stuffed, nor are the seats divided from each other in the shape of chairs, but these Carriages have the great advantage of glass windows which can be pulled up. From there I went to Miss Saunders Welland with whom I staid about half an hour; she is by no means on the contrary even agreeable. It was now past 2, on my return home I took my Danish Lesson, went for a few moments to Heidenreichs, dined at home & wrote my diary. By this time it was half past 7; in the evening I walked over the meadows along the rail road, skirted the Jessamine Quay, where I had been in the morning & taking a foot path to the right, I emerged in the Priory Place close to William Matthieson's house; it was still day light, tho' the Sun had set. Miss Tilly, Emilie Rode, Saunders Senr, two elderly ladies of Mrs Matthieson & Miss Bondrel Lange, Julius Matthieson & his wife with some of his children were upstairs. — they received me very friendly, I took tea, conversed a little, — then we sat down to whist, — against my inclination & we gentlemen by ours & the ladies by themselves. — We then had below a very good warm supper, I sat between Mrs Tilly & Mrs Matthieson. the conversation was animated & pleasant; it was about 11½ when we broke up: we all went together, also Lenny, Mrs Tilly's son who had come later. I gave my arm to Mrs Tilly — and one after another leaving us, & Lenny accompanying his aunt Emily — we two remained as last by ourselves & I departed for her in the Jessamine Quay, where she live now in the lodgings [illegible] to a relation of hers, a Mrs Lorck, who is gone to Norway for several months. It was midnight, when I came home, read on Bed as usually & very soon fell asleep. — with me a short time, we took a walk in the garden, looked them at the Railroad, I accompanied them as far as the theater, they took a Droshke & I went to dine at Sievekings's with Edward Reinecke; the dinner was very nice and when we came at the second bottle of Champagne, in came Semper & his wife, bring me an extremely handsome embroidered velvet pantoffle and at the same time a parcel came in from Mr Wakenhelly with a small cushion embroidered by her, to lean against when sitting on the sofa. — Really I had not at all expected this present & least from Mr Wurmb[?]. — Semper & Reinecke left Sievekings, his wife, Mr Semper & I went to Baumelle's, the ladies being very Curious to look at a large party, who in the dining Saloon were celebrating a wedding. Meyer told me, that he was fond a Lunch or a treat, without wine. Mr Edwards went home, Mr Semper & I went to old Mr Elmendorf, where Wakenhelly & various others dined; we told the Servants to call Wakenhelly, whom we congratulated & then left again. — I am now come home & have been writing the foregoing. it is about 6h — Sievekings is to day 48, Wakenhelly 43 years old. — Also George Knauer came to congratulate me in the morning, just before Kramer. The weather is splendid. Nature is in all her loveliness; nothing can be more beautiful than the Palmal, Baumelli's garden & above all the view over the Alt to the other side. — I have now to day 6 or 7 or more Steamers passing over to the other way. — I have my windows open & in the room the thermometr stands at 18°R or 68°F. — I shortly after dressed and about 7 o Clock went to old Mr Sievekings; upstairs several ladies were assembled, and amongst them, whom should I find to my great pleasure & astonishment but Elizabeth Doleatzy and her husband, whom Kramer, invited the Ingrigones of Sievekings & many others, had written to, to be present at the Celebration of my birthday, they had agreed to and last night they had arrived by the "diligence" from Lübeck. there was only beyond measure kind, but still more so at board, nearly as much, as I should, when I saw also Mr Johannes Lampricht & his husband, Gustav Schmidt & his lady make their appearance. Certainly she was beyond measure attentive. I believe, we were about 80 or more persons present, whom, as far as I recollect them, I will enumerate. Old Mr Siemssing, Constance, her two daughters, Miss Gesine, Johannes, a fat brother of his, Miss Johannes, Christ. Baier, Georges Baier & his wife, Lawyer Lampert & his wife, Doctor Siemssing, wife & two daughters, Miss Fehrs and sister (a Mr Petersen) Schmidt & his wife, Lampricht & his wife, Kramer & his wife, Behrens & Elizabeth, Johannes, his wife & two sons, Georges & wife, Siemssing & wife, Edward & Johannes, Theodor Reincke, young Wojciech, Arthur Bonner & Cathrine, Mr Collet (an architect), Wilhelmine Reincke, old Mr Reincke, and perhaps some more, whom I do not remember. after a few words' conversation with Elizabeth and then with Behrens, I as well as some other gentlemen joined the ladies, who were sitting in a large Circle. I conversed in the Course of the Evening with a good many of the ladies & endeavoured to render myself agreeable but in which I am fearful I've rather different persons to succeed. Sea was handed round, young Napiersky sang very prettily, three charades were represented. first Nimbleback (the first syllable of this word appeared some men on a resting horse, accompanied by another as a similar creature. the former with a great coat drawn up & a hat pulled down, to say money out of the pocket, represented me, when more than twenty years ago I took a ride with Georges and lost 80 dollars and Shillings out of my pocket) the second word was: Summ-er-sprösse. again on board the same steamer as in the morning, the Tivoli was again full of people, the weather was colder, we were back in ½ an hour, landed in Hamburg, where we had started in the morning. Seerdings returned to Altona, Kramers, Dobrudags & I walked one part of the wall to the Gärtners house. Dobrudags, particularly Elizabeth, were delighted with the number of people moving about. At Kramers we only took a cup of coffee and then I went with Dobrudags to the Thalia theater, where I had taken three seats in the "Parquet". Lucia of Lammermoor, an opera of Donizetti's, was performed. The house was far from filled. However Elizabeth complained of Cloroform, & in the beginning of the second act, she had just time to say, that she was unwell & succeeded away. Dobrudag took her out to the lobby. I followed them. she sat down there, & by dint of washing her eyes & temples with cold water and giving her a little to drink, she recovered herself after five minutes or more had elapsed. I fetched a Droschka, she & her husband drove home. I remained in the theater, & amused myself pretty well, but Up Town Society Nights where the Norma was represented. I was well pleased with Miss Crow as Lucia, Brassin as Henry Ashton & Wunder as Raymond, but altogether to my Taste, the music is too noisy and the drums and kettledrums inappropriately by far too much. Miss Delachaux & Mr. Marmitier danced a "Pas de deux noble" which pleased me much. When the play was over, I went to Kramers, Elizabeth was better, but in bed & asleep, I took some nice Pancakes for supper & hurried to Altona, where I arrived a little past 11 o Clock. In the morning just when we landed in Hamburg, a little boy fell into the Elb & was drowned.

Monday 13 May. I began this day with an early dance. Upon looking over my Lesen & Jours I see I took my Lesin Copy from Landrain. I then hurried to Hamburg, fetched Kramers some real treasures of sculpture. I am nothing of a Connaisseur, however I must confess I have nothing more lovely than the three graces sculptured by Thorwaldsen out of one block of marble, they are completely naked, their arms are entwined, which Bonner told me, Thorwaldsen himself considered he had shown the greatest art and the two, who stand on each side, turn their backs upon her, who stands in the middle, they are really sweet creatures, there is also the shepherd boy, Ganymede, which is also considered to be a chef d'oeuvre, but which I do not like half so well as the Graces. - Besides a large marble urn, adorned with a bas relief, representing a number of "amourettes" some in a cage, others fluttering about. - a colossal bust of Thorwaldsen by Bissen, and a number of small alabaster & terra cotta statues, representing or rather imitating known chef d'oeuvres of antiquity, such as the Gladiator, Laocoon, the Venus of Medici &c, which Bernhard Bonner tells me, are cheap in Italy. They are said to be nothing particular, but they please me - When we had duly admired these beauties, the dinner bell rang, we went to the house, and the following sat down to a nice pleasant dinner: Bonner, to his right Chef Paulsen, a naval officer Jepsen, Schmitt, a young Mr Schröder from Amsterdam. - then at the bottom of the table, Wamkolz & Bernhard Bonner, round the corner Schmitz, & Ehrenhard & Krause. Ehrenhard was full of jokes & I soon amused myself very well. - After dinner I first talked a little with Schmitt & Ehrenhard, whilst the others smoked in the other room, and then had a long game with Bernhard sitting before the fire. He told me, which I do not believe, that Bonnigs had gained last year 350000 Fr. - the names of the three M, the three N & Bonner, which [illegible] payments in the last commercial crisis. I believe 1826, when I remember I was also not a little afraid in Lima, whether Gibbs would stand it or not, were Wilson, Wigan & Wilde. -

& walked in at Sievking's for an hour, before I went to Bed.

Tuesday 14 May. At about 10 in the morning Billy Krauss, Debenhag & his wife came in a Barouche from Harburg. We took a short walk thro' Parrisius's garden, behind the Glass, the continues at the Rail Road and drove on towards Blankenese. The weather was unpleasant, rain always threatened & only a high wind kept it off — Elizabeth & Debenhag admired of course the fine prospects & beautiful Country houses — we first alighted at Baurh's and entered the Houses, the orchydeæ, air plants which requires neither soil nor water, only air attracted most our attention; we entered our Carriage again & got out just past the Devil's bridge; here we had a very pleasant walk, to & thro' Simons park round the mill pond. — We drove on again & at 2 o'Clock took a Dinner at Jacobi's, in the same style as on Sunday. The cold wind did not allow our remaining in the open air. We then walked thro' Richard Parish's garden, passed Richard Godeffroy's which is locked, entered those of Peter & of Cesar which are lovely in the extreme; here we have shadowy walks, beautiful lawns, fine trees of all kinds, poplars, beeches, oaks, sheltered trees, fir, pines &c. — then every now & then a view over the Elb, or upon the so called "Mill. vale" Mühlenthal, which is a pretty little valley in which a few houses are build, which lies in a small between the two gardens of the Godeffroys & which extends to the beach. In the garden of Cesar is an artificial, extremely well, constructed river. — After having enjoyed the beauties of these two gardens, we entered that of Fritz Baur, which is very extensive, but not so picturesque & pleasant as the property of the Godeffroys. After having walked about a good deal, we drove on again to the Klein berg, which is about half an hours drive from Richard Blankenese — We have observed, that the gardens of the two Godeffroys lie on Rodenbrueden; the road thither goes thro' a deep sand, and as the wind blew high & cold, it was by no means a pleasant drive. The hill is covered with new plantations, it was so very windy, that Milly & Elizabeth were obliged to remain in the house, where we took a cup of coffee. I ran down to the beach & climbed up again. Voluntary & I take our up Train where a telegraph receives & forwards all sheets & News between Hamburg & Cuxhaven. There are two telegraphic stations between these two places: the one the Kirchturm corresponds with one in Hamburg, — and the other side with one in Steinkamp, after which the next is in Stade. — Wedel, about 1 german mile further down the river is clearly visible thence. — We then drove home: where we passed Ammermann's Country house in Rissendorf. I got off, — (the others drove on) — in order to visit Mr Ammermann good bye, as on Friday next the intended going to Carlsbad in company with the lawyer Theodor Lebbes. She was very amiable & talkative as usually. She gave me a cup of tea and sent one of her Sons, the 18th Dr Woldemar Nissen, who lives there by, as being a younger brother of my old friend Fritz Nissen who lives in Bordeaux & who is partner of Merckel & Schroeder there. I also visited this Woldemar, 44 years old & 20 years physician in Rissendorf. he pleased me much & after having spent there two agreeable hours I left at 8½, and Ammermann on horseback rathed with him a few words, it was at 9 o Clock at the usual Tuesday Club at old Benecke's. I took a good supper, went home & to bed. —

Wednesday 11 May. Before my dinner was over I had to leave and drove in an Omnibus to Kramer's, where in a Droschke with Voluntary & his wife to the Bergedorf Terminus. A few minutes arrived Johannes Lindtrichs with his wife, mother in law (Mrs Albert) & two children, Henriette & Hans & I had him to bear half the expenses of the day, but he refused.

At 10 o' Clock precisely we took our Seats in the 1st Class Convey.e and reached to Bogidorff, 20 p. 229 : 230 p. we stopt a moments at the house of Fraserdi, took a cup of Broth & on a Stuhlewagen drove on to Reinbeck. This Fraserdi has been a very rümous Mr Mauvais who is also the owner of the Thalia Theater, he had rented it for 10 years, but in order to annul the bargain, he pays now 2000 & leave it on Friday. The Carriage Road to Reinbeck is not particularly pretty, it leads thro' a village called Lendorf. - in Reinbeck we alighted at Jahnckis, breakfasted in the same manner as yesterday at Jacobs, & walked to the "Wilhelmsruh", which, being a forest'ess wood, did not please us much: Mrs Limpricht, a very nice woman, proposed & we all willingly agreed to it, that we should very slowly walk to Bergidorf, we did so, taking the same road, which I had come on 5th with Kramers we walked very slowly, sitting down occasionally, conversing a good deal. I for a considerable time going my arm to Mrs Albert, who is still an amiable lively lady, admiring a small innocent Snake, the blind worm (Blindschleiche) and other as the weather was very pleasant, I, & I believe, all, were well pleased. In Bergidorf at the Wirth's we took some Selter water, entered our Train again, at 3 1/4 in 25 minutes were at the Terminus near the Dirschauer. the Ladies drove home in a Droschke, Limpricht his boy. Behrstag & I walked, when we reached Limpricht's house August Limpricht was there, whom I should not have recognised, he looks considerably older than Johannes; only his voice & familiar to me. he left for Neuwied 1822, he married young a woman, rather below his station in life, has 7 children & has not gotten on at all in the world. - His brothers, Johannes & Bernhard have assisted him, & now Bernhard intends to let his two eldest sons to learn in Rio. - August's New look & little reddish, as if he were inclined to drink, which it was said he was, the Johannes davies B: I think, he is not quite so much the gentleman as he was in his younger days. We had a very nice dinner, soup, a turbot, roasted chickens & deserts. — Johannes had determined to finish the day, with going to the Thalia theatre, whither the ladies drove. We had seats in the so called balcony, the house was crowded, & the plays, three stupid things: the first, in which an Englishman, a M^r Treading, was introduced, the second, the vacation (de Bauf) in which a girl, who wants to go upon the stages & whom Voltaire tells that she has no vocation for it, proves, that she has the talent required, by performing without being recognized, the part of a tipsy peasant boy, of a old fortune teller, & of a young marquise, Miss Hermann did this very nicely. — The third was called: Jean Jacques Rousseau in Lyon, in which a M^r Hasel, as his last performance, represented this M. Manufacturier, a Franchiporter. — I thought it rather stupid, but others are of opinion, that it was well done. — Altogether I spend a very pleasant day. Johannes, his wife & mother in law are extremely nice people, his third child is a Stapfeld, a fine boy, his fourth Paul, with beautiful blue eyes is covered with a violent eruption. — At the theatre door we separated. Between 1 & 2 I walked to Hansen, & I came home to Reinhold's.

Thursday 16 May, ascension day. I rose as late as 8 ½ o'clock with a very bad head ache, which prevented my doing any thing of importance in the course of the whole morning. I went early to Steinthorig's, where he & I opened the Case with Trevillo antiquities, which Cox had made me a present of and which I now intend sending to Copenhagen, one single one of the earthen vessels, which I obtained, has been broken a little. — I then went to old M^r Steinthorig's, where I spent an hour or two with the ladies in a bower in the garden. On my return I read & slept a little, dressed and went again to Siewekings, with whom I drove to Hamburg & thence to Eppendorf to Knauer's garden. it was rather cold, and I cannot say that I admired the gardens much. it extends to the edge of the Alster, it lies deep in dampf & is exposed to the raw North wind. after having walked about a little, the bell rang to dinner, I could not see, having lost my spectacles, moreover on account of my head ache I did not like to exert myself, and there I got the worst neighbour of all who were there; I was sad down as follows: Knauer Jr. the right Patriarchian Dame, at the head of the table. - then Lawyer Stockmann, Patriarchian Doctor, Siewking, Mr. Stuhlmann, Semper, Mr. Siewking, Mlle Reinecke, Maria Knauer, Georg. Smith, William Knauer, myself, quiet at the bottom, Miss Bertram, Mr. Dawes companion, Lawyer Callisen (a lively pleasant young physician) Wilhelmine Reinecke, Edouard Reinecke, Caroline Testorf, Mr. Wesly Doctor, Mr. Knauer, old Mr. Reinecke, old Mr. Clemenson & again Knauer. Dinner was excellent, except the red Champagne which I did not like, however as I was not quite well, I enjoyed nothing, I was also very dull. I much admire the four ideal children of Knauer the two girls, tho' not pretty, are extremely pleasant. both were dressed in white, with a blue ribbon round their waist. after the coffee we again walked about in the garden, Lübbe came, he & Doctor played at Billiards, - in the room, where all were together, which was rather crowded, once Card-Table was formed, Semper & Mr. S were so very kind, to offer me their house, which I accepted, Mr. having given me warning to be at Saturday. tea was handed round, served by Maria. I returned here at 1 at 9¼ we drove home. I went immediately to bed, warmed myself well up & awoke Friday 17 May quite well. after my daily lesson, the last today. I have brought up my diary, until now, 9½. - with the exception of a short visit at Siewking's, I remained quietly at home, writing to Lima. It was so cold, that I had again fire in my stove on Saturday 27 May, a year since I left Lima, how fast the time has past! By mistake I went by Tramway at 12 instead of at 11, he was now always employed, and thus I lost my Latin Lesson, which I much regretted. The whole morning, with the exception of the time, which I lost, as just stated, I was employed in writing. At my usual hour, say at 3 P.M., I went to Sievering, with whom I has amicable rose I staid a short time, and then went to see the foundation Stone laid to the Rail Road Station. – In the hollow of the corner wall, lower than the surface of ground, a kind of box made of sand stone was placed, in this some various documents relative to the Railroad were laid, and then the hollow or cavity was filled with bricks & mortar: the two directors, Arnemann & Jasper, also the members of the committee, each put a brick. when this was done, Arnemann held a short speech, giving an account of the difficulties, which they had overcome, as well as the different dates, when the first meeting had taken place, when the Royal Concession had been received &c. He gave the health of the King and then the welfare of Altona, both which toasts were received with huzzaing. Before, during & after the laying of the foundation stone, the members of the Kindtorfel sang the verses, which I inclose. This being over, the directors, the Kindtorfel & various, who were invited, amongst whom I, moved over the way to Arnemann's Garden, where in the pavillions a very abundant Collation, Cakes and various kinds of beverages were handed round. we had some more singing & speech saying, – also the workmen were regaled with bread & butter and wine, and they kept it up huzzaing till past 7. – I came home at 6, dined and then commenced packing.

Sunday 29 May. I rose at 4 1/2 o' Clock, was occupied packing till 7, when I ran to Sievering, where I took a cup of coffee, and Cobb. and then he & I played 6 games at chess, of which I gained 5: this occupied the greater part of the Evening, & further supped on bread & butter with cold meat, as supper, closed the day.

Monday 20 May. I rose early, we breakfasted at 7 h. I arranged my papers, went to M Matthiessen & C° and to H.C. Donner, asking both Gentl^n. for Letters of Credit & Recommendations for Norway & Copenhagen, which they willingly & kindly promised me. I had good bye to Miss Schlüter, took my leave from Francken, called upon Winderborn, my bookseller, dined at 2 o'Clock at Simpson's, we had nothing but Marmelade, and a little broth, cutlets, cold ham, pudding, asparagus & sorrel. we took coffee in the handsome garden, the weather very pleasant. I paid my accounts at Reimelle's, packed up my books at Sievking's (Herren very particularly friendly) called upon Arnemann, who accepted himself most obliged an hour, going over with me my projected journey in Norway, whilst I was with him, we had a tremendous rain and most vivid & continued lightning, accompanied by not very loud thunder claps, I hurried home, dressed a little & at 8 o'Clock went to Consul Donner in his garden, who was still sitting without lights admiring, as he said, the storm. Dunkard came in, also they procured me Letters. I left at 9, wrote my diary at home, & went below at 10, where a Club was assembled, consisting of S. Baum. S. Herrmann. S. and Sonnesen, apothecary Sumann, a Mr Wedeke, cashier upon the Railroad Comp^y, Mr. Ford, editor of the Mercury, Warnholtz, Schuster, Simpson & C°. — they spend the evening conversing, and I found, whilst we were at supper, consisting of various kinds of bread & butter and a few Cakes with some bottles of wine, that it is an agreeable company. They separated at 12. I went up stairs at 12 h.

Tuesday 21 May. A fine morning. It is 7 h & I have already been writing my diary since 7. With the exception of my Lesson at incessant flashes of lightning, which lasted till part 3. the rain had not ceased, when Semper & I after having played the beginning of a game at chess, which turned out in my favor went at 4 h. old Reinecke's. to night there were the two amiable women, Mrs Theodore Reincke, the first time after her confinement, and Mrs Lieber, her husband, the lawyer Theodore Lieber having had to leave for the South of Germany in company with Mr Sonnemann on all of his health. These two women & Mrs Henry Fearing, who not to my right, may challenge comparison with thousands of others.

In this year 1844 Barils of herrings have been fished in Norway, each barril containing 200 herrings, that the enormous quantity caught amounts to 5 600 millions.

Wednesday 22 May. I sent my last [illegible] letters by Lefevre from Frandsen and at 12 o'Clock walked to Hamburg. at Mr Kramer's I only stept a few moments and then proceeded to San Georg an der Alster where at Wurm's I only found him at home, with whom I remained about half an hour. at Siegfried's both he & she were gone out, to Doctor Gustaven Schmidt's I did not go, because I met him in the Street he told me, that his lady was gone out. - at his brother Albert's I remained more than half an hour & drove out with our Cousin to Eppendorf. here I went to Mr Kramer's; Mrs Kramer received me with her usual kindness. she showed me round all over the garden which now, the weather being fine & I will, pleased me as much as it displeased me last Thursday, when the weather was such I saw and I myself myself. - this Garden must however be damp, for between the same & the Alster extends a low meadow which belongs in common to the Village & upon which [illegible] the family suffered regularly of fever & ague every year. now they seem to be accustomed to the Climate. - At about four o'Clock Mr. Kramer came from Altona together with his two daughters, Maria & Emily, into the open air, we took a plain dinner, - I wish, my wife could persuade herself, that to live happily, sumptuous dinners are not necessary. we had nothing but fish, wild roasted veal and various vegetables. after dinner, we went to see the hot houses, then the botanic garden. Kramer left us, to superintend some work. I remained with Mr Kramer, Maria, the latter & I swung each other in a wooden swing, we walked about & conversed, just when we were sitting, we had a fine view over the Alster to the other side, where some red roofed houses, called the Uhlenhorst, lie. - Emily played with the little ones. At 7 o'Clock the Carriage was ordered, Mrs Mr Kramer, Maria & I took a drive; it was a beautiful afternoon; we drove near the Alster, which road is lined, from with commonly time Hamburg to Winterhude onwards; we passed David Kramer's house; he entered the Carriage, & they followed us down near the Dammthor; I was much pleased with these extreme kindness. I now hurried to Hamburg to my Cousin Kramer, with whom I remained till nearly 9 o'. it was moon light, nevertheless, when going out of the Hamburg gate, I quite "distrait" took the road to the right, and only observed my mistake, when I had gone a great distance. I found myself upon the wine Responsa, had to return & after a great round about way, entered Altona by way of the Bleichenfeld. I then came into the grosse Freiheit, & reached Sumpter's house at nearly 11 o' Clock, when I immediately went to my room & soon to Bed - Sumpters had been at old Mr Sumpters, where they spend every Wednesday Evening -

Thursday 6th May. We breakfasted at the usual hours of 7 & I then went to Isenberg's, where I undertook packing up. At about 10 I went to Consul Gruby Domm's Consul house, who gave Sunday 26 May. Mild weather. Appt having risen at our early hours as usually & breakfasted, & being busy writing, I drove with my Omnibus to Kramers, where I arrived at about 10 h.: it was the anniversary of their wedding day. Kramer had prepared for me Two Letters of introduction: when I left, both he & Nelly kissed me, which I did not admire. I took my seat in the Lübeck Coach, had my hair cut and went to Johannes Limprichts, but meeting Hermann Boyer in the street, I told him, that I was just going to him: he insisted upon my returning with him, which I did. His insignificant wife did not appear, but with him I had breakfast & some interesting Conversation. In Hamburg there is no Transit duty, but an Import duty of ½ % & an Export duty ⅛ %. Banco from Banco: previously to the fire these duties were Currency from Banco. The Loan made by the Town after the fire is of 12000000 Mrs & pays 3½ % Interest. The value of houses in Hamburg is estimated according to the rent which they pay or which they ought to pay, & this valuation is made by men appointed for that purpose.

The existing Banks, Amsterdam, is only allowed to lend money, upon Buildings as far as their third of value, & then the Interest paid is 3½ % Currency upon Banco; money belonging to minors can only be employed in this manner viz to one half of the value, & under 4 % Cur. upon Banco, a security more than ½ of the value of a building. For instance if a house is worth Mrs 200000 make a fair Interest. Of my 3 Bros ℔ in Stuttg. 10000 ℔ are lent at 3, 3300 ℔ at 10 ℔ — Henry Rawlins, who died in Guayaquil, had named me as his first joined Executor in his will, which will be coming ℔ Queen Louise — After having perused these Letters, we sat down to dinner very plain, but good of course. my health was drunk with a few Glasses of the Children. — at 4 o Clock Postchaise came. I take good bye of my kind hosts, Mr. Rawlins Mr. Kaupert & Scantlings, Heinrich, notwithstanding the long postday, drove with me to the Danish post office in Hamburg where the Coach, so called Diligence, starts; it was still too warm, we walked about, met Hannes who returned with us, Dr. entered the Coach and at 5 o Clock precisely Dr. started — The passengers were myself opposite me a young Lady, neither too pretty nor too genteel, who left us at Neumünster, a travelling Gentleman from Frankfurt, just arrived, & whose destination is Petersburg, a young man, whom I first thought a Jew on account of his aquiline Nose, but who, I believe, is not so, by conversation I discovered that he is a partner of one of the Rothschilds, he had travelled a good deal in the Northern countries, & the Frankfurter soon entered into Conversation, which I finally joined, by his Lead a young lively girl, & her mother, an elderly one eyed lady, had spent whole years in Hamburg, to various Examples, he & the girl seemed to be very fond of each other. I learned that in the Russian Church in Petersburg a number of variegated colors, also the keys of the gates of many Convents serve, similar Bacchus's Thyrsus. Widows are kept — The priests of the Grecian Church are allowed to marry, but not the second time, if they should have their first wife. — The road leads out of the Barrier there St Georg & Uhlenhorst, where we arrived at 5 h. 4 stops 4 minutes, here is a so called Post Station, with a pretty wood, belonging, if I mistake not, to the young Count Schimmelmann, old Blücher's grand child, with whom I dined at Ploen on the 25 of Sept. a small lake and wood to our right before we reached Alsterburg, where we arrived at 7 o Clock. here we observed a small ambiguadle, castle-filled with Families ... are interred these sarcophagusses; my Cicerone, the sexton, Pfaff, an agreeable elderly man made me aware, that in these sarcopha-gusses, the body lies in a wooden coffin, which is surrounded by a leaden one, and shows the marble sarcophagus. One of these Chapels or burial place belonged originally to a Spanish family, Guerrero, and by inheritance has now become the property of the Altona family of the Germanns, who however as present draw no advantages from their possession except of course the honor, since the year 1804 the interrment in these chapels is prohibited, and only with the last duke Peter of Holst, who was com-ected, an exception has been made. The floor of the whole church is covered with tombstones, many of which presents the effigy, and all the name of the occupants below, since the time of the Cholera also all interments are prohibited in the church This building is 432 feet long. The pulpit rests apparently upon a handsome statue of Moses. A very handsome painting of Hans Memmeling, considered to have been a disciple of Albrecht Durer, is shown here; it represents the history of Christ, it is painted in the year 1470 The Sexton called my attention to many curious things, the descriptions of which he gave in a very slow & distinct tone of voice, but notwithstanding my listening to him very carefully, I am unable to give any further detailed description The whole made however a pleasant impression upon me. When I had finished here, I, accompanied by my Cicerone, went a block, called the Dammthor Grabe over the bridges of the same name, to the wall, which we ascended and walked over the same as far as the Holsten gate, where we went down again and re--entered the town thro' the above mentioned two gates. The wall, similarly to the Hamburg, is laid out in pretty walks, there is a small hill, called the Spitalberg, around which a path winds up and from the top of which I had a pretty view over the country before the Holsten gate. Many streets in Lubeck, which, going down hill, lead to the from are called Durham. - We now entered the Marian Chapel, the door to which first open, and we therefore did not require the Sexton to show one round. - This Church holds pages than the Dome; it contains many curiosities: the large organ, the pastoral and altar, both of marble, - the so called Bonfigalli, so named, because papers & documents used to be kept there, with two slender gilt columns, 28 feet high, each cut of one stone - the astronomical watch, made in 1405, maker's name unknown, which shows every day's date for more than a hundred years, from 1753 to 1875, - the phases of the moon for the same period - and is adorned with the zodiac and other astronomical circles, with the use of which I am not acquainted. - As soon as the clock strikes twelve, a little door opens, the images of the twelve apostles with out they pop our Lord Jesus Christ, make their bow, with the exception of Judas, who shakes his head and remains their another door. - What pleased me most in this Church is a painting upon the walls of one chapel, which represents the death's dance. - The dance is opened by the

a coffin and taking the pope by the hand, - succeeds another death - and emperor - death again - the empress death and so on the different stations of life down to the virgin, a different representation of death between each two figures. - Death with the scythe and a baby in the cradle closes the dance. The painter's name is unknown: it was not Holbein, because he was born 1498. & this painting was probably finished in the year 1463.
Originally there were long german verses below each figure, which is as long as life; but as these verses became soon illegible and at all events unintelligible, they were replaced in the year 1701 by verses in high German rhyme, which are still legible & intelligible - for further details I refer to the small pamphlet on this subject, which I have bought - Having finished examining this Church, some of which windows are prettily painted, the Custodian took me to a room in a house, called the merchants' company, where the merchants are on the table of meeting. This room is adorned with very curious wood Carvings,

On the other side of the ferry the country is very thinly [illegible] with [illegible] trees, but rising Cornfields. We left a considerable village [illegible] at some distance to our right, and Tegelmünde, where first seen, with its Steeple & red roofed houses look very [illegible]. Here was a fair, we drove thro' a crowded street, where [illegible] all sorts of goods were offered for sale; then came to the right [illegible] brought us to the shore of the Bay, in which but few vessels were at anchor, amongst them a Swedish & a Prussian Steamer, the latter just arrived from Petersburg with 65 passengers many of whom persons of high rank. — A row of houses stands at a short distance from the Sea, and between the Sea and the houses are avenues of Trees, one behind another, I stept at the first & most humbling, and whilst dinner was getting ready, I took a walk along the quay, solidly built of large stones fastened together with Iron cramps, to its very last point, I passed a telegraph, a light house and a signal staff. Home to the left I came to some white edifices, neatly looking Lindenings, which on enquiry I learnd to be the bathing hotels. they are still locked up as the season for bathing does not begin till about a month. One Establishment belongs to a certain Behrens, and the garden, avenues, hills, a grand Hall of an extraordinary quantity of croaking frogs, a boat &c, which surrounds the whole, are prettily & tastefully arranged & laid out. I returned to my Hôtel, where the which however I did not succeed, and after a good & cheap dinner (half a bottle of wine included — I paid only 24 Currency,) I started in a Britschagen with one horse. On leaving Travemünde we drove for a considerable distance thro' by roads (sometimes) lined with live hedges (of the red cedar Juniperus Virg.) we left to our right a considerable lake, called the Dummersdorfer See, and passing thro' a village Rathau, we emerged into the Chaussée from Lübeck to Lubin — we stopt at a public house close to the road, belong to the village of Gleschendorf, — the country is very sandy, level & uninteresting, — owing to the Danish authorities

com forfeits were played & very merrily the time passed away till past 1 o'clock we walked home. Feiner told me, that Oldenburg, to which Eutin belongs, has not joined the German Centumvirum League, but stands together with Hannover. Oldenburg & the three Hanseatic Towns form a brigade for the german confederative army of 30000 men under arms Oldenburg General. Oldenburg has to find 2000, the Hanseatic towns 2000 men under Arms.

Friday 31 May. Owing to the holidays in the College during the week, Volkstag can continue to devote some time to me; on Monday the lessons commence. I rose as late as 8 o' Clock, breakfasted, made little progress in my diary, and started again with Volkstag at 10 o Clock. This day we took a different direction from yesterday, down the village of Fahrt over a somewhat sandy plain to the S. E. lying village of Seekrug, hence thro' a beautiful wood considering of splendid beeches, thro' which the blue surface of the Ukley lake peeped thro' here & there, X to its S. E. point, where the footpath was missing, & we were obliged to wade, on our way thither we saw two very very small deers running thro' the high trees over the ground covered with the brown leaves. here all the luggage we set down on a stone outside a kind of a plain house, black bread, cheese & butter, a bottle of light white French wine. & Volkstag some ham, for all which we paid one g. here the prospect is confined by the wood, which surrounds us from all other sides. I however thought it a very pretty spot and as the weather was fine, I instantly enjoyed myself as well as the breakfast. We started thence at about 12 o' Clock and walked thro' the beautiful wood almost all round the Ukley lake, the wooded shores of which is an extraordinary quietness; as we had little wind, the lake was hardly ruffled, and high beautiful trees reach every where down to the very waters of the lake: on a quiet day as to day it is extremely and tranquillity harmonized. Its Circumference is perhaps ½ of a mile: — we

and we walked over to the Babelsberg, where a little pavillion is erected, walked up & down here & there, until frequently and about 7 o' Clock drove home, we left the buildings "am rechten Sande", the Keller Lake to our left & reached Caution at about 8 o' Clock. we took a light Supper & I went to bed at 9½ o' Clock, when it was not quite dark yet, & slept marvellously till

Saturday 2 June at 8 o' Clock. This morning I have done nothing but writing & paying a visit from 12 to 2 to the three Williams, Mr Fraser, Stacey & Bixby, who received me very friendly. Bixby is not quite well. I dined afterwards with Limprichts at Babelsberg, who gave us a very nice dinner, in their way they have every thing quite prettily arranged. With the exception of a walk, which Babelsberg we took to the garden of the Castle, we remained and spent the time pleasantly enough till 10 o' Clock, when we went home & to bed. The garden with its fine trees, handsome avenues, pavillions, village &c situated close to the Lake made now an agreeable impression upon me and certainly pleased me much better than when I had seen it previously, both times in winter in January 1827 & again in January 1828. The Potsdam Tourist says: The Situation of the garden near the Lake has been made use of to add artificial variety to the beauties of natural Scenery. Here you see the opposite sandy shores, which extend almost before your eyes, with all its riches. There it appears together with the Lake – and sometimes it merely peeps from the foreground resembling of high bushes. The Tourist also endeavours to defend the Castle, which however in my opinion the most irregular buildings. Not one wall stands straight, – symmetry is not thought of – it forms a square – the more fine windows are visible of small panes of glass with leaden frames! The house, where the Sultan's wife resides, where he pays Caution his visits, – the coach house & the stables with the manege, were later built by Limprichts, have a much murder, about the year 1824. Mr Voelin's disciple, Hebenstreit, who wrote the history of Holstein, lived here as Clergyman. – In Bosau which belongs still to Eutin, we got a sailing boat from the landlord, & sailed over fast fellow and rowing the ladies we reached the other side in about three quarters of an hour. From all sides the Plön Castle which lies on a small hill, presents a pretty prospect. The Boat had two small masts, one man rowed, the other was at the helm: it carried 4 or 5 men or Passengers & weighing each 224 lb. Nearing the Estate, belonging to the Obrigkeitliche von Krockow, we were struck with the fine groups of beautiful trees, which lined the shore, we landed, walked about, and were highly pleased with the fine broad walks, fine towering trees, the order in which every thing is kept & the taste, with which the whole Estate is laid out. – the mansion by no means a building which can lay any Claim to architectural beauty, is however large & the owner is now advancing to improve it. – From the Top of the wooden Stairs, which lead up to the house from the garden, the view is delightful: – there the trees which line the lake, only just sufficient is cut away, as to open the view to the nearby opposite lying steeples of Plön. which appear as in a frame, standing upon the top of the high reaching towards the clouds. You have before you a lawn, a small chain of water, a green meadow, the suppposed of the Castle & in the background the Plön Castle. From a pavillion we had a similar view. Dr Ludwig Elizabeth & I took a long stroll, – the Carriage had come round by land & we mounted again. The Mansion & some large out-houses, such as the granaries, coachhouse, stables &c. form a large square with two fine rows of linden trees, three: [illegible] We left at about 12, the road was rather sandy, for some distance, lined not only with the usual hedges, but also with newly planted fir trees, which thrive well; to the left we had a more glimpse of the Stuck Lake, passed thro' the long extended looking village of Glienicke reached at 12½ the Estate of Ashberg, belonging now to the Counts of Ahlefeld, in former times to the family of the Kangaus. – We stopped at an Inn and after having waited for nearly an hour for a not over-clean dinner: butter milk, very few good pancakes, raw ham, a miserable veal chops for myself, a bottle of abominable wine, we walked thro' the Park or garden, which like that of Nekanken borders immediately upon the Lake; it is perhaps not quite so well kept as Nikenden, and the walks are not so broad, but the trees are equally beautiful in both Estates. Ashberg has a number of cottages, whence the views upon the Lake are delightful. – a long shady walk along the lake is very handsome, and two avenues the one from the Lake to the mansion, which is a small building, the other in a right angles from the mansion out of the park, are splendid, tho' not long. – In the latter avenue some peasants on horseback in their holiday dress, their hats & horses adorned, were running for a ring hung on a cord, stretched across the avenue; but they did it in a very clumsy way, instead of coming up at full gallop, they hardly could bring their horses to a Canter. The Tourist says that 20 villages & Castles (farms I suppose) belong to this Estate. – We left at 4; the road leads between the Lake to the right & a fine wood to the left. the wood ceases, the prospect upon the Lake continues; before we reached a little to the left we had the Ruin Castle & Tower, surrounded by woody heights. Further to the right some white spots, houses belonging to Tarath's Estate of "Rathleben". further on we drove over a natural causeway dividing the large & small Ruin Lake; the latter is several feet higher than the former & two small canals or brooks which unite them are famous for excellent eels caught here. The Tourist says, that he had heard mention of the

with the beauties rose in the travellers mind Expectations of them, and that her Expectations were surpassed. — We alighted near the "Upper Garden" which I thought most beautiful with its broad, royal-like looking walks & avenues. — a small peninsula stretches into the lake, at the End of which (of the pen-insula) a pavillion is built. Here we ascended the Terrace before the Castle, where I had been before on 17 January, after having rested our Eyes with the prospect over the lake, we turned back to worship that the palace, we had from the other side quite a different but also very pretty view. just before, we lay the town, with hilly gardens to the left, and behind the town the small lake interspersed with a number of green meadows. — The palace is much improved since I saw it in January, tho' it never will be a beauty, at least it begins to look regular, it is terraced & the small window panes are changing room to large ones. It consists of the ground floor, 2 stories & one window in each gable end, of which there are 5 in front, and two in the side buildings, which form the wings. — We mounted our Carriage in the market place and drove to Lange's public house, close to the town, where we took a cup of Coffee and then ascended a little hill in the garden, whence the view surpasses by far all I had seen in the course of the day. It can not be handsomer, in its kind, large mountains, a large river cannot be expected. — Just behind where we stood, to the Northward, the prospect is impeded by a gentle eminence a little higher than our Station. Commencing then with the N.E. & E., the eye rests upon a small lake, the Schwe-lake, surrounded by a narrow Isthmus from the second lake, Peter-de--Burn an Isthmus following the Dieck, called by the Landlord, Clevedon, lake on the Side at the Extremity of which Grimm's Mill is just distinguishable, thence to the right Meadow and various woods, which reach behind the Obrien lake, which lies before or to the S. of us. —

d. dominiering spirit of Nancy. her two sisters are hardly allowed to speak, the alones entrance on the conversation. she is not disagreable, has a little smattering of something, but in reality knows nothing. When I came home, I found Mr Limpricht busy busy with her arrangements for her Evening party. she is a good kind of woman and I am on excellent Terms with her. — The Emperor of Russia incognito on his way to London and has unexpectedly passed through Berlin and arrived in Brunswick, where he announced his journey to Prussia Minden. — Jacques Lafitte, the king maker of Louis Philippe and banker, died on 26 May, old 77 yr. The king of Saxony is also on his way to London, — on 28 May he landed in Dover. — The Crownprince of Denmark is on a trip thro' Scotland. — Cockburn formerly curate of the Jamaica Hill in St James' is dead. — Charles Napier's Report on Lord Ellenborough: Peccavi (I have sinned (sinned)) — After having written the foregoing I commenced answering the letters, rec'd in Altona just before I started on 27 May and was then called by Mr Limpricht, the party having begun making their appearance. — Mr Limpricht had every thing very neatly arrangid, the company consisted of the following: Jgfrouw Salfisch van Drongen, an elderly very talkative lively lady, with whom I conversed a great deal, a Miss Ender, also elderly, said to be clever, who gives music & singing lessons and who is about renting some rooms at Limpricht's, Clergyman Müller & his wife, who are pleasant people, a Miss N. N., Miss Lindemann & brother, Mr Secretary who was on 31st May as Müller, Lieutenant von Holstein, insignificant people, Erlenbag & Elizabeth. — Tea was first handed round, there we had plenty of Conversation, some of the Gentlemen withdrew to another Room, to smoke their cigars. But they also did in the Ladies' presence, then a general game at forfeits was played, which, not very interesting, went off however pretty well, after which Supper was ready. I took the place of honor at the head of the table between Mr von Drongen to my right & Mr Müller to my left. the latter brought out the health of every one at table in the manner, which the accompanied and which was done by all present according to well known rules; dinner was really very elegant and time passed away pleasantly enough till near 12 h. The table service was the same which many many years ago I recollected having seen at my father's mother's; white with a tasteful green border. After my mother's death it was divided between my two sisters. — Betty's half was smashed to pieces, the shelf breaking, whereupon it was, Maria's, half was sold at her death & bought in by Limpricht. Limpricht's house is also full of Engravings, which has belonged to my parents & which were all in my like old acquaintances; also hung him & there Rembrandts many drawings of my two sisters adorn the walls.

Tuesday 9 June. I was the whole morning busy writing letters, & paid a farewell visit to Millers, who like are very much; she is a clever & good looking, also a very able woman. We dined by ourselves at Limpricht without Rebentisch. After dinner I was busy arranging my trunks, which went to Brandt's hotel in Kiel, I and with Rebentisch to the Rooms with physical apparatus in the College, where he made various experiments, then at Limpricht he showed me several colored maps for the teaching of physical geography, we supped altogether at Limpricht's, which being over. I had to make them a sketch of my house in Lima. To answer a number of questions about Peru and at all 11 o'Clock we went to bed. — The North magnetic pole is situated in Lat. Latitude 70° 5' Long. in the hand. It was a fine clear morning, gradually clouds drew up & threatened rain & thunderstorm. Our direction to Lützenburg was towards the N.E.; we skirted the Kellers Lake to our left, which repeatedly afforded very pretty views, watched Sielbeck, close to the Lake's shore, the wind caused the waters to rise in waves. - my guide, Reuter, an unmanly dressed, high-Dutch speaking fellow, said it put him in mind of walking on the Beach of the Baltic. - we saw Jones's mill at the W. End, and the various patches of wood, surrounding the Lake, - from an Eminence on the far Road a fine well built town upon the Lake. - Continuing our march, we passed a few houses, called Sielbeck Manor, then Kirchhorn, which surrounded by wood lies very prettily. the country is all little hilly. at 9¼ we reached Klein Nienhof, the last village on the Eutin Territory. thro' a gap in the hedge, lining the road, appears the steeple of Kirch. Nienhof over a vegetable wall of trees, this village, lying in Holstein, belong to the large Estate of Klekkamp owned by Baronet Brockdorf, son-in-law of Jospen von Grote, President of Eutin; a pretty road leads via meadows, we passed thro' Kirch. Nienhof, & had to cross back, we asked our way of a pretty, extremely friendly, nice young girl, dressed like a town-woman & speaking high-Dutch. We stopped for a few minutes in a miserable inn, quite country-like, the room floored with bricks, filled with birds, the landlord shaving. my guide took some bread & butter and whey, & a Tumbler of butter-milk. We walked to an Eminence, whence on a clear day a very great Extent of land with the Steeple of Lübeck, Eutin & Plön is visible. the atmosphere was extremely hazy, so that our distinct-guished merely the steeple of Eutin & to the East-ward a Tower which is built upon a hill as a landmark for sailors which are making the port of Neustadt, a place, where much business in Corn is doing. The Steeple on the churches of Kirch. Nienhof is painted, in the same manner as all, which I have seen in this part of Holstein, quite different from the churches in the Country places of England, which square & tiled, look more substantial, close to the church a small building is erected, which small Common, the irregular building of Newhouse, belonging to Lord Rockwood, Mr Newcomen's brother in law, & some few groupes of trees with pretty walks & a pavillion, belonging to their Estates, & to our left lay the meadow of Newcomentown, separated from the Battle by a narrow ridge of land, upon which the farm house called Hasting Lee, and which towards the N. W. still is against join the main land, is barren & appears sandy. From this bridge we walked to the pavillion in the garden before us, whence the same way we had come as far as the farm of Hoss, where we left the high road and crossing over fields, ditches & hedges, we reached Friedrichsdorf at about ½ a Clock. I pretty much tired, however a few cups of tea restored me to such a degree as to enable me to walk again a walk with Wilhelm in the Cool of the Evening thro' the neighbouring woods. The woods were quite delightful & the walk extremely pleasant. The land of Hohelien excels above all in stately beeches - also beautiful oak trees grow, but not in such abundance. Hornbeam tree & elms of course are also found, as well as fir & pines - I went to bed at 11 o Clock. I had nearly omitted mentioning a lovely burial place of the Counts von Hohelien, close to Hoss was a Lutheran Church, a mound of Earth which had been the tomb of moderate of former times. Probably Swans & Wooden; here the mother of the present young counts desired to be buried; after her death, her husband had it inclosed, ranelled & covered with bricks; towards one side it is closed by an iron railing, the door behind which is usually locked, we opened it a little, & saw an open stone in the same, also the coffins of one daughter & two children here, upon the top of their tomb covered with grass, a plain black cross is erected, and stately oaks shade it -

Saturday 8 June I rose at ½ 6 Clock, wrote my diary, took a cup of coffee, thanked Wilhelm for his kindness & started at about ½ 7 on foot with a guide who carried my small parcel & my Cloak, the clouds they threatened rain, but the high wind which blew from the W. kept it off. The country people are very anxious, it should rain, for other

Sunday 9 June. I rose before 6 and have been writing my diary until now. 8 o' Clock. At Tell's I received 2 Letters from Steenbüren with Indorsements from Daniel Schultze & from Mönig of a previous date than that received on 28 May. I paid my bill, strolled along the harbours and walked back to the Church. Some houses in Kiel are built like those in Lübeck with curiously shaped gables, I observed however many, which stands completely in the air, merely sustained by Iron Bars, without any thing being built behind the same, as it is sometimes the Case in Lübeck. I had hardly entered the Church, when I was called by Mr. Hermann Wellink senior, who asked me to sit near him with his wife. The Interior of the Church offers nothing particular in an architectonical View, but the Probst Harmsen, who preached to-day, has a great Name, as standing at the Head of the Supernaturalistic (this I learnt last night from Mr Tell) who considers Faith as the Keystone of Christianity, in opposition to the Rationalists, with whose creed I am not acquainted, but who, I suppose, subject every dogma of the Christian Church to the touch stone of Reason. The Church was by no means crowded. After some singing of "Psalms" (psalms, not those contained in the bible) accompanied by the organ, which singing I look upon as a very superfluous appendix to the protestant service, Harmsen mounted the pulpit. he is a man of near 70. I am not physiognomical and this I suppose is the reason, why I looked at him very attentively, I did not find in his face any striking or prominent features, his pronunciation is abominable for, being of low extraction from Dithmarschen, he has preserved the Tonth of the disagreable dialect from that part of Holstein: Evangelium instead of Evangelium, Laagaren (nearly the danish aa) instead of Lgaraen, schrien instead of schrien, also the last syllable of the verb. he accented most particularly: eringen instead of ering in se: he has lost his teeth, which I think is the cause of his smile being far from pleasant, but then again he speaks by heart, apparently without any preparation, that I doubt not, that he has studied his sermon well, his gesticulations, not graceful, as inexpressive, I suppose, John Knox's must have been somewhat like them — and moreover he expresses himself very distinctly & in a plain popular, intelligible manner, he makes use of coarse words, such as wh-----, which I should think, might be avoided in the pulpit. But in the same view I confess, that since Johann's time I have not listened to any preacher with more attention than to him, and if I lived on Kil, I believe, I should frequently go & hear him preach, — the day I was directed, pleased but not edified. The Text, which, I now learn for the first time is fixed for every Sunday, was the parable of the rich man & Lazarus, which Harmsen thought proper to call a strange sounding, because in his opinion it does not chime in well with the text of previous Sunday, and upon this word sounding & upon this text coming somewhat amiss he harped more especially, I should say, for nearly half the time of the Sermon, after which he drew from the parable the obvious moral, that the rich man, if not making a proper use of his riches, would [illegible] & the poor man, if bearing up meekly with his misfortune, would be rewarded in the next world. But then, whilst dilating on this subject, he maintained, founding himself upon the deep chasm which according to the text exists between heaven & hell, that there is no escaping from hell, that he who is once condemned to hell, must suffer there to all Eternity — a creed little corresponding to the opinion I have formed of an all merciful God. When the Service was over, I ran to my friend — young Lütke, who by the bye is an [illegible] fanatic, follower of Harms & his opinions, as well as old Hermann Willink & his wife and young Hermanus, whilst Teddeman a Hernhutter an opposite to them — took me to the place, where Willinks stood in a Stuhlwagen for their former Stift. Owing to the usual road beautiful Trees, in which the Eastern part of Holstein abounds, besides some of the most indigenous, & also allmighty oak trees, elm, lime Trees, as a Species called Tilia [illegible] pinnata of ash trees, which give a good fire wood, tho' not so good as the wood of beeches & oak trees. I saw various new plantations, lime trees, hazle, chestnut trees, alders (Salix) are also found, but in less abundance; maple trees grew naturally (Acer Campestre) trees, the hedges are usually formed by the yoke-elm (Ulmus, also Fagus, Birch, the hazel nut tree. — Whilst I stopt some time at the Knaup Sluice, here is an Inn, various people from Kiel had come thither, a vessel passed through the embankment one way for some time along the Canal, which presents many pretty, & always varying, prospects towards Holtenau, which lies at the mouth of the canal, before reaching it, we turned off to the left & walking over fields & pastures we again reached Steft, we still watched the garden, stopped at 12 Clock, at 9th, when it was hardly dark, very lady retired to bed. The Inmates are Widow Mrs Mrs Wittich, a female Companion, Caroline, a grand niece of gail, a young Dane from Odense, Fyen, who is to learn husbandry (Landwirthschaft) & a young Holsteiner, Schmidt, who is an assistant, Tyrolese, with a low Salary. The maids, who work in the dairy, rise at the Summer between 11 & 12 Clock in the morning.

Monday 10th June. It was as late as 7 th, when I made my appearance in the sitting room to take the usual breakfast of coffee & sweet biscuit, [illegible] Wittich & I took again a pleasant walk, that the village of Holtenau is the very mouth of the Canal, where a row of [illegible] lodging red roofed houses for the different Custom-house officers, also a large, but little used, Custom-house Store is erected. Some timber, compared to the quantities I have seen in England, a mere nothing, was piled up on the Beach, some two vessels were unloading timber

On the same side, quite at a distance, Friedrichsort, a fortress at the entrance of Kiel Bay was visible; & the Bay itself with the opposite, partly woody Shore, looked prettily enough. Wellinck on this walk gave me a detailed account of the lives of Abraham Wellinck, and of his two brothers, Johannes & Jacob, who died both in America: if I add to their short life himself, as well as Diedrich in London, & Lucas in Altona, now in Norway, have had in life, I cannot but come to the Conclusion, that there must have been something radically wrong either in the Character or in the Education or in both of all the Wellincks. The present generation, Hermann & Charles, the sons of their old Wellinck, has certainly vastly improved & I trust, that young Diedrich in England will follow the good example he showed at 12: in the appearance we walked again thro' woods, over fields, hedges, ditches &c. and at 5 o Clock went to Tesdorpf's who had invited us. — They have a large family, 8 children: — how we were taken care of during both Gondolas there as old Wellincks we had tea, we then walked down the garden, a governess of the Children, a Miss Brämmel from Hamburg, a pleasant young lady, played the piano, a poor Instrument — & we then supped, a rice pudding and bread & butter. — Mariedle shows that she has been well educated & is by no means disagreable, but as already said, she lacks every body above all she speaks in by no means laudatory terms of Betty Barnes, now Frau von Enkel-mann and her hard fate. We returned home past 10 & then to bed.

Tuesday 11 June — After breakfast all & Mr Wellinck always very kind, made me take some lunch & at about 7 o Clock I started on foot by myself carrying my small Bundle. Thick Clouds are continually threatening rain, but the wind prevents it coming down. — At the Holsteinian Sluice I was detained a considerable time by vehicles passing: on this, the Holstein side, I took a foot path to the left, which led me down the lower wood lies already on the Sides of the harbour, over the waters of which towards the other side, where the Town lies, we had many pretty views: close by the foundations is laid for a new house. — Descending towards the Beach, we approached the railroad making part of the churchyard has been obliged to give way so that several corpses have consequently been disinterred & re interred, which has given rise to bitter feelings & complaints. the road for the locomotives is in course, where the Prince Kiel, a wader, which would at present an obstacle, disembogues into the harbour; there a dyke is to be thrown over it & a rail road for horses only to be continued to the real harbour or landing place, called here: die Kieler Bucht. Young Lilie told me, that one plan is, completely to fill up the (Prince) Bay, the other, to give its waters a subterranean vent under the Kieler Garden. — We soon entered the pretty village of Dreyfaden and a little further on came to the public house of Wittelsbacher's Höhe, formerly the Hundsburg, where Mr. Lilie, who had come over in a Boat, waited for us with tea, it was all very nice & pleasant, but I only regret the Expenses, they incurred for me and the worthy young Lilie, who is really a clever man, pointed out to me a small grove of trees, where in olden Times judgment has been held in the open air, which place frequent mention is made of the history of Kiel; a small branch runs thence into the harbour, well called: Unter Baden Bach. — After having remained some time in the garden, we went over to the other side in a Boat; Baumgarden left us, Mr. Lilie went home, young Lilie & I made some inquiries about the sailing of Steamboats for Flensburg (I had read a letter from Prof. Wall, pointing out to me the Conveyance to Hr. Oldrich) 3 hours' drive from Flensburg) & then strolled down to the end of the town. — He also made me observe the elegant gable Ends of many houses, pointed out to me many old buildings, belonging in former very pretty walk, in a different direction from our yesterday's route. we had there prospects to the North of the Town, we passed through the village of Brunswick (Brunonis vicus Sim. Duk.), the same derivation as the duchy & town of Braunschweig. the name of Kiel in general derived from the wedge (Keil) shape of the Bay, whence our fields, winding the sandy carriage roads as much as possible, to Schubart's Nursery garden & to the Royal Nursery for Trees (Königl. Baum-Schule), the object of which latter is principally the planting & growing of trees & the sale of the same to the Noblemen, owners of Estates in Holstein, in the mind of Bäume-verkäufen an Ihre and under a tree we found Mr. Forchh, with two of his lady. Colleagues, Mr. professor Chaly (a latinized surname of the german Kalkhoff) & Mr. professor Schrebe, whose husband joined us & we had tea & altogether a pleasant Conversation. I having naturally to answer to a great many questions and to relate much of Texas & Texican Customs. — We walked home over the Holsteiny avenues: it was a fine evening, & my walk with Forchh, a plain, but not disagreeable, but very slow speaking & I believe, very good & learned man, he gave me some accounts of the abortive revolutionary movements, in Germany, of that whole mere Children's play, during my absence in S. America, which I was in Friedrichshof I had a little of Fragments of Johannes Wirt, gen: von Türring (my old play fellow Fodin Wirt), who was led by his unconquerable vanity, to distinguish himself in those times, & who now lives a quiet rational life upon an Estate in Lesser Russia, not long ago I saw in a paper, that he is now a temperance orientier man. Forchh & I had also many pretty views upon the Kiel harbour, Holtenau, Friedrichsort and upon the opposite shore, where a white house, embowered in Trees, called Schreibershof, looks particularly handsome & Elterich with its windows gleaming by the setting Sun looks gaily delightful. Fell accompanied me to two Booksellers' Shops, & purchased "Barnes' Grammar" and an Engraving representing Kiel, & returned with him to his house. I took with me my drawings of Prussian Costumes, and looking them over at Mr Fell's Albums, conversing &, eating a little Cake & drinking a Cup of Wine, I spent the Time as agreeably as possible, till 10 h, when I went to my Hotel. — I cannot omit mentioning the rapid fall of the Rail Road Shares: in yesterday's Allona Mercury they are quoted: Hamburg. Bergedorf 95 — Altona. Kiel 100. Glückstadt. Elmshorn 100, Copenh. Rotschild 94 — quick as Thier's Pen was, their Trouble has been still more rapid. It is attributed principally to a decree of the Prussian Government, which prohibits all Sales of Shares or Bonds, & annuls to which, I believe, any new not prussian Rail Road Shares are not allowed to be offered for Sale without the previous permission of the finance minister. — It is said, that a deputation from a meeting of merchants and creditors in R. R. Shares, was to be sent from Hamburg to Copenhg, with the object of petitioning the King not to grant any more Concessions for new Railroads. On 24 May the King has conceded leave to Lauenburg to build a Railroad between Kiel, Eckernförde & Schleswig, which as a branch is to join at Schleswig the main Rail Road between Rendsburg, Schleswig & Flensburg. The Emperor of Russia is in London in a confidential visit of gaudium he has called upon Wellington & upon Sir Robert Peel, & on the 18 June, for was to have descended to the Continent.

Saturday 13 June. I rose at 7 h: it is a cloudy morning; my Room, &c Servant in my wonderous chamber, the same as yesterday with the windows open. It is now near 10 h I have done writing this diary, after which I wrote to Hamburg & to Flensburg, then I commenced [illegible] a little, when young Lilie came in to take me to a Tailoress, & hurried me my Clothes — Richards I had been sitting a little on Rötzbollen, which however generally I am not in the habit of doing, – and went with him to the university, where as Blain he told me to enter a Room, which I did. it was small, merely whitewashed, with a few very plain rows of forms & desks, which latter I observed were cut in various places, nearly as bad as it was the habit in Altona in Selecta in the times of my youth, – and as little bit of a reading desk (Cathedra), the forms were occupied by 18 Students, not particularly strikingly stupid, that all with rather long hair, and I among said Students (see 29 Mch) Virgin & Schwary and my next neighbour was young Bodelschwingh. At 12h precisely professor Waitz entered & without saying a word went to his desk, where he read in a very plain toned voice – (also his pronunciation was again not the very best) part of the Norwegian & Danish history towards the end of the 10th & Ch. beginning of the 11th Century, he spoke of the introduction of Christianity into Norway by Olof, of some wars between the three northern kingdoms, of the conquest of England by Sweyd, king of Denmark, & of Knud his successor. it was very interesting and willingly would I have listened an hours longer, but hardly had the Clock struck 1, when the Students closed up their portfolios (Hefte) & gave evidence that it was time for the professor to leave off, which he did accordingly. with the exception of two or three, who only listened & perhaps not even attentively, the Students noted down the main points of the professor's lecture in some, I am told, are capable of writing down every word, he says – I stood again with my dear Mr Lilie, her Son & Dr Baumgarten. the latter went away soon, with Mr L & Ernst I conversed till 3 a' Clock, the latter, who is Collaborator or teacher in Children's School, is extremely orthodox, complains much of the Dissenters, which prevails a great deal in my opinion by far too bad an opinion of human nature, in which in the Evening Mr Felt agreed with me. – I went to my Hotel, arranged my Traps & made a walk, – thro' the Schloss-garten & part of the avenues which lead to Deutsches Brook. turning to the left & following Fuss-paths, I passed thro' Brunswick. keeping always round the Town, I came near the spot, where the boys make their gymnastic exercises, (Turnplatz) and entered the Town by its North Western Extremity. In this vicinity are some considerable streets, which I had not seen before; and a Town in the meadows, where the soldiers practise, (Exercier-platz) some avenues & the road Gade there to Schleswig. I returned to Mrs Lilie. Took tea with her, had with Ernst similar conversation as afternoon, & went past 8 o'Clock, to Felts, with whom — she is exceedingly amiable — I spent more than two hours very pleasantly, came home at 10½ I wrote my diary, practised after my manner & went to Bed. We had very bad weather this evening, heavy rain & wind. — I learnt from Lilie, that the young Students distinguish themselves by their caps, the aristocratic youth, to which belong the sons of nobility as well as sons of the servants of the government, wear red caps, — the plebejans or republicans white caps, — some also distinguish themselves with green ribbons, but these, Lilie told me, are only the badges of a society of Typplers. —

Friday 14 June. I rose early, paid my bill and before 6 o'Clock was with my luggage, at the embarking place: various passengers went on Board with me, & they turned out to be: a noble, or rather half noble family, who called themselves von Burk, the Mother a planter's daughter from St. Thomas, she of the noble family of the Moltkes: they were the mother, two young step-daughters & a step son, all brought up in Denmark, & various little children with their servant girl: they kept a little dance. — young William Meyer, who is engaged to Miss Hering, Otto Tonnies's sister in law, with whom I soon became acquainted & conversed a good deal, two young men called Langer, — and a Mr Callesen, rather comical both with his sister, and a young girl, but pleasant woman of about 28 or 30, with whom I endeavoured to get a little acquainted during our passage. — It was a fine morning, when we got under weigh at 6 o'Clock, and the Kiel harbour & bay, as far as Dietrichsdorf and the Northern, and Schobenhoved on the southern Side, presented very pretty Views. After to the East ward of the mouth of the Sweedine commences the Fahrstrom which, tho' Shallow, affords nothing pretty to the Eye on that Side, the Land disappeared at about 7 o'Clock: on the Northern Side the Shore extends much further, after having passed the mouth of the Canal, follow the red roofs of Holdemann, then some woods, which extend as far as Friedrichsort, a place, formerly a fortress, but now, not used as such, tho' the walls are still preserved, - then the high Coast, an Estate called Louisa Nimhoff, some wood & a light house, the Estate of Bulk, - here, more or less, also the Northern Shore ceases, & our Course was now N. by W. The strong wind & rough sea - for by this time the weather had completely changed for the worse - drove me below, at 7h opposite Eckernförder Bay, the motion of the vessel was considerable, some ladies got sea sick: I myself kept up reading up & down as long as I possibly could, but gradually the sea sickness also overpowered me, I had to lay down on deck & afterwards I went below to the Cabin, which is prettily fitted up with horse hair sophaes & gilt ornaments, here a danish novel: Gluckstadt's Erbauung" was a proof that we were approaching the countries, where Danish is spoken. The weather became always more rough, & more, at about 11 we were entering Flensburg Bay, but the wind from the West, now exactly in our Teeth, was so strong, that the Steamer made with difficulty progress, as the Entrances are had Moen to our right. Partly reading, partly sleeping I passed the Time, after having taken for Lunch an excellent breakfast; I went on deck, it was now 1h: we were in Flensburg Bay, but the Sea more violent, headed & more rough, than the Atlantic, when I was in the pilot boat from on board the Vicar to Tregaron, on both sides rather high sandy hills, here & there covered with wood, formed the Shore; when approaching the Town, the banks look somewhat prettier, however in my opinion they bear no comparison with those of Kiel harbour: the prettily villas are entirely wanting, instead of them humble home about 8, when we had a very nice dinner; after dinner I took my diary, from 2 to 3 Walk with the Leaders Thomson, the two boys, really fine little fellows, & myself took a walk: the country round decidedly beautiful: it is variously level, with corn-fields, parks, grounds, meadows, Rivers, not to be surpassed with Flowers, solitary peasants houses & small woods here & there without any of the beauties arising from the undulating country & the lakes near Baden, Rhein & Lüttenberg. On our return we took coffee & looked into the Gnomon & conversed with the kind inmates until about 6 o'clock when we drove to the Clergyman's in Labruck. Professional Party Politics, in a large square room & things over with, the following were present. The Clergyman & his wife, his son & daughter, whom I had seen on board the Steamer, the former pleasant & quite different from what he looked on board. – The Caroline, a nice amiable modest young woman, who is engaged to a young man, who expects to obtain a curacy some day or other (Unsettled), – another married daughter, who is here on a visit, her husband, Mr. , lives in Zyburg – Mr Pedersen – & a Miss Mauritzagen, quite an interesting girl from Hamburg, – also Mr Ingelmann: – I talked with the two & with them each other – read Friday's Atlantic Monthly, – Atlantic & Pacific Rail Road Shares are again up to 105 – & the Emperor of Russia has again left England, – a war between Austria & France is threatening – no Turkish Sea. – I, having taken with me my China drawings, commenced showing & explaining them, – whilst busy herewith, Mrs & Mr Blackburne arrived, they joined us, & as much as I could, I now addressed myself to the really lovely Mr Blackburne: – soon after we sat down at Cards, – old Mr Tollefsen, Wolf & young Tollefsen played 2 Rambre. – Ingelmann, Miss Mortensagen & Christ against Mr Blackburne & myself: we played rather a long while & lost, but we conversed a good deal & I was much pleased with my partner. – At about 9 we went to supper: old Mr Tollefsen took

Mr Hall, & Mr Blackmore, with whom I soon kept up a lively & very agreeable conversation; on their drive homes, Mr Hall observed that Mr Blackmore is rather cogent with & that she makes use of her fine eyes; it may be so; I confess, that for a long time I have not been so much with a woman as I have been with her — we had a substantial Supper, roast veal with all kinds of vegetables after which a very nice cake with Lemon Sauce, after this was taken away they began singing, which the old gentleman, a fine old Cock, his son, his two daughters (particularly Caroline) did most sweetly, we broke up at 11 o Clock, much too soon to my liking, we then drove home & I have now been writing the foregoing; it is 12 h, the Chevaux Wandr at 11 P. Before going to bed, I shall read one of the Pranomin's contents, the Goldsmith, which Mr Blackmore has recommended to me; it is written by Bechstein — She is from Kiel; her father was a merchant Salomon — Her Verses by Bechstein are not so beautiful, as I believed them to be by her recommendation; they merely shew the good & the evil of Gold, as cannot be misregarded, in my opinion, in Bechstein's lovely parable "die Prinzessin die Wunderbuche" This writing I heard for the first time Daniel sung which sounded very pretty.

Monday 17 June. I am now writing this at about 3 o Clock in the afternoon in the inn or Gasthouse at Hollnis (especially, I am told, called Holsenerg because the wind generally blows here so very high that unconsciously one takes hold of one's Hat, I suppose, for fear it might blow off) in a large room, the windows of which look upon the Flensburg Bay, which separates me from the other Side, whither I must go, but cannot at the present moment, because the wind blows so high, that the Ferrymen refuse taking me over; just here the Bay widens considerably and quite at a distance some land is hardly distinguishable, which I am told is the Island of Alsen; close by, the other Shore presents nothing particular, a coast standing down to the water's Edge, generally cultivated, has & there sandy, which runs out a few red roofed houses, where Ale was found. — surrounded inland the Steeple of Broadas appears. — between the house & the Bay is nothing but some pasture ground, with one or two Cows grazing, inclosd by hedges, and below a Road, which leads to the Beach, not visible from here. — I now adress to this day's commencement. — Rose before 8 o'Clock, took a cup of coffee, packed up my Sundries, also mine seen with (Side Bills) and started with Wall upon the Pittsburgen at 7 h o'Clock, both Mrs Walls were already up. the old Lady had risen before her time; but the young one, who is extremely active & of very good kind of woman, whom I think, Wall treats a little too much Sultan like, is always up as early as 5 o'Clock. — We drove down Sabrina past the Apothecary's house, where Mr & Mrs Bladsmo, young married folks, were not yet visible & called upon the Doctor Hanson, who accompanied us. The Country upon the whole was as yesterday described, but yet comfortless here wednesday to the fertility of the soil. sometimes the ground rose a little undulating, which contributes immediately to improving the beauty of the prospects. — We passed also over various villages, the Names of all of which I do not recollect. — I remember Hanbye on account of its pretty high pointed Church Steeple, that's made of wood, standing upon a foundation, from two sides big stones, from the third of bricks, next Frimersheim, really remarkable on account of the immense quantities of stacks, which have their roofs upon the house, upon one house I did not count less than 6 Nests, and thirdly Munsterbracamp, which stands near because the church has no Steeple. — On approaching & entering Hindelbang & Sleiden, it offers very pretty views, the road is lined with fruit trees* on approach the plain & on entering the Town, we drove down a handsome avenue, up to the Inn, where we alighted, took some bread & butter, some which they recommended Madeira & started on foot to get acquainted with the beauties of the parts & round which surrounded the Castle, which is a miserably looking, white washed, building, with four thin & pepper boxes on the four Corners, between which Towers, are three gable ended, red roofed houses; three sides are bordered by the water of the lake, in which the Castle stands; the fourth side is only accessible by a narrow bridge, which leads in a gable way, which together with the three other sides forms a quadrangular garden in the middle. - Nearly all around the lake is enclosed by the town the ward, sometimes in the very water's edge, in the park there are occasionally shady avenues of the ward, consisting principally of beech trees, has ist pleasant walks, as wounds always have - we crossed the lake, which is cut from the ward, which shows on one end the Castle, on the other the Flensburg Bay of 20 ℔ Eng. Miles and reaching a little further on, we crossed an artificial dyke, which separates a freshwater lake on the left, called "Westsee Wasser" from the Flensburg bay, which forms a small inlet on the right. The Doctor told us, that when he practised here in Flensburg as physician, he used to shoot often on this dyke, when towards dusk they passed over from the fresh water lake where they have their food under the shelter of Woods but where the water is too deep for them in order to feed, then from the other side where the water is shallower. Having crossed this dyke, we came again to a wood, and in the same to a strong bubbling spring, the water contains many iron particles, this spot is called: Das Teufelsloch, under the present rough weather a view upon the bay & the opposite shore looked dark enough. We ascended & saw the preparations for the morrows fair, a booth was being erected for refreshments, who amongst is the Bill, signed by a Miss Petersen, have had the honour to perform in Copenhagen Stockholm, Petersburg &c; one there for wild beasts, most extraordinary animals, among to the Bill. Entrance 4 ß, children & servants the half.

At about 12 we drove on again; where hedges & houses afforded some shelter, the wind was not felt so much, but when we passed an isthmus which unites a small peninsula, formed by Flensburg Bay, upon the Extremity of which a few houses are situated, which are called Holnæs, the wind was nearly intolerable; our first question at the

Jun. whether I could pass over to the other side, was answered decidedly in the negative; but when enquiring of the landlord, apparently a swollen drunken fellow, he said, that in the Evening the wind generally lulled, and I therefore determined upon remaining, & accordingly my luggage was taken up stairs. Wall had a letter, which the Consp.rine. Rathjen of Altona had requested him to deliver to a young lady, born in Copenhagen, but educated in St. Thomas, who, when quite a child, 6 or 8 years of age, had been saved by a Captains on her passage over, a child had been the consequence, which her father had taken care of, who, himself a widow, had delivered it to her immediately after her marriage to a M.r Hansen, the Consp.rine. Rathjen's sister by her first marriage. very improperly she had treated M.r Hansen ignorant of her faux pas & the natural Consequences was, Madame. she now lives with an aunt of hers, M.rs Schmidt, whose husband is one of the Custom house officers. All had praised her up as an extraordinary beauty, & consequently she desired & accompanied Wall to deliver the letter: she is indeed a beautiful, full grown, woman of about 21 years of age, with beautiful hair & eyes, neither she nor her aunt a pleasant woman, who can hardly be called elderly, speaks much german, their I conversed with both in English, the former answering in Danish, of which I understood merely every thing. the latter, Augusta, in English, which she speaks pretty well. — she also played the pianoe, but not masterly, & I suppose, when Wall said it was time to go. I should willingly have remained longer, then when taking leave I asked permission to return in the Evening, in case I should be detained here. — their reply I did not exactly understand. — Home we walked together to the other Custom house officer Toth whose Landlord was well known, here the family consisted of M.r & M.rs Toth, one grown up daughter & various little ones, who were running about, neatly dressed, which I also observed of the ladies both in this & the other house. — Ere long I got into conversation with the two ladies, — the girl, 18 years of age, has a striking resem-

Broacker with a church with two steeples, is rather a considerable village. & Flensburg, where we had to wait some hours, before the ferry boat came over from the other side, has a considerable extent along the shore & with its many red Roofs & steeples, looks a little better, tho' very cheerful when seen from the opposite shore. After having passed Flensburg, a very short drive brought us to Gravenstein, famous for the excellent apples, which have their Name from the place. I stopped at the Inn & was received by an extremely fair pretty girl, whom I thought to be the landlord's daughter, but who, as I discovered afterwards, was only the Servant girl. My baggage was taken upstairs in a Room, & I myself ushered into the best. it was now a coal, but fine clear morning. the Inn had just 8 & I had a very pleasant stroll for nearly two hours in the neighbour-

y representa de un modo ingenioso una accion famosa en la historia de Dinamarca. Quando Christian el Tercero subió al Trono elegido por los Nobles de Jutland en el año 1534, las fuerzas de Lubeck bajo el predicado de pastor de nuevo á Christiano el segundo sobre el trono, se habian apoderado de la mayor parte de Dinamarca. El rey con su general, Johan Rantzau, despues de haber tomado Aalborg, pasó á Fyhnen, quando Hans Mickelsen, obispo de Svalenniger, á quien los Enemigos habian hecho preso, se escapó de ellos, llegó al Campamento Danes medio desnudo y descalzo, y descubrió á Rantzau los planes de los de Lubeck, que por casualidad se habian visto en su presen-cia. Rantzau no queriendo creerle, él ofrecia perder su cabeza si no decia la verdad, entonces Rantzau tomó las medidas correspondientes y derrotó los enemigos completamente en el "Svenborg sund" en Assens en el año 1535 – Representa el quadro de bronze esta accion.

nor the seats are stuffed, however on this train the 2 Class had glass windows, which is not always the case in England with the 2 class Railway carriages. Along side the two rails, which are now generally in use, another rail has been laid with an iron tube in the middle, upon which many experiments are about being made upon the atmospheric principle, which many people are of opinion, is very likely to answer. The houses which stand along the road where the engines are kept, to exhaust the air and thus to create the vacuum, that which the pistons runs, are very neatly built & look altogether like small new churches in the gothic style. The distance from London to Croydon is 11 miles, with 3 stoppages on the road. I was at the Chalcots before 5. Others joined about not to be too soon at Dela Fosse's, who had invited me to the country house in Addiscomb, where I entered the Room, only Mrs de la Fosse, Mrs Grantoff & her two daughters were there, a few other people came by & bye, I had to lead the Lady of the House as Dinner was announced to the head of the table, to her right a gentleman (he is called Mr Cope, a clergyman) where Maria & me had known Lord Ellen. Caroline Grantoff and an elderly lady, Miss Schetsky, Mr de la Fosse at the bottom of the table, Mr Schetsky, I, Mrs Grantoff, Mr Cope & Mrs de la Fosse. Dinner was very nice, we had several wines, Sherry, Port, Claret, Champaign and Ale, two male servants attended. The conversation was not very lively, no agreeable wrought, when the ladies had withdrawn, the gentlemen stood hardly more than a quarter of an hour with their wines. Alfred Grantoff had come whilst we were at dinner, after dinner several gentlemen & two young ladies appeared, some of them played the piano, others sang, Caroline Grantoff does it very fairly, the old gentleman, Mr Schetsky, an agreeable cheerful man, sang Italian and Spanish to the guitar, and altogether

I arrived myself pretty well, at 10 o'clock I left, Albert G. accompanied me to the Croydon R. Station, and at about 11 I was back in my Lodging at Finsbury Square. Of the ladies present Mrs Crawley was undoubtedly the most ladylike.

Sunday 16 Sept I rose at 6 o'clock, to arrange and pay Schuette an appointment of Telegraphics, after breakfast I received an appointment to see Nickel, but he & his wife had just left: nothing very fast, I was on board the Antwerp Steamer close to St Catherine's wharf nearly half an hour before 11 o'clock, the hours fixed for her leaving. Ferdinand Schuette & his wife, he and I agreed, that the arrangement made between us, I shall send the Signs to Cologne (same other copy signed by him) care of J. F. Koch signed by me & he will send [illegible] to me. The first class cabin [illegible] very neat, adorned with many glasses much better than the dirty Hamburg Steamer, the John Bull there was a good many passengers, amongst whom also young Conrad Fischer, going now to the continent, to bid good bye to his relations, I introduced him to Schuette, and he me to Mr Bowring, his landlord, who had accompanied him on board, this latter told me, that he should be very glad, to see me in his house, of which invitation I shall not fail to avail myself. I left the Steamer a little before 11, and went to my lodgings, whence I started again in time to be at the Greenwich Railroad Station, which is the same as the Croydon one on the other side of London bridge, the previous days the weather had been very fine, but today the sun could not conquer the fog, they formed clouds & it rained a good deal. On my stepping out of the Rail Road Carriage Bernard Chardon had just come from his lodgings to meet me, we walked thro' the beautiful parks & thro' other very pretty country to the Hunter's hill Road, where he has taken a very small house, his wife came down, I was told by means of my spectacles, that she is of a very dark complexion, and tho' I have little doubt, that she is not pursued as many per-rather formed a black origin, yet she is reached grand looking and, when younger, must have been handsome, she has not the curly hair of my niece Barbadoes, but very black eyes & eyebrows; she is a pleasant circumstances. Bernard is very fond of her Senora, and I venture to say, that notwithstanding their poverty, they are far more happy. we took a little bread, cheese & porter, and after some conversation Bernard & I started for a long walk, the weather was now fine. we & I discussed on many many subjects, the country here about is extremely handsome, there is nothing particularly grand, romantic or majestic, but then the ground is undulating, there are many small hills, above all beautiful clusters of splendid trees, then fine known gentlemen's country houses, occasionally a view upon the distant Thames with its superb steamers, above all such neat roads and nice & then fine extensive Commons. we walked thro' the neat village of Charlton & further on we came to the artillery barracks of Woolwich, in front of which stand various cannons, in the middle of which one of enormous dimensions taken in the war in the East Indies. On our return we were overtaken by a small shower of rain, which detained us a little, so that it was nearly 6 when we came home, we had now a very plain dinner, however some beer, a few glasses of port wine & much conversation kept me in good spirits the whole evening, we had also tea and at 10½ n'Cl. Bernard accompanied me to a neighbouring public house, where I got a bed, for which

Monday 18 Sept. in the morning I paid one shilling. I rose early, at 6½ I was already in Charlton's small parlour: they came down at 7; we breakfasted at 7½ Bernard & I packed up & walked to the Rail Road Station in Greenwich. it was a disagreeable rainy morning, and notwithstanding an easterly wind, it continued on the whole day; the streets of London were a rather expensive dinner at a chop house, I had to pay for as excellent a one as I ever eat, two large potatoes, a piece of pudden, bread & cheese & ale 1/2 to the waiter. At home I took tea with the family, viz.d Mr.d Miss Dalton, another fat young pleasant lady who slept now in the house, Mr Miller from St Lucia, Mr Kapel & his little unhealthy child. Miss Dalton, Mr Miller & I amused us a little with funny & English conundrums, riddles &c. I added some to Miss Dalton's collection, which we kept them at it & then some fun writing till 10½. There in my room, with the windows shut, the R.

& Mr. Mr Crawley had today a fire lighted in the counting house —

Wednesday 17 Sept. Thursday I was quietly in my other room writing a long letter to Daniel Schutt, containing copies of reports and all the information, I could give him on sea-sickness &c.

Thomas Stanhope commenced, the tune of which Miss Copland, Caroline sang some lisping songs. I cannot say, I think much of her voice. it is not bad. we removed to Southampton at 10 o'clock to Bed. Sir Francis Wilkinson by Valour, certainly a fine drama.

Thursday 11th Sept. The weather was raw, all these days the wind blows from the S. W. heavy showers of rain are alternating with occasional sunshine. I therefore did not go in the garden, but remained myself in the drawing room with reading Byron's English Bards & Scotch Reviewers dreadfully sharp & virulent, but pleasant to read. Ellen, complaining of headache, did not appear at breakfast, Ellen's last before me. I wrote a Norwich Board which came by post 10 o'Cl. Mr Bandoff, always extremely amiable & kind, told me numerous droll things, that in 1824, just before my leaving on the Wanderer for Lisb. Sillem & Bandoff had been on the point of offering me a Situation as Clerk in their Counting House, which but was not. the day, they intended speaking to me. I had called upon Bandoff, telling them that I was already Partner. In Town I went to Gill's House, where I saw Kendall. afterwards I called upon Smith the barbarella, upon Maria & Robert Griffiths and Fanny at Foster Commons. here I found at Mr Hanrahans, and Douglas Dutton looking in. I took some porter and bread & cheese and remained some time. poor Maria looks dreadfully red in her face, which must be a sign of bad health. I then walked to Garrick the barbarella, Middle Row, Holborn, where I bought Cleaveland's Powers of London for 15/6, further on to Chancellors, who had mended my eyeglass. I dined at the Exchange dining room, looked in at my Taylor's, Fashions & came home. I also took in the course of the morning my passage to Chagres at the General Steam Navigation office, the Vessel is to be the vessel to sail on 17th from Southampton, but I was quite surprised, when the collection is by no means so extensive, as it might be expected, to be. There again, as regards natural history, I think, the collection is beautiful on the whole. A long row of Cases is filled with stuffed animals; first come the quadrupeds in an endless variety, to enumerate them would of course be superfluous. I will only mention two which appeared to me of an immense size, viz the giraffe and an animal of the species of the seals. I believe a Walrus, of stuffed birds the number was legion. Shells I passed over quickly, because I understand nothing about them and they do not interest me; the same I say of minerals, which came in a later room. Other Cases were filled with skulls of animals, of course very strong ranged in glass cases along the walls with skeletons of quadrupeds & fish, with birds nests, lizards, crocodiles, snakes, serpents, crabs, starfish, lobsters, monkeys & baboons, butterflies, beetles, bats, mice, hares rabbits, squirrels, fish &c &c. Along the walls of the room, in the middle of which tables covered with minerals were placed, cases with antidiluvian remains were ranged. There interested me more than any thing else, I having just heard of them in Altona from Semper the remains of these antidiluvian animals have been petrified, partly lying on the bowels of the earth, partly imbedded in layers of clay. The cases, in which these antidiluvian remains are kept, are labelled thus: Fossil Remains of Enalio saurian Reptiles and D° D° Batrachian, Chelonian & Conyd saurian Reptiles of the various animals, classified under the name. I found that of the remains of the Ichthyosaurus, (the sole of fish?) there are most and also best preserved. This seems to have been a big fish with a big long pointed head. The partly well preserved skeleton of one imbedded in a layer of clay found near Lyme Regis, Dorset Shire, to its name Ichthyosaurus are added the words. Platyodon conyb, which they mean I do of which I saw in Stuttgard, and the originals in Munich. Here are also the Elgin marbles, which have a great name, and which, being in very bad condition, I could not admire much; a great part of the same consists of bas-reliefs, which represents more or less the bas-reliefs and statues adorned once the in Athens and were brought to England by Lord Elgin. Ever since I am in London, I have frequently a disagreeable pain in the right leg of [illegible], so I was obliged to wear myself of an umbrella, which took me to the Bank. At 4 h. I was at Doctor Carruthers, where I dined with Maria, Robert Cresswell, Fanny, Douglas & Theodore Dubois, we had a nice plain dinner & a good deal of conversation, they are all very kind, but with the exception of Fanny, they are very English, Douglas thought, that Piedmont was a different language from Germany. After dinner Robert took me to his bedroom, where he has a pretty little collection of stuffed birds, Edward, whilst the others were playing at bagatelle, he showed to me & explained to me some views of Winchester College, where he received his education, - some views of Hastings on the sea side, where they have just spent some weeks, were also shown to me, - & of course, as it was duty bound, took great interest both in Winchester & Hastings, drank a little wine, spirits, negus, but water & tea were brought in, of which we all partook & at 11 h. 20 I was home.

Saturday 20 Sept, a beautiful, though rather cold, clear day. The outside thermometer at 9 h. 15 M. 7 R. I have been writing at my Journal. I then despatched myself and called upon Maria Cresswell & Fanny Wilcock, with the object to ask them their adieu, what to do for a birthday present for my Journal keeping, they advised me to purchase a pair capped of mother colours to mine & their Journal writing. I staid with them only a few moments and after having walked about 10 minutes, I was overtaken by an omnibus which put me down at the corner of Sloane Str., there we already outside London. London finishing at Hyde park corner, Sloane St belongs to Knights bridge, further on in the same direction is Brompton, towards the River, Chelsea. — Mrs Pearse, Head the Derbies live, Mrs D. who looks the best of the three sisters, and her daughter, Emma, whom I saw when I see her with spectacles, I do not think so good-looking as I did last time, two years ago, received me very friendly, we conversed a good deal, and took lunch, to which we regularly sat down, cold meat, cold ham, cheese, butter, bread, pastry & wines and at 9 o'Cl. I left, Theodore accompanying me a good way. Emma Derbies is considered as talented girl, she is strong in languages & draws well, her likenesses drawn in black chalk, crayon, are striking. — I then went to the polytechnic institution, there is much machinery standing around & much of it at work, but as I do not understand any thing of mechanism, I can take no interest in it. — But I was much pleased with various exhibitions & lectures, the first was (since converted into) the reflections of various objects increased to an extraordinary size upon a white wall before the spectators: it is now done in a different manner from that, which I saw two years ago, and when the objects were deluded to a tremendous magnitude size, but then also they lost their color, which faded away to the enormous extensions of the particles, in day as far as I understood, light falls upon the objects themselves, which by means of certain apparatuses is reflected from them & thrown upon the wall. A white mouse, some gold fish, a chimney-flowers were some of the objects selected for the purpose. The lecture was on the properties of heat. I shall only speak of Heat and change upon, cold contracts them, all metals are not equally affected. In consequence of this expansion & contraction a clock, which is put in motion by a metal pendulum, goes slower in summer, because the pendulum lengthens & has consequently a greater distance to move or oscillate. — the cold, therefore, contractions of the pendulum have the contrary effect of hastening the motion: to remedy this, Harrison, Head invented pendulums have a little rod added to them, which serves, by raising & lowering to regulate the length & consequently the oscillations. — but Clocks, which are to go quite exact. have a different arrangement: some mercury is fixed in the bottom of the pendulum: which the metal of which the pendulum is made expands, the quicksilver also expands: here I am at a loss, I commenced some thing which I do after all not understand & must therefore stop. In the Cathedral of London, the pendulum, which is to oscillate very seconds, exceeds 60 by many inches long from the point where it is fastened, to the oscillation point, which is about in the middle of the ball at the pendulum's end. — Black pointed metal about the head, well polished & never oiled, in these days, the Ladies put a piece of nickel over between one black pointed & one well polished metal plate, and between both some phosphorus, that behind the former lighted in a few minutes, whilst the other plates remained quite cold. — Another experiment which he made was to place two polished metal plates at some distance from each other, before the one he placed a nickel coin, before the other a candle: the head was reflected upon the polished surface nearest to the nickel coin, & some reflected upon the opposite one, and more more reflected upon the candle, which was lighted — Below in the large apartment, where all the machinery stands suspended experiments were made upon a railroad on the atmospheric principle, of course upon a very small scale: some one of the children was drawn upon a small seat, which rested upon wheels, and these wheels ran upon rails. — in the middle between the rails lay a small tube, by an aspiring the air was drawn out, and the piston running thro' the tube, carried the seat with it to which it was fastened. Of course the tube was closed with a soft mass, thro the iron, which connected the piston & the seat, here open. But then some ingenious machinery, a valve or roller, which however I did not clearly understand, closed it immediately again. — here a man crouched down this soft mass, which proves, that this machinery does not do its guides sufficiently. — and I believe, there is also the main difficulty which the projectors of the atmospheric railways have to contend with. — when this was over, we soon returned to the sitting room, where a young man & Jew was now magnificed upon the same principles as it had been done previously with the other objects. It's mouth was enlarged in such an extent that apparently he could easily have swallowed up several human beings at the time. – Then followed the departing views of the whole concluded with the reflections of circles of all kinds & colors upon the same white wall, which circles twisted & twirled about in any possible manner. – it looked very pretty. It was now 9 h 20, not knowing my way, (I was obliged to ask several times, tho' I had thought, I would have found the City Road, by keeping always easterly, in which however I did not succeed) – did not reach home till before past 10; Mrs Bahim & Miss Böden were already at their dinner, so I could not ask leave to sit down with them, which I had intended to do. – Thus I have had no dinner & probably shall not get any. It's now 7 h; – nor did I dine. I remained generally at home during that is to say, employing in my previous journal the clean my diary of 25 Nov. 44, as p. 1111, at 9 o' Clock I went below to take tea with the family, and went to bed at an early hour, in bed I read regul? the Family Herald a pleasant paper, which amongst other things contains parts of the 'Wandering Jew' by Sue, in English. – Wandering in the day, it was a Saturday. two years since I landed in Penzance. –

Sunday 21 Sept. Tho' in the morning the coaches did not look very enticing, yet I did not think, that it would rain out so extremely wet a day, as it did, and then at 10 h I embarked just below London Bridge on board a Steamer for Gravesend. it soon commenced raining. all went below, so did I for a short time afterwards I remained sitting on deck, wrapped up in my big cloak & protecting myself with my umbrella against the pelting rain; it was any thing but pleasant. at 12 h I landed at Gravesend, entered an Omnibus, the rain continuing in some downrights torrents, at about 2 o Cl. I stept at the door of Mr.

surgeon by country called Doctor Robertson in Chatham. I was very friendly received. another daughter, Emma, has again left for S. America about 6 weeks ago she sailed in the Magellan from Lynn, & is gone to Gallaghen in Callao, of course on a matrimonial speculation. Two young men, the Edwardes were there we immediately went to dinner, which was very plain, — there was even no pie — of this I would say nothing, but then on a Sunday the table cloth was not clean. — now only Elizabeth two boys & a little nephew, born in Sierra Leone are at home with the Doctor & his wife. — Since I was here 2 years back, the Establishment of the Convicts has been taken away, there is now no convict ship — no hospital ship, and accordingly Mr Robertson's income is now much reduced, he is on half, or as they said, guarded pension. — The conversation was lively & pleasant enough, after dinner the D. & I went for a moments up the deep street, which leads to the town leads to the hill behind the town. — I just requested my money we returned, took tea & at 5 ½ one of the Edwardes, I left in an omnibus for Gravesend, where we arrived a little to 7. just in time for the last steamer. It was a complete deluge of Rain. the after cabin was crowded with people: in the fore cabin, where the company was very low, we just found room to stand. I on account of the fresh air kept my stand close to the stairs: after an hour & a half I got fortunately a seat, we landed at Blackwall, where the decked which used only 9d procured me also a place, to stand not to sit under cover, but with the sides open, upon the 2d Class R.R. Trains here, as every body knows, the seats are padded by a super. at ground made of wire, and the arches upon which the table, are so high as to be on a level with the roofs & panels of the houses. My residence is in London street, Fenchurch st. Mr Edwardes told me, that the dividend, their railway has been paying, has been 9 p Share of 20 £. Owing to the extravagantly dear expropriations the last years, which leads that the Directors & shareholders, and I conversed with them very freely & gaily. I am almost certain, that they do not dislike me. After leaving them I looked in at Gibbs' how was friendly letter for me from Wally Swanne, Thereon I Thomy smoking, - Read of Theatre gives me much pleasure, - after writing a little Jos' Alcini, now established in Paris, came; he is not much altered; we conversed on many subjects & I am glad I went in in Spanish which rubs much off rustily. He is married to a Mexican lady, called O'Brien & domiciled in Paris; he is married two years, but has no children; - to morrow he leaves for Bristol, to visit Mr W. Gibbs in his country seat Tyntesfield - I went home, wrote a note to Mr Gibbs & a letter to Mr Bright, and when I took them to Gibbs' office, I was quite astonished to find, that all the young men were just thinking of taking off, for it was Tuesday, what we call all over Europe, just night. I conversed a little with some of them, amongst whom, with Anthony Rice, who had been in Hamburg at Hermann Diehl's, and after observing home, I wrote my diary till nine, nearly 9, with the interruptions of good half an hour, when I went below to take tea. - In the drawing room they had a fire, how in my room I feel rather cold, Th Mth 62

Wednesday 24 Sept. A fine clear, but cold morning. Thermt my window 10° R - 55 F at 9 o Clock in the morning. - Mr Riepel and I went after breakfast to Gibbs Counting house, Mr Barbaroux having promised me an order to see the Bank, however as Mr Neate, one of the Directors had said, that he rather wished our visit to be put off till to morrow, the day appointed for visitors, we did so, and spent the whole morning, roaming about. As the distances are very great, times passes but too quick; we went to a Saddle, to Mr Seller of Scales, to Wittbrock, - I ordered a gentle Saddle, scales weights, brass and an iron stand and bought a Chale dress for my wife. On our return I had merely time to write a few words, then to dress & shave, to go upon Mr Anthony Rice's Thursday 20 Sept. Immediately after breakfast I went to the Bank of England with Mr. Gordon, which is in the Borough, a few houses from the Town Hall, and Law my return. Mr. Baker & I, a Scotch and very pleasant lady, Miss N. N. who lives in the house since a few days & Mr. Hopes went together to see the Bank, which was very interesting. It is a pity, I do not recollect all, we saw, however what I remember, I will note down. The paper, on which the Bank notes are printed, is not made in the Bank, but comes from the country with the watermark in it. 3 presses, moved by a steam engine are every day at work, and each prints on an average from 4000 to 5000 Notes daily, say only 4000 and taking the lowest value of a Note, 5 £, makes every day an amount of 1600000 £, by means of an extremely ingenious piece of machinery, every time the press moves and prints a Note, an Index shows the Number of Notes the quantity printed, so that it is impossible, to print a Note and then to keep or to conceal it, because this Index is a check upon the quantity printed & to be delivered. In another room of the same, for each press two persons are occupied with printing upon the Notes the date and the Number of the Note, and when a hundred are so far printed, they are put up in a small box, which is a hole similar to that into which letters are thrown into a post office and in about a minute the box is returned that the holes with a hundred Notes without the date & number. This seemed to me most pretty & ingenious. The Ink with which the Notes are printed or made of what they call Frankfurt Black & Linseed Oil, and this Black is a kind of Coal made of the Refuse of Grapes. We were shown into a vault, where part, they said, about one eighth, of the treasure & part of the Bank is kept; there were piles of ingots of gold, weight each 16 a value 800 £, & of ingots of silver 80 a. value 320 £

& of small bags with Gold Ducats 10 guilders pieces and of bigger bags with Spanish & other dollars – In the bullion office they were busy emptying boxes with bags of dollars, just as they come from the West Coast, marked PHIL., Ps Fifth Luna – Then again in one room a young man was occupied with weighing the Sovereigns, which Bankers pay in – a small machine is used most ingeniously contrived, a pile of sovereigns is put upon the same, they fall then a hole, which has two openings, the heavy ones fall out on the one, the lighter ones on the other side. Those which are too light are cut thro' and then put out of circulation; about 4 pence is the loss upon each of these light ones. – Another Room, where 2 or three gentlemen were writing is all surrounded by iron safes, in which English coined gold & silver and Bank notes are kept. Two of these safes were opened to us, and to small parcels, each containing 200 Notes of 1000 £ each, together a value of 200000 £ were placed into our hands – In another apartment some gentlemen are occupied the whole day with signing Bank Notes upon the Notes, – other apartments are destined for the banking business in the same manner as private Bankers do – again in another the warrants are given out by possessing which the holder are enabled to receive their dividend upon the English funds, which payments are made in an adjoining room. – All Notes as soon as they are paid into the Bank, even if they have been emitted only 5 minutes ago, are never asked for the second time, they are immediately cancelled, and then cancelled, they are kept for ~~eleven~~ 11 years, after which those cancelled in one year are burnt in a furnace, which takes 3 days. –

to Mr. Alexander, and at 5 o'Cl. drove out to Wimpole Hall: Marian had invited Bernard & his lady, they however did not come, she being unwell & her not being allowed to leave the Children till late. — Fine hand for a man of nearly 10! — I then dined alone with Mrs. Caroline & Albert, Luke, it seems, had escaped from his office. — It is really astonishing, how quickly the minutes Mrs Erdeswick's company, she has always something to say. — dinner was very nice. — For Jam & sauce the ladies withdrew before Albert & me, — in however soon followed them. — up Mrs. Erdeswick showed me some prettily engravings of Italian cathedrals, which was just a pretence for having something to look at, — we had tea. Mrs G. reproved Albert very justly for lounging on his chair with his elbow embedded — he must do better — some wine & hot water was brought up & at 11 we all withdrew to our respective bedrooms. — I read a little of Byron's Corsair, but did not admire it much. — At dinner Caroline said grace, being told by her mother to do so, as the Erdeswell's family it is always done. —

Friday 26 Sept. — In my opinion they get up too late. — It was nearly 9, when I was called to breakfast. Mrs G. was there as the usual, Caroline came in a few minutes later, she runs up to her mother, kisses her forehead, shakes hand with me, & then sits down. Albert greets his mother: we have tea, coffee, cold meat, cold pie, toasted bread, bread & butter. — I left with Albert immediately after breakfast. It was a most beautiful morning. I was in my lodgings at little past 10 & set to work. In Schmitter I made up the colours for Spanish scenery with, which together with other Samples, I sent over to his house in Hamburg, in the middle of this my occupation, a servant came in to tell me, that the two Misses Bunsing were waiting for me below, I ran down, they asked me to take tea with them & to call in the Evening, which I accepted. They told me, they had come in the expectation not to find me at home; - may be it may not be. - I confess, I thought this call of theirs rather strange, however they are nice, good, amiable, talkative, laughing girls. - When they were gone I continued writing, also at 2 in Evening, dines at the Exchange dining room, a plate of roast. Cost. 1/6 Tobacco, bread, ½ pint of porter & radishes 1/7½ certainly not too expensive, then went to Gibb & Hume, where I met Mr. Warin just returned from Edinburgh, who told me that Mr. Gibb will be in town on monday & will return with me. I then walked to Mr. Wilkinson's, who with Mr. Dalton came back from Muck End the day before yesterday, I took tea & staid till nearly 8. Spencer is a pretty girl, but rather wishes to be too clever. - At Downing they were already taking their tea, however I got two cups of some very nice cream with butter. At Downing was obliged to leave, - there was however his eldest daughter, a woman of 35, I should say, her name is Elizabeth, then the two youngest ones, Georgiana and Emily, both most fine girls, Georgiana, the youngest rather slender, fairer & more lovelier. - Emily, thinner, darker, but more to my fancy & I should say I like her better. Young Mr. Warin, who speaks English very fairly & much Dutch, very young & shy, both in Co's House, board there. - We played at Whist for love. Emily was my partner the whole evening. - We talked & laughed continually & amused myself very well. - I am really surprised at myself how at ease I am. I can talk nonsense a whole evening as I did today. - without boasting, I am quite certain that the girls like me very well. - At Downing came in at nine o'clock, he found me a glass of wine & some biscuits & past 11 I was home.

Saturday 27 Sept. A disagreable wet day. Till 12 h outside my window at 6 o'clock. I called in the morning upon Ferdinando, & Balcombe, whom I did not find at home (he has left Gibbes & has joined his son, who is partner of Melendez & Fontainada) & all the Gentlemen's. I have now been residing till 12 o'clock, upon which I made various attacks out of my bark, in order not to be under the necessity of taking them back me to Liverpool: then the whole morning passed by quickly, and I had nearly time to dress so that I was quite ready, when Ferdinand Quintilio came and escorted him. We walked to Mr Williams's, in the small room up stairs the party was assembled, consisting of Miss Dubins, Mr & Mrs Frances, to whom I presented one of the Cameos brought in Rome & viz an Allonia, Miss Maria Williams, Robert Cresswell, a Miss Bolus, a nice good looking young Lady, a friend of Frances, a young Mr Hawkins, Edward Dubins, the eldest of the three sons, Quintilio & myself. Dinner was laid below, I had between Mr Williams on my left hand and Maria Cresswell on my right. Dinner was plain but very good, some Neapolitan Lady, with all of them I was on excellent terms, Maria Cresswell calls me frequently, Henry & Robert, Young Wells. – I myself was in good spirits. – after dinner we went up stairs to take coffee, – in the mean while dinner was cleared away, – we descended again, had tea, Miss Bolus played & sang, – then of course we were silent, but otherwise conversation, or rather chattering, did not stop for a moment the time passed away very quickly & agreeably, – and it was near 11, when Quintilio & I left, both well amused. – It was Sunday 28 Sept. After breakfast I packed up a Trunk, which I intend to put on board, and then went to the Protestant Hospital. Chapel, which is small, but which pleased me. – Opposite the gallery on one end of the Chapel the Children sit on both sides which depends as I afterwards found at Dublin, certainly few people were that ever took place. - there also be referred to a number of miracles, performed by angels - it was probably a very orthodox sermon, but much altogether against my grain. - At 5 o'Cl. it was over. Miss Crofield & I then drove into an omnibus to Dublin Mr. Thom's, where a small party assembled. We were the following: viz. Mr Dubois, a most pleasant man, he is full of fun & witty ideas & with his hooked nose and his head covered with curls which curly hair, he looks handsome. - Mrs Dubois, a nice woman - their daughters Emma I suppose about 26 or 27 years of age, not really good looking, but extremely pleasant to converse with, certainly not shy or bashful - the three sons, Edward, Douglas & Theodore, all three in the law. Edward, the eldest, is a pleasant, well instructed young man, also the other others are agreeable & very friendly towards me - two young Misses Brooke, Isabel & Maria, and a Miss Lowell, a particularly good friend of Emma's, rather good looking & no more than about 18 years of age - Already upstairs I conversed with Miss Emma, at dinner I sat between her & my left & old Mr Dubois to my right. - certainly I could have been impossible to have a more agreeable seat, and the whole time till the ladies rose past 8 o'Cl. I kindly carried talking. I promised Miss Emma some sweet potatoes; occasionally I conversed with Mr Dubois, but most mostly more with his daughter. - I noted here, that, when our table cloth was removed, another remained on the table & there were no finger glasses - Mr Dubois, Robert, Edward Dubois & I remained by our wine good half an hour, when the steward - a maid servant - told us that tea was ready, upstairs we had coffee & tea; - then we sang & also played the piano, Miss Emma sang very prettily Italian, German, English the Harmony, which is on the West Coasts, and to Delamotte, reply? to his L^r, received yesterday, he wishes to terminate my partnership, whilst I will only consider him as my agent, on the same light as we had made our arrangements, when he was here; he had agreed to it, & I therefore think it rather strange, that his ladies and mine. Of course I am determined, not to form a partnership with him. I then went to dinner to the Saddlers, thence to Gibbs Crescent and to Bowring, where I drank tea with the Father & the two daughters. It was now a fine evening, in our omnibus, we drove to the Surrey Zoological Gardens, but we came just too late, the fireworks were over we were watched in Vauxhall Gardens, but they were also closed close by, like a M^r & M^rs Kempton, closely peopled, square of the Bowrings, upon them we called, & then drove back again. We were sure at the Bowring's house, at 11 Victoria Terrace Islington at about 11, they gave me a glass of wine & biscuits, Emily played, Georgiana sang a little, the elder sister came home, we conversed and with not having enjoyed myself particularly well. I went home just 11. The girls are good natured, laughing, chattering, rather unpolished young creatures.

Wednesday 8. Oct. Poor Fellow boarder, W. Miller, left early for Southampton, thence to the E. Indies. Of the two candidates for the Lord Mayoralty, Wood has been rejected by the court of aldermen, on account of some not quite upright conduct of his several years ago. Johnson has been elected, his father was a common (Irish) paviour, he himself is a "paviar" on grand, who makes contracts for the pavement of streets & even of entire parishes — The whole morning I was very busy arranging and packing up my things. I only went out for a short time to get some money at Gibbs, to take an early dinner & to pay my Taylor's Bill. I had still some time to spare, and so I amused myself with reading the Family Herald till 7 h. 40 m. Cl., when I took a cab and drove to Lime St., Mr W. Gibbs came with me, we stopt [illegible] for a second at his house in Hyde park street and were only just in time for the Train which started at 8 o. Cl. for Bristol upon the Great Western Rail. way. Of course we went in the 1st Class Carriages; the seats are separated from each other, so as to make each passenger sit in a kind of armchair, but otherwise, as to the stuffing [of the seats] and the cushions of the Seat, they are inferior to the Adria Rail 2d Class. They are divided length way, so as to form 2 small apartments close to each other each for 4 passengers. As long as it was daylight, I admired the pretty country to our left or on the South Side of the road, of course I saw the Romantic asylum, the castle of Windsor, the fine Hotel at Slough, the galvanic-electric apparatus along side the road, all things to which my attention was also called when I arrived in England, two years ago. Mr Gibbs & I conversed on many subjects, when it got dark. I dozed occasionally, at Swindon which I recollected perfectly well from 1843, we stopt 10 minutes, we took a cup of tea each, and 3 thin slices bread & butter jointly, for which Mr Gibbs paid no less than 18 sh. The distance from London to Bristol is 118 railway 117 miles, we arrived at 9 h 25 taking thus 1 hour 35 minute, which motion including stoppages, of which there were a great many, each Mile in somewhat less than 2 1/2 Minutes. On our arrival at the Bristol terminus, Mr Gibbs carriage had not yet arrived - we waited till near 10 o'clock and as the Carriage did not come, he took a fly (a cab with one horse) and went to the dark [illegible] arrived at Mr Gibbs's country seat, Tyntesfield, at about 11. Mrs Gibbs and an elderly Lady were still up. I received I was introduced, but not much notice was taken of me. Mrs G., rather undressed, sleepy & yawning, conversed much with her husband - afterwards, two male servants came in. they knelt down, so did the two ladies, hiding their faces upon chairs standing before them. — I remained standing. Mr Gibbs also knelt down and Sister Fanning prayed, after which all arose. Mr. Gibbs shook me by my Hand, which, in short ceremonies, is observed all throughout the Dominions. Thence the Gentlemen & Ladies rode over the meadows and road, belonging to Tyntesfield, to a rising ground which extended as far as the eye reached.

Thursday 2 Oct. I rose in good time and before 8 o'Clock I was below in the breakfast room, below my room, on the plains at the foot of the hills the Bristol Railway passes, and various times in the course of the day I saw the smoke & heard the whistle of the locomotives. — The first who appeared, was the elderly lady Mrs Bromwich a little girl, called Fanny Davy. She is the widow of a former partner of Gibbs in Cadiz, lives in Devonshire. — Mrs Bromwich lives in Somersetshire — and this little girl with her, with whom she is on a visit at Tyntesfield, is the daughter of her niece, married to a cousin of Davy's in Valparaiso. — and on the other hand was Mrs Grandfellow, whose maiden name was Leigh, is a cousin of hers. — Mrs Grandfellow is now in Jersey, & has with her both her daughters Louisa & Fanny & little John, whom, instead of placing him at once in a boarding school, she is carrying about with her every where she goes. — Afterwards Mr Gibbs, a young female, a kind of governess or children's maid, who however sat down with us to breakfast, and the two elder Children, a little girl (Blanche, called Dolly, rather a nice little creature) and Antony, who does not please me so much, came in. — After them four female servants, they all knelt down, in the same way as last night, & also at 2 o'Clock at Samuel Bright's near Lyons, two years ago. and Mr Gibbs, like on the former occasion, read morning prayers, which being finished, Mrs Gibbs came in, it seems, that she is shortly expecting her confinement. — Mrs and Mr Bright inquired with hired horses, but as Mr Gibbs said, his niece would be knocked up on the hilly country. it is very pretty, but as the day was so very dark, the sky so cloudy, and as it rained occasionally, I could not enjoy the fine views, which on a clear day I should certainly have done. All 3 Mr Gibbs called at three different places, country seats of their neighbours at considerable distances, they were only admitted in one house, at the two others they left their cards. I remained in the carriage, & passed the time reading a book, which Mrs G. had left in the carriage. it treated on religious matters, and I am really astonished to find the library in the house so very small. it consists only of a few and almost all religious books. We came back at Five o'Clock, when we dined, every soup, roasted mutton, a roasted goose, potatoes, cabbage, partridges, two kinds of tarts, scalded cream, cheese, Madeira, Sherry & port, every thing was excellent. a servant maid of, and a boy in livery waited at dinner. The children sat down with us, but did not eat. the grown gal, two grown, Alice, is a nice little girl. Mr Gibbs & I remained a short time at her visit, when we entered the drawing room, Mrs G. was asleep on the sopha. Mrs G & I sat down near the fire & after conversing a little, also fell asleep, at 9 we took tea. — Mrs G. gives me no more acquaintance, and to day when dressed she looked well, she is pale, but has fine teeth, beautiful eyes & eye brows, her eyes are grey blue. — But what I have admired at the house is little of what is going on in the world. they know nothing of Bonaparte, Gerstner, and not even of the wandering Jew being expelled by Spain. Such a life as they lead appears to me too contracted, too quiet — Of course I was late to be last prayers and after having gone up stairs, I have written the preceding in my room till 11. — I in my room with window shut 13½ R. 63 F. I am afraid to say yesterday, that we called before leaving London upon old Mr Robertson, who received me in the most friendly manner.

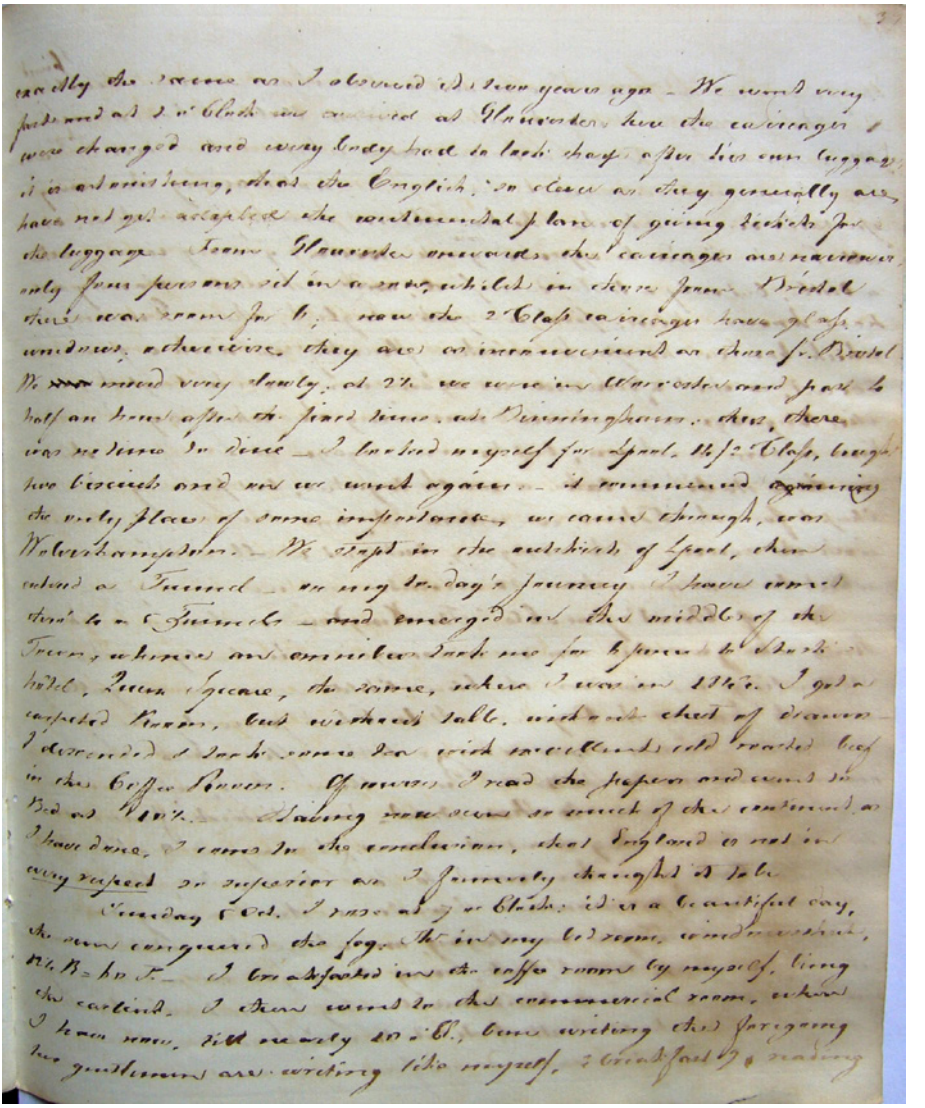
Mrs Joseph Gibbs, dinner was excellent, but hardly any wines was taken – her servants attended, fine cider was handed round – and the conversation was dull, and in what was spoken, I could hardly take any share, – with my neighbour to the left, who yesterday was so very amiable & talkative, I did not speak a word, with her to the right I a little, but not much, was. I cannot say, I admire the ladies. – I'd be difficult to decide
I cannot say, whether their taciturnity arises from pride or immorality & illness, when they were gone, the two Physicians Gibbs and I remained at our wine, I prefer them to the ladies and Mr Wm. Gibbs, very deaf, is a pleasant man, who endeavoured to make myself at home & who frequently addressed me. – After dinner, when we took tea & coffee, the stories and gentleness continued. – I doubt not, they are excellent people, but why do ladies do not endeavour to make themselves a little more agreeable to a stranger like myself. – I was not sorry, when we left at 10 ½ for home. Mrs Wm Gibbs pregnancy, it seems, inconveniences her much. To-morrow Mr. Wm. Gibbs & his sister, Mrs Jo Gibbs, go to Exeter & thence to Dartmouth for a few days – I dined to-morrow for 4pst: it's now 11 h. I was about going to bed. Of course we had evening prayers, when all Servants attended as well as in the morn. – Tyrwhitt talk with Mr Gibbs, accord to what he told me, about moving he is very desirous of withdrawing gradually from business. Henry, the eldest of his nephews, 24 years old, just married, is on the continent on account of his health: his father, George Henry, who died at Venice, entailed an estate upon him. – I should also say, that all three Gibbs, I mean the male & female heir each other, when they meet. Mr Wm Gibbs sister is a old Mrs Brandram.



Saturday 4 Oct. I rose at the usual time and at 8. Wm was below in the breakfast room. We had prayer, then breakfast. I chatted with the Morning Post. Earl Spencer, formerly Lord Althorp, the great Whig minister in the Session of Earl

Guy and the Reform Bill is dead. the weather was a little better than the previous day, at least the sky was partly clear. at 9½ o' Clock a gig came from Belmont and a quarter of an hour later I left. not sorry, for the words of unintelligibness of Mr Gibbs weighed upon me like a night mare and prevented my evening my usual spirits & liveliness in fact here they would be. Our guides out of season. The way from Tyntesfield to Bristol is very partly. it leads thro' a hilly, partly woody, partly cultivated country, with gentlemen's & noblemans seats here & there. on approaching Bristol, Cliffons appear to the left, it is partly wooded and the top of a high hill and a row of white houses upon the same looks very well. the road just before the town of Bristol, to the left we leave a Canal, then a dry dock and passing over a bridge we stop at the Railroad Terminus. I arrived in very good time, a little past 10½ o' Clock. the Trains for Birmingham did not start before 11½ Cl. I was a long while undetermined, by what Conveyance, 1st or 2d Class I should go. for my own sake I should have preferred the former, but I thought that I was not acting right. Onward Christian Pilgrim if merely in order to have a more convenient seat, I were to spend so much more money. the 2 Class fare from Bristol to Birmingham is 17/6. the Carriages are like those on the Great Western but then the 2 Class are made of nothing but wood without any stuffing whatever, neither on the seats nor on the backs, & inside have they windows, but the sides are open. The Company in these 2 Class Carriages is very much mixed, is changed continually, and I did not like any native whatever of any of my fellow Travellers. The country has the usual english Character, fine lawns, wood here & there, farm houses, villages, corn fields, which were now being reaped exactly the same as I observed it two years ago – We went very fast and at 2 o'Clock we arrived at Gloucester here the carriages were changed and every body had to look sharp after his own luggage it is astonishing, what the English, so clever as they generally are, have not yet accepted the continental plan of giving tickets for the luggage – From Gloucester onwards the carriages are narrower only four persons sit in a carriage whilst in those from Bristol there was room for 6; now the 2d Class carriages have glass windows, otherwise they are as inconvenient as those fr. Bristol We moved very slowly, at 2 h. we were in Worcester and past 3 half an hour after the first time at Birmingham – there, there was no time to dine – I looked myself for Lunch, the 2d Class, bought two biscuits and was we went again – it commenced agreeing the very place of some importance, we came through, was Wolverhampton – We stopt in the outskirts of Lunch, then entered a Tunnel – on my 1st day's journey I have never had to a Tunnels – and emerged at the middle of the Town, whereas one arrives back me for 4 years to Clarks Hotel, Queen Square, the same, where I was in 1846. I got a carpeted Room, but without table, without chest of drawers I descended & took some tea with excellent cold roasted beef in the Coffee Room. Of course I read the papers and went to Bed as Usual. Taking now a review of the continent as I have done, I come to the conclusion, that England is not in every respect so superior as I formerly thought it to be.

Sunday 5 Oct. I rose at 7 o'Clock; it is a beautiful day, the sun conquered the fog. Ate in my bedroom, wonderful, Mr. B– to T– I breakfasted in the coffee room by myself, living the cardinal. I then went to the commercial room, where I have now, till nearly 10 o'Cl, been writing this foregoing two gentlemen are writing like myself, & I finished by reading who did not think it beneath her dignity to enter into a conversation like some of the ladies, whom I have just left at Tyndesfield and Belmont. Just followed her soon mum; he was also guided friendly, but allowed his attention to be taken up rather too much by the gambols & tricks of his son, a fine boy, rather on the way of getting spoiled, called Charles John, about 4 years old, - the two elder children as well as the youngest boys, are girls, the former I saw, but I cannot say, that I admired them: they have both a queer rather disagreeable look; some what like their father, when he thinks comically or gets angry. However, all together, the ones with the other, how very much I prefer the good humoured & lively, which prevail here, to the gentlemanly & stiff manners in Mr Tibbits house. They invited me to dine with them on Wednesday and at about 3 o'Cl. I left, it was really a lovely day of which I availed myself to take a long walk out of town, I came to Sage hill, where the Railroad enters the Tunnel. I there left the high road my way, and keeping to the right, I came to the water's edge. To the Docks, to the Custom house & reached my hotel past 5 h. - Here I had an excellent dinner: fried soles potatoes a good beefsteak, potatoes, French beans, an apfel dumpling with custard, half a pint of ale & half a pint of port, which latter I divided with Fredrich, who came in and with whom I conversed till 10 o'Clock, - in the room and the only one in the coffee room, - both we sat in one of the stalls, separated from the others, I did not trouble me about them. - At 10 o'Cl. I went to bed, rather too early.

Monday 6 Oct. Again a beautiful day, outside my window the thermom. was at 8 a'Cl. 7h 8° by F. I have just been taking my breakfast in the coffee room and been writing the preceding. Several Gentlemen, amongst whom two, whom I suppose by their language to be Yorks, are employed in a similar occupation. - I heard afterwards from Mr Bright, that in the country the Dr had been down to 22 F.

M.r Birch Dudrick called and accompanied me to G. B. H.'s C.hrew, North John Street, just when I ended my Letter. M.r Bright came down; he was very friendly, asked me immediately into him, & has actually arranged a Lodgings for me in his house on the evening in West Derby. Up stairs in the mourningchamber I saw M.rs Stephen Smith, the partners wife received me friendly, but not in such a warmhearted manner as M.rs Bright. I saw also her brother, Linlead, as well as Peter, who and Monday, the Clerk who manages most the L. K business, gave me every information I required regarding the Lima market, which I thought very low. The U. S. mail has just arrived, and to day on 6 Oct. they have Letters from Lima of 5 August, they came were so hard yesterday or exactly in two months, which I think is the shortest time, Letters have ever reached from Lima. GBH have sold the two Cases of Martin Schiffe wind print to Lorden, which I purchased from Mayer of St Gall, which this latter thought would be worth 84 m, but 84 m B.o; then I shall gain upon them almost 4 or 5 %, a pretty result, to be sure. I immediately wrote Mayer a long Letter, giving them an account of my journey, & ordering 2 C. with 1000 dozen Shifts if he can get them at 2¾ instead of at 3 fr. as agreed. he charged the last. What with getting information, writing, answering Letters, finishing my Cash to Day Book walking about with Peter, dressing &c. the morning passed away rapidly. At 6 o Cl. M.r Bright, his nephew, son of Bright of Bristol, Peter & I rode in an Omnibus to M.r Bright's house some dwelling in West Derby, the first we rather had changed into rain. — M.rs Bright, her maidservant & Jane was friendly, I thought her this time much more agreeable than two years back. — past 8 we went to dinner. I as Stranger, had of course to give my arm to M.rs Bright. some of the Children sat down with us, they all came in, when the fruit was placed on the table, there were 7 of them and one besides a little Miss Jones. the two eldest are girls of about 14 & 12 years of age. Considering, tho' not very lively, I was between much more agreable than at Mr Williams and the children's spirits were not so dreadfully kept down as there. After dinner, Lola made her appearance in a rich fancy dress, dressed as an Andalusian "Maja", with short breeches, silk stockings, shoes adorned with plenty of bell buttons, a very splendid silk waistcoat, sash &c, he certainly looked very well but to me there seemed to be more vanity in his dressing himself up in such a manner, he brought the guitar with him and sang very prettily till almost 10, whilst Mr Bright perused the L.A. dispatches, & we others listened to Lola, the girls particularly could not find in bed. - Mrs B. retired at 10, we others at 11 -

Tuesday 7 Oct. I had an unpleasant dream, which in a strange house with clean bed clothes is very disagreeable - It was a very wet morning. I was down before 7 & Mr B., his nephew & I breakfasted together; a little past 8 we drove in an Omnibus to Bath, we alighted at the Railway station & took immediately our seats in the 1st Class Carriages; Mr W. J. Myers, whose appearance I like, he has a good reasoned head about him, and a gentleman who opened a number of letters, directed to Mr Edwards & sat in the same carriage with us. We reached Manchester, 23 miles distant, in little more than an hour, such a car, - or the cabs are called here - Mr B. & his nephew left me. I went to Mr Robert Yates, with whom - excepting one sitting a plain hasty dinner & tea in a Room, which, tho' one devoted indeed to books otherwise very decent - I was busy till 4 h. & 1/2 making purchases, the particulars of which I will not state here, as they appear in my mercantile trade. they amount to between 800 & 900 £.

I was guide accompanied to tea from Mr Yates, that the two young Robertsons, sons of our parish, who at that time were with Gibbes, – were a short time in Manchester before they went out to America, behaved there in the most improper dissolute manner. – that he, Yates, then paid for the two about 70 £ which up to this day old Robertson has not returned to him. – that he, Robertson, owes also Yates & Co in Liverpool. – It was a most disagreeable rainy day, the streets were dirty, the sky cloudy, and altogether Manchester was for once making a pleasant impression upon me. – At 4 o'cl. I went to the Railway station. the Train started at 5, we were in Lpool at 6½. I went to my hotel, where I have tea, read the Times & wrote until now 9½. – In Algiers there seems to have been a pretty general rising against the French, – and in Circassia the Russians can make no progress satisfactory against the mountaineers. – Before going to bed I read a little in Arnold's Islands Sermons.

Wednesday 8 Oct. The weather was somewhat better than yesterday. After my usual breakfast in the coffee room I went to Mr Dwight & Cunninghame's, where I wrote letters to Mr Saunders, Alexander, Robert Yates and Co & Co, Lima, which being done, I went out, I called upon Hellmann, whom I had just spoken a word to in Manchester, who alighting from the train, but returned to his parents did not find at home – there upon Tang, with whom I remained a long time – who was very polite. – He looks very well & healthy and is as fond of giving himself a somewhat important air as ever, amongst other things he told me of the stoppage of Waldenmeyer & Co's House, Alex & Co and Dickson Robert & such as the principal Creditors, the former for 20000 £ the latter for upwards £ according to the statements given in by Valdez & Villamil & the sums surpass the Debts by far, and then the Creditors, convinced of Mr's honorable conduct, have given them Esperas". Young also told me, that in June 1842 Finlich of La Paz had not yet paid for a purchase, due in October 1841. Dined Young's I went to Towers, who was also very friendly with him I took a long walk in the Cockrings, the Duchess &c in search of Lady whom however we did not find. (whom I had known in Bow during the first years of my residence there) Then again to Mad Peter Yates.

Lord Yates with his Freundness marred and shewing to be, he is as disagreable as Atherton, in whose Country house Towers also & reciter's read newspapers — I walked about the streets, looked in at G. D. H's, read in the coffee rooms Orland Furnivall & Cowan at 8 o' Clock at Jack's, there were two young men, both Clerks in counting houses, and a Dutch Portuguese lady, dressed like Mr Jack in deep mourning, she seemed to me to be a near relation of hers. — Of course I had to take Mrs Jack down stairs in the dining room. — she is very tall & rather young and handsome, but upon the whole I did not admire her so much as I did two years ago. — I thought, she was not quite so polite & attentive towards me, as she then used to me, perhaps also the fault may also lie with me. — and in my conversation respecting the present religious squabbles in Germany, regarding Ronge &c J. Eugene Sue's or Baldwin Brent Maltravers I may perhaps shock their views, by expressing myself in too free a manner, tho' I always endeavour not to say a word, which could grate upon their delicate ears — Jack himself, whom we talked about was very kind, when the ladies were present he entertained them for a long time about persons of high rank, of whom I of course could not know any thing. I

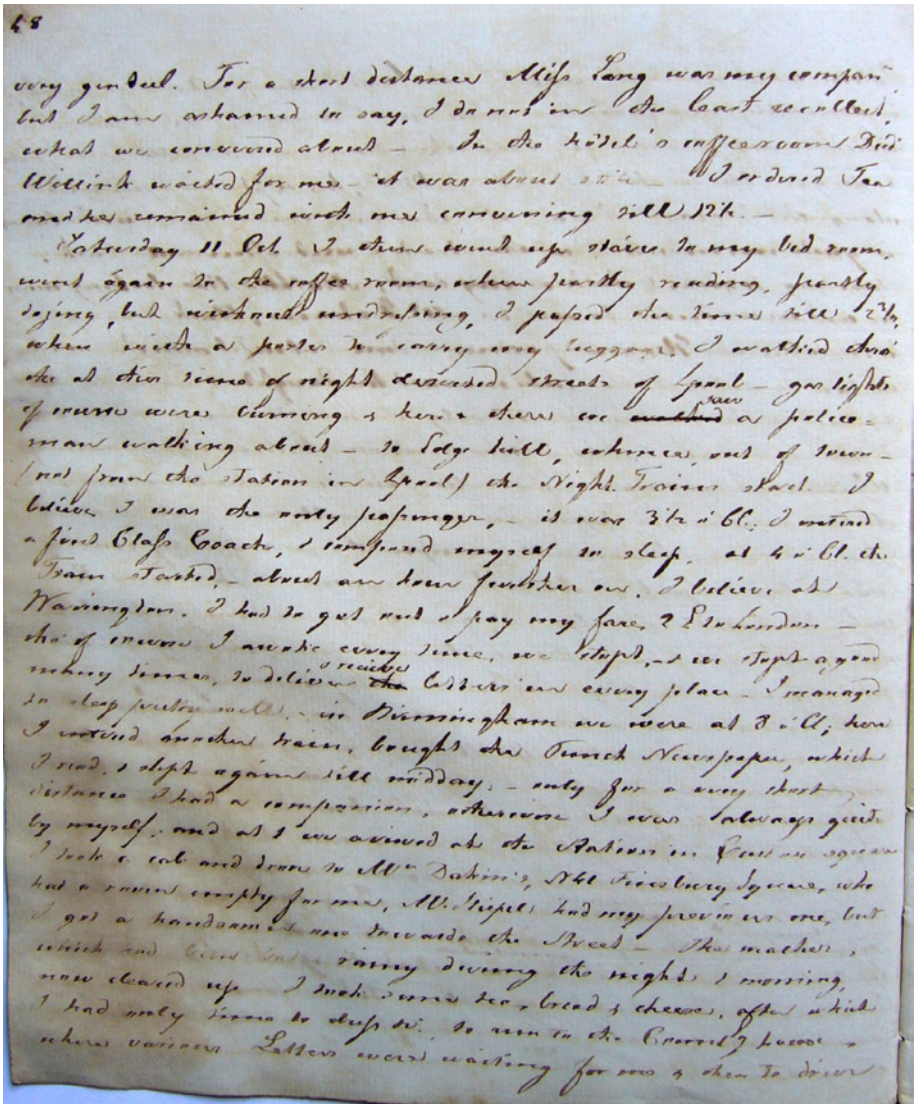
Wright inclined inviting the gentlemen. I had to give them my advice, where best to go in, then the two eldest girls, about 12 & 14 years of age played the pianos, they are not finished but agreeable & quite unaffected. At 8 have a very bad cold since some days having to the cursed air, to which one is so much exposed, when travelling on rail roads, they made me take some hot lemonade in bed, which I thought very kind.



Friday 10 Oct. After breakfast I had to give Mr Wrights some accounts regards my travels in Texas, to which the girls listened with much attention, and even when Mr W. absented himself for a few minutes, they & I examined together the map of Texas. — Mrs W. & Miss to town to Commissioner, on my arrival I received a letter from Mr Alexander and I determined upon giving him a small order for finished cotton packet handkerchiefs. At 10 Mr Wright, his nephew & I walked to the Colony Bank, where Mr W., some of his children, & a sister of his, Mrs Oliver, a Mrs Heywood, wife to the Banker, had just arrived & jointly we drank all round the Steamer, the Great Western, which as well as the Great Britain comes originally to G.B.S. the captain, Matthews, of course showed us very strong, & in the Ladies' saloon Champaign & Sabies. Her hundred & forty & odd passengers can find accommodations on board of the Great Western & this time all the berths were taken; there is no difference all is one class & the passage money to New York is 30 Guineas & 1 Guinea steward's fees, during the passage, which lasts on an average 15 days, about 450 Tons of coals are consumed. The Great Britain has accomodation for 300 passengers, but as she has only just commenced playing between New York & Liverpool. Whether the Great—

Woman, which has only to mark, — the Great Britain, all of Iron, has b, is decidedly the favorite. — Here our Cabin, which is not the case on board the Steamers to the U.S. — I now take good by to Mr Wright — W.B., his nephew & I returned along the Docks — I was told, that the timber trade with Canada is quite immense — in the street I met afterwards Jack, standing together with a very dark, Mulatto like looking man, he was introduced to me as Mr Graham, black Graham as he is called in Glasgow, father, I believe about 6 months father, in law to John Rowe, who married his daughter, and who, as Jack told me, is for the present not likely to return to Texas — At 1/2 p. 6. I was in Samuel Lang's counting house, Commercial Buildings, Wall Street and with him I drove out to his dwelling house, Allerton, where he lives in a rather small house, but otherwise pretty & with a handsome views upon the surrounding country. this is from Liverpool in a Northern direction — There were his wife, I should say, about 36 years of age, nothing particularly disagreeable, but not very pleasant either, nor very genteel. in her features a large nose is the most prominent part — his sister, an unmarried lady of a certain age, thin and more plain than otherwise, a Mr Middleton, a young man, whom I did not like, partner of Blundell, also resides in Liverpool and his wife, the most agreeable of the whole bunch. We had a nice English dinner, our viands, fowl and meat, but singing & playing the piano, but nothing was so ergreifend as to make a favorable impression upon me — Lang continues to be his own trumpeter, the very reverse, which he made use of in speaking of Volunteers, Switch. He said, that he speaks Spanish like a Spaniard, & that he even been taken for one, when he was on the West Coast — We left at Salmon 10 o'Clock. Mr Lang paying the Cab fare as they say in Liverpool, which was certainly very genial. For a short distance Miss Long was my companbut I am ashamed to say, I do not in the least recollect what we conversed about — In the Hotel's coffee room Dil-Wilkins waited for me — it was about 9 o'clock — We ordered Tea and he remained with me conversing till 12 o'c. —

Saturday 11 Oct. I then went up stairs in my bed room, went again in the coffee room, where partly reading, partly dozing, but without undressing, I passed the time till 2 o'c. when I rang a porter to carry my luggage. I watched thro' the whole time of night deserted streets of Lond — gas lights of course were burning & here & there on the new a policeman walking about — to Edge hill, wherever out of town — not from the Station in Lond) the Night Trains start. I believe I was the only passenger, — it was 3 o'c. o'clock I entered a first Class Coach, & composed myself to sleep, at 4 o'clock the Train started, — about an hour further on, I believe at Warrington, I had to get out & pay my fare, & Luggage — this of course I awoke every time, we stopped, — I re-stopped again many times, to deliver the Letters in every place — I managed to sleep pretty well, — in Birmingham we were at 8 o'Cl; here I entered another train, bought the French Newspaper, which I read, & slept again till midday, — only for a very short distance I had a companion, otherwise I was always quite by myself; and as I was arrived at the Station in Lond on square I took a cab and drove to Mr Bahin's, 241 Piccadilly Square, who had a room empty for me, Mr Triffitt had my present to me, but I got a handsomer one two doors the Street — The weather, which had been bad during the night & morning, now cleared up — I took some tea & bread & cheese, after which I had only time to dress me, to run to the Country House — where various Letters were waiting for me & then to drive and in an omnibus to Mrs Bramstoff's, Turnham Hill, it was Tuesday. a small party was assembled, at dinner we sat as follows: Mrs Bramstoff, to her left a Miss Monkhouse, an old unmarried lady related to the de la Fosse, Mrs de la Fosse, Mr Bernard Charlton a young Mr Evans — Caroline Fr — at the bottom of the table Alfred, — round the corner, Ellen — another Miss Monkhouse — Mrs de la Fosse & I — Mrs Bramstoff is always extremely amiable & pleasant towards every body present — she has two daughters & Mrs Bernard Charlton handsome, tho' very dark, look like ladies. — the others, I think, do not — I of course endeavoured to make myself as agreeable as possible to Mrs de la Fosse, whom however I do not admire. Mrs de la F is a much more fashionable woman, & brought out Marian's health. Dinner was very nice, — Bernard came in afterwards — & as we were so remained but a short time, — after tea I sat down by Ellen, who was working, & conversed with her, — after which I paid the usual attention to Mrs Charlton. — At eleven the party, which had been rather a pleasant one, broke up. — of course the Miss Bramstoffs, as well as Mrs de la Fosse, sang & played charmingly — My cold continuing very bad, Mrs Bramstoff was so kind as to order me some hot lemonade, when we had

Sunday 12 Oct. We breakfasted very late at nearly 10 o'Cl. it was a most lovely day. I read the Athenaeum & Life at 11. as Camberwell Green I found an omnibus. — At home I had merely time to dress, and then I hastened to Mrs Williams, they had all gone to church, & Emma waited for me, took a little lunch & staid with them an hour & a half. I then in Grandchurches Head, returned & rode in an Omnibus to Turnham Hill, a village, which is on the right side of the Clapham & Croydon road about 5 miles distant from London & a little further than Tooting, & the country in the neighbourhood is very pretty. After the Coach had passed me down Turnham some time to find out M^r Charlton's dwelling, Park Cottage, Upper Tulse Hill: it is a pretty little place with a long ~~back~~ garden, and from the back rooms with an extraordinarily handsome view over lawns and a beautifully grouped trees: at the distance the Harrow Hill church steple is just distinguishable. How in the neighbourhood of London the country does not look quite so autumnal, as'd does about Liverpool: there the trees lose their leaves much sooner than here. We had a plain dinner, but a great deal of pleasant conversation: they are both nice people & really, think, that Bernard likes me: he pleases me very much: he has a comical & philosophical turn, & his wife appears to be very fond of each other: we managed to finish a bottle of port between us: we then took tea, & accompanied me in a lovely warm light night as far as Brixton, where I took an omnibus & returned to London. —

Monday 13 Oct. In Gibbs' Shares there were a number of Offices for me, as of I had really many [so many] applications: the greater part of the morning I was busy writing my Journal, in M^r Dalton's Drawing room. I heard some body speak Spanish: I went out to see who it was, & found old M^r Robertson with Jackson Alderidge, his son's partner, who is established in Paris, & whom he having just come over, M^r Robertson had taken to [~~took~~] to M^r Dalton's. To heard them: we had some talk together, and hardly were they gone, when young Oswald Stirling came: he had just arrived from Hamburg: I obliged him to accompany to Spences M.W. Gibbs' office, who then Alexander has procured him an opportunity of learning for a few months the business in a large Glasgow warehouse. Compliments: he then made up his mind to leave at once in the evening for Lynn: he went to Bruning's. I accompanied him part of the way, as I went to dine at M^r Wilkinson's, who had arranged a nice little dinner. After dinner I started with Farmer to see Macready in the Prince's Theatre: the greater part of the way we went in an omnibus, & when

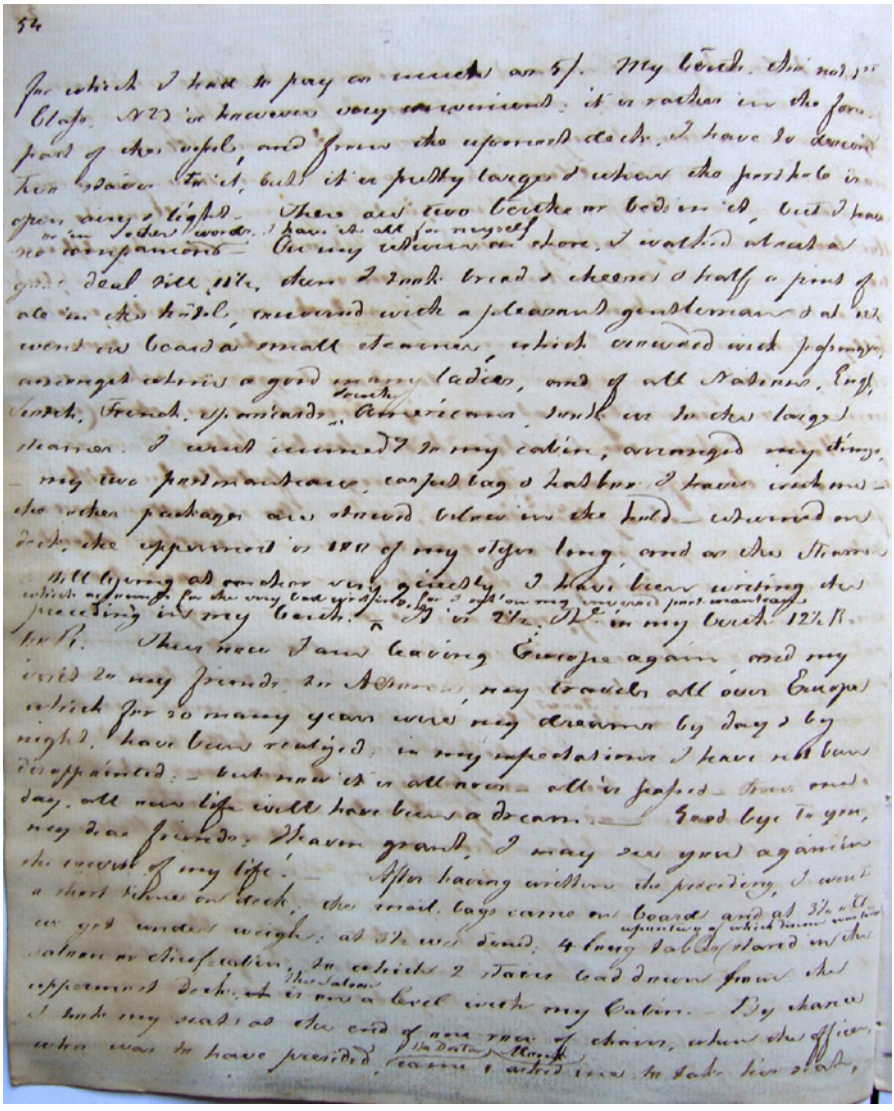
Wednesday 16 Oct. The fine weather continues — I left immediately after breakfast. Mrs Grant & her really kind & extraordinary kind towards me: her daughter Caroline has drawn or rather copied for me my sister's portrait in black: Maria is like. Betty not. I was busy writing several hours at Gibb's — my letter to D Schmitz was of some importance. At about 2 o'Cl. I drove out in an Omnibus to Mrs Siewking on Hampstead Hill, to bid her good bye: she was very agreable. I remained half an hour with her: on my return I dined, and again to Gibbes, who gave me a letter of introduction to Mynne of Panama' — in the morning I had taken 40 £, with part of which I bought 8 pastoral Concerts at 2 £ 4. b each — then ran to C. Siewking's C.r house, which was before ops. to D. Chandler 28 Oppidan Row 9, as especially he walked out with me & accompanied me until the door of M. Cresswell's, where I bade him good bye — the same I said to Robert & Maria (who were at their wine — I left them, that they might all have time to dress for a dancing party — & went to Mrs Williams's where I had to endeavour some time with Mr Dubois & to wait for my friend & Frances, who were also dressing for the same party. They looked both very well, Mrs W. quite in black. it is a pity that her teeth are gone, and as to Frances it is astonishing that she, a young woman of 28 has no beauty whatever; she is completely flat. We talked a little, when I went away, Mrs W. said "don't will not be angry, if you give Frances a kiss" she & I were equally ready to obey her mother's commands. I also kissed Mrs W upon her eye, she was a little sorrowful, when I left. I cannot say I was. I hurried to the Evenings, they were at tea, staid about half an hour & bade good bye. At home I was busy till about 1 with packing up —



Thursday 16 Oct — I was up at 7, had still some things to do when at breakfast Ferdinand Rothschild came, he drove with me as far as Gibbet at where we met engine. I joined a Miss Jones and Seymour of Sea friend, Bray, I then drove to the South Western Railroad Terminus at Nine Elms, where I arrived in good time, for to South-ampton 78 miles, 1st Class is 18/. I was, as 1st Class passenger, allowed to take 1 cwt luggage, but my 7 packages weighing 2½ Cwts, I had to pay 4/8 extra. right. There were two gentlemen with me in the same carriage, but not a word was spoken. The country on both sides is pretty, woody & hilly. At 10 minutes to 2 we arrived in Southampton, as soon as I alighted I took of course good care to get my luggage together & was immediately recommended by a steamer & others who offered their Cabs for Hotels. I chose the Railroad hotel, close by, where I am now writing in the coffee room. It seems very comfortable, but little frequented. I took a plain dinner, roasted leg of mutton, green potatoes, cheese & a pint of ale, read the Times & watched about till 8 o'clock; just before the hotel is a dock, fine quays, steamers are building or repairing, railways are crossing in every direction, and the large London railroad, with smaller rails for trucks, with &c. opposite on the other side of the water, I saw some land, which I (This is the Isle of Wight). In the East a river is running down, the other shore of which is beautifully hilly & woody. — Some streets in the town are pretty well, fine rows of houses, but the carriage road is not paved, only stone & gravel. — Since about 8 o'clock now I have been writing letters to M. Matthieson, Pr Reinecke, CH Bunsen, Leadley, also my diary. — After going to bed, I made the acquaintance of a German doctor, just arrived, who intended visiting the Isle of Wight. In bed I read in Chambers Tract, of which I have brought here in Southampton the first 6 volumes in 6/, the Life of Louis Philippe. — My bed room is very nice & comfortable.

Friday 19 Oct. I rose before 7, breakfast & took my luggage on board in a sailing boat on board the Steamer Friend, lying a good way out ance during the night, owing to my going to bed so early. Between each two cabins there stands a light, which serves for both and which at 10 p.m. past visited by the quartermaster. At 7 o'Clock a steward brushed me and offered tea or coffee, which I did not take, & arose at 8 o'Clock and dress as my cabin is, for the port hole is closed and light is only let in by a small thick glass, I managed to shave. I sleep pretty well, for hitherto the motion of the vessel is very little. I washed the deck and at 9 o'Clock breakfast bell was rung. About half of the number of those, who were yesterday at dinner, sat down. I near the Equadorians, opposite the Swedish gentleman, who seems not to be a Cornish, with his daughter, a girl of about 17 of age. After breakfast I walked again the deck & had a long talk with one of those from Buenaventura. At 9 o'Cl we were at opposite Portland; they say, that this is a slow Steamer, as it the log was thrown out we went no more than 6 knots, both wind & water against us. On deck we have an excellent stock of live sheep, goats, hens, &c. At 12 we had lunch, I played chess, read Chambers' tracts, slept a little, at 4 o'Clock we had dinner, - my seat was at the end of one row of seats, to my left the Mr Nueva Granadians, to my right the Doctor who presides. Dinner was good, but attendance indifferent. After dinner I played again chess, I have lost no game. At 7 we had tea, which being over I continued reading, during which I remained sitting quietly by myself, one whist table had formed itself, and on the other table about 7 or 8 gentlemen are conversing together & others are reading by themselves. The ladies have gradually disappeared, they stay most on deck, only the Swedish Cornish's daughter appeared at dinner. The weather is improving, the sky is clear, but the wind blows from the West, impeding the Steamer's progress: on an average we have not made more than 6 knots an hour during the whole day. The motion is hardly observable and we are sitting all here very comfortably, but when I must just run to my cabin, to fetch this my diary, here the paddles would strangle the waves: here the waves rushed by! – Extract from the Liverpool Times of 1845 Oct 15. "The correct accounts obtained by a laborious compilation, given underneath, of 332 rail-way schemes brought out "to 30 Sept 1845, requiring a gross capital of 250,000,000 £ on which "23,000,000 £ will have to be deposited. But this does not include "87 projects preliminarily entered, but of which of course we do not "know the capitals, they not having been published. There "have been accordingly in fact, 419 new schemes projected. In "foreign volunteer vessels, 66 have appeared up to 30 Sept., requiring "150,000,000 £, deposits 7,095,450 £" It is now ½ past 6 o'clock Sunday 19 Oct. This night the Steamer has rolled considerably more, owing to which a good many, particularly ladies, were sick. I rose early, say at ½ 6 o'clock. I was not quite well either, but believe I shall get over it. I have still my bowels open, which is a proof of my keeping up. I went on deck. The weather was dirty, we were just steering the Bay of Biscay. There was little sea on, but a heavy swell. The Peninsul. Steamer from the W. Indies passed us at 7 o'clock at 8 her smoke was still quite visible about 20 miles distant. – Our meals are the following, which I shall state here, in order not to be under the necessity of repeating them here after: At 7 o'Clock, whilst in bed a steward comes into one's cabin, and offers tea or coffee: at 9 o'Cl. we have breakfast, at 12 lunch, at 4 dinner, at 7 Tea. To day being Sunday between breakfast & lunch, the sailors were passed in review on deck and afterwards the captain read prayers in the Saloon. Chess could not be played to day. I spend the day reading, walking on deck & conversing. I got acquainted with the new passengers, particularly with the little Swedish girl, named Caroline, who speaks English extremely well, also with her father, the Colonel I had a long talk after tea. The usual: mutton is pitching, tho' the long swell continues: we go all the rates of from 6 to 7 knots. I am as well as on shore and extremely I am glad that I have determined upon going by this conveyance. The Trout, tho' slow, is a good sea boat.

Monday 20 Oct: Again spent a pleasant day; however it is not necessary describing the same, being more or less like yesterday. The temperature got warmer, at 12 o'Clock my thermt. was on deck in the shade 15th R = 67 F. I played 3 games at chess, of which I lost no. I got acquainted with several gentlemen, amongst whom with a certain Francisco Micheleena, of Venezuela, who in 1826 has been in Lima together with Bolivar and who is acquainted with many of my Lima & Guayaquil acquaintances —, also with a certain D. Evans, who knows Berruguier of Trujillo. After we had taken tea, Micheleena, the Swedish Consul a Mr Grimshaw, an Irishman, very Ugly and his daughter, D. Evans, another elderly Gentleman, and one of his daughters, a Miss Lowe nice pretty girl, (Mrs Mary Dunville who, her sister, and her sister's two little children occupy the back room to mine) and I remained sitting together conversing & spending the time agreeably enough till about 9h, when the small party broke up. Micheleena: who speaks French very well, but English poorly, was the most admired owing to his extraordinary travels & his many passports, which he owns & did show. When the young lady retired to her berth and I fetched my diary, I heard her say how sick, that she had spent a very pleasant evening. Colonel Mac Mahon who has taken his chance in the Peninsular war, Regard One of my fellow passengers, an elderly man, has fallen down Ship on the Stairs and the doctor is not certain, whether there is a fracture in his thigh or not — I hear, that including servants & children there are 180 passengers on board, of whom 80 are to leave at Madeira Colonel Mac Mahon has broken his thigh bone.

Tuesday 21 Oct. The doctor has told me, that Colonel Mac Mahon has fractured his thigh quite high up, which can never be cured. I continue as well as possible, tho' to day there was much more motion, we had a strong easterly wind and the sea was rough enough: it was beautiful to see the white headed waves as far as the eye did reach, they came behind the vessel, as high as 3 feet higher than the deck, but quickly they went down, and the vessel rose before them. In endeavouring to afford me of the ladies, now 3/4 hath brought Mr. Hall's Clerk off & went over board, I have to state that day before last, purchased one Salmon for Dec 1843. In the morning we were about the Longitude of Cape Finisterre, at 12 our longitude obs 10° 0' W. Dist 146 M. 57 knots our course S. W. every day I have had to put back my watch 20 minutes. — Besides reading & playing at chess, I work between lunch & dinner & after dinner & tea I had a long chat with little Rachel Hoarson, — after tea, Miss Grimshaw, really a nice girl, remained with us, and then I played two games of chess with her: Jacko, of which I gained one & lost the other, I managed to converse with her almost continually, which accounts for my losing the 2 games for she can play as well as I. Verily the life on board is very pleasant, & no tediousness is felt by me. Four gentlemen play regularly at cards in the evening. To day we counted as many as 8 sails, but notwithstanding the rough sea in comparison with other vessels on board of which I have been, the motion is very trifling. Even in the Saloon hardly perceptible. — Every day I get acquainted with more of my fellow passengers — Now, without boasting, I am convinced, dead Miss Grimshaw does not dislike me, tho' I am sure, dead she looked out with more anxiety for Michelena, when this evening did not make his appearance at our Table. — in this I am mistaken, believe the afternoon dispatch of him in a man who wants to make himself complimented

Wednesday 22 Oct. — Once more a very pleasant day, the sun shone out brightly and the heat commenced to make itself felt. At noon the thermometer was 17½ — 70 F. — I played a great many games at chess, with Lord of St Thomas, who is a Jew, called Levy, with another gentleman, and with old Mr Grimshaw. I believe. I lost one to Levy. from Grimshaw I gained two on Dob in the morning. & Mr. Lefevre Harvey two below after Tea till 9 o'Clock, whilst Colonel Haasum conversed with Miss Grimshaw. Seasickness no body thinks of. At dinner Mr Talemus's his niece Miss Christie occupied my usual seat as that lone of the Nueva Granadinos, whom her country-women have given the nickname of "el mono". this was first arranged so, however I got a chair near the Doctor & afterwards conversed very pleasantly with him, Mr Talemus & Miss Christie. - also an Irish Lord, that the greater part of the passengers are quite willing to enter into conversation & to walk up & down with one. - Such a passage as this is really highly agreeable. fine weather, no seasickness, no cares, pleasant company, good eating & drinking - even the doctor, rather a morose man, begins to be polite towards me. best with the captain I have not yet exchanged a single word -

Thursday 23 Oct, a week since I left London. The weather was nothing less so pleasant as yesterday. in the morning it rained and the sky was cloudy with a Southerly wind: nevertheless the thermt was like yesterday, at noon 78 - 79 F. I commenced reading Miss Fanny Parland's translation of Reid's Sailor, after which I played Chess the whole time from breakfast to lunch. I lost my game to Mr. Harvey. Two after lunch I have taken Colonel's & the secretary in the General Steam Navigation Company / India to the W. Indies, of which I made the following Extracts: - the book is lend me by an elderly gentleman. Madeira. the land, when first seen, seems a huge black castle rising directly out of the sea, with its walls dilapidated, and its towers & towers in dissolution. - The Geranium, in particular, is so common, that the honey of the bees bemoan like a jelly of that flower. - Funchal, the capital, is seated on the South of the island; - the shore are so rocky & precipitous, that the steamers do not anchor, but go close in, to land & receive passengers & mails, and to coal if required. - The mean annual temperature of Funchal is 64°. In 1827 311829 gallons of Madeira wine were entered for home consumption in Great Britain, in 1833, 1801142 gallons. - in 1837 511503, 1838 699083

Barbadoes, the a low island, may be seen 10 leagues off: it is almost the size & height of the Isle of Wight. it measures about 25 m. fr N. to S. 15 fr E. to W. Situation between 59° 50' & 60° 2' W. long, 12° 5' & 13° 16 N. lat. Its highest land is in the N.E. quarter, called Scotland, which is hilly & bleak. its greatest elevation above 1100 feet above the sea. & it is found to be one of the healthiest situations in the W.I. Chief Town is called Bridgetown on the S.W. side of the Island with 10000 inhabitants, to the N. side of Carlisle bay. Speights town lies 3 m. more N. ward. Population in 1841. 120000 souls. — Grenada, 140 m. from Barbadoes. the steamer goes alongside the company's wharf & passengers can walk on shore. it is situated betw. 12° 20' & 12° 27' N. lat. and 61° 30' & 61° 45' W. long, 24 m. in length, 12 m. in breadth. several smaller islands, supposed to be 120 in number, called the Grenadines, are in the vicinity. St. Georg's, the capital, is built upon a peninsula, jutting into a spacious bay, called St George's harbour on the W. side of the Island, not far from the S. extremity. It is embosomed in an amphitheatre of hills & thickly wooded elevations, which rise from the bay. Consequently the streets are steep. A ridge, which runs into the sea, divides it from a large basin of water, surrounded by wharfs, in the vicinity of which the principal merchants reside. it is called the "Carenage". it is landlocked, its entrance is defended by a citadel, called Fort George, built upon a rocky promontory on the left, the land rises gradually to some height, upon which the fortifications of Hospital Hill are erected and a long ridge, which falls towards the middle. connects this fort with Richmond height & runs down to the back ground. Three heights are also fortified. Sacred. Haiti, is distant 960 m. from Grenada, the distance is accomplished in about 3 days. The Queens Harbour is at the head of a very fine bay, it consists of two parts, the lower town built along the shore, — between it & the upper town, built on a hill immediately behind the lower, the view of the port with its white buildings & terrace like form, is very striking from the water, the streets however are poor & ill. paved & there are not many good houses, population 60000 to 70000 souls. — Here, whilst residing the foregoing, it was very dark and severe weather, sailing was scattered over however extremely good & comfortable. they are generally of two stories with verandahs above & below. — Santa Martha. The harbour may be considered one of the best on the coast of New Granada. The land is generally low, but the harbour is easily distinguished by the snowy mountains, that rise behind. The appearance of the town, as seen from a vessel standing into the bay, is neat & pretty, the houses being white washed, and in general, covered with red Tiles. To the Eastward there is a range of hills of no great elevation, but steep & of conical forms; these two are sandy, but those Seaward covered with brushwood. — The River Manzanares discharges a little to the South of the city. In the back ground stupendous mountains are piled one above another, until they terminate in the "Nevada of Santa Marta" which rises to the height of 18 000 feet, being nearly lost in the clouds, from which their peaks emerging, covered with perpetual snow, form a rich contrast to the rich & dark forests beneath. — A fort, which is admirably situated for the defence of the bay, is situated on the summit of an adjacent perpendicular rock. There is also a small battery now demantled, on the beach of the sea in front of the Town. — Carthagena the capital of the province of the same name, is situated on a sandy tongue of land on the shore of a large & very commodious bay, more than two leagues in length. It contains a handsome cathedral, besides several churches, convents & monasteries. The island, which forms a narrow strait on the S.E. gives a communication with that part of the land called Terra Bomba. To the Eastward the city is joined by a wooden bridge to a large suburb called Getsemani which is connected with the continent by another bridge. The city & suburbs are well laid out, the streets being straight, broad & uniform, the houses are for the most part built of stone, they consist chiefly of one story above the ground floor, all of them have balconies & latticed of wood, which in the climate is more desirable than iron (city) the population amounts to about 20000, of whom a great many are of Indian descent. The climate is very hot. From May to Nov. is the rainy season, when there is an almost continual succession of thunder, rain & tempests, in that the streets have the appearance of rivers. From Dec. to April is the seasonnes, when the heat is excessive: the latter part of the dry season is esteemed the most unhealthy. — — Chagres is a pretty reasonable place, being formed of only a few thatched huts: it is very unhealthy, being situate in a little sandy bay, on the N. side of the river, open only to the West wind & bounded by woods on the S. a dark look fortifications on the N. & a swamp on the E. which is fed by springs, that have no outlet. The inhabitants amount to about 1000, & are chiefly black & colored, with the exceptions of a few custom-house officers, & the commandant of the castle. There is a house, called an hotel, kept by Peter Ehrhardson, who professes to use his utmost endeavours to facilitate & travellers all the conveniences, that the country will permit of." The river Chagres imparts a yellow colour to the sea a distance of 3 miles from land.

The entrance of the river has a bar with not more than 12 feet water, large vessels therefore lie at anchor without in the road.
The river shoney is of the most beautiful description, the two sides hanging from each side. There are several villages & alcoholds on the shore of some have only a single hut with an area or two of cleared ground, others the grass grows round it with gardens of bananas, plantains & maize. The boat leagues called "Cimarrones" will travel at the rate of six miles an hour with the stream, but against it, the rate varies according to the strength of the stream during either the rainy or dry season.
The Indians of Emperon & Cruces are finely situated in elevated positions on the banks of the Chagres & are remarkably healthy.
The inhabitants are kind & hospitable & ready to give passengers all the accommodation they possess. at a trifling charge.

Tuesday continuation of Extracts. After tea the weather clear'd up gradually so that towards the afternoon it grew very fine. I rode, walked the deck & got acquainted with a young man, named Huntington Webster, a fellow passenger, who was very desirous to play at chess with me before dinner we play'd a number of games of draughts, which I lost nearly all, not being accustomed to the English way. Between dinner & tea we play'd 4 games at chess, which I gained all, tho I must say with much difficulty, for really he plays well. After Tea Miss Trenchard accompanied by her father came to take her usual walk on the poop, which the Swedish Colonel, the South Americans occupy as our room: in the course of the day. I had more to read her on deck & now in the evening I conversed a good deal with her: she is a nice pretty agreeable girl & I am sorry, that she & the whole family leave the ship at Madeira. From the father I gained a game at chess, her elder sister, a widow, is very sickly, she is consumptive, she has two little children Polly & Nancy, the latter 5 years old, the former perhaps 2 years older. At 8 Miss Trenchard retired, about 9, Colonel Trenchard & his daughters followed their example. I have been writing since: it is now past 10. —

"Friday 24 Oct. Continuation of Extracts. "There are two roads "to Panama; the one from Peiquina, the other from Cruces, the "former is somewhat longer, but in the dry season it is mostly a good "galloping ground, & may be rode over easily in 8 or 9 hours, during the "rains it is muddy. Of the road from Cruces, M. Lindo observes:

" "It was paved years ago by the Spaniards some which is has been " "entirely abandoned to the jade, whilst the rains combined with " "constant use of its wretched repair, have rendered numerous holes " "between the stones, so deep that for several miles at each step our " "horse was plunging up to their knees. Habit has enabled them " "to ascend, to descend in safety at the end of their journey, both " "animals, by nature sure footed, are rendered by fatigue, that " "not before the strength of the traveller is exhausted by fatigue, they

With regard to the three different places, where it is in agitation, or rather, where it is thought of cutting a canal from ocean to ocean, this book, Adams's Guide gives the preference to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, the distance is there conveniently short. At the Isthmus of Panama, the distance is only 65 miles, 41 Engl. miles, but there this book says: "The more recent report of intelligent engineers, purposely sent thither to ascertain the facts, seems to point out the great obstacles, which the territory presents to an enterprise of this nature (the digging of a canal) what those obstacles are is not stated. But even supposing that the topographical aspect of the ground offered no difficulty whatever, there are others quite sufficient to render it impracticable which unfortunately cannot be remedied: The climate is acknowledged to be dangerous, it is extremely unhealthy, so that is to be ascribed the paucity of population of the want of the necessary means of existence in that Isthmus. Even were the work at all practicable, the accomplishment would require the united efforts of the principal nations & an expenditure of at least 200,000,000 Sc. The Isthmus of Nicaragua presents a fertile territory, a healthy climate & in and around it population. Towards the N. the lake of Nicaragua communicates with the Atlantic by means of the mighty river San Juan, & on the S. only a small distance separates this lake from the coast of the Pacific. But then again. Mr Bailey who in the years 1837 & 1838 explored the Isthmus by order of the British Govt found, that the course of the river with all its windings is about 180 Statute or 92 Engl. miles, 6 of which are obstructed by four rapids, caused by banks of rocks stretching across the whole width of the river. The construction of a canal was therefore suggested as an easier operation than that of rendering the river itself navigable. Towards the S. a distance of nearly 28 Statute or thereabouts between the lake & the Pacific the territory is occupied by a chain of mountains, which, although not very elevated, would occasion works of extraordinary magnitude, even if practicable at all. Mr Bailey is reason to believe, and he attached Mr Bayley's experiments, that the nucleus of the canal, which is to be bored thro' is of granite or ancient porphyry, like the remainder of the Andes. Expense is estimated at 150,000,000, but probably much more would be required.

Remains the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, of which my Guides says the following
"The greater part of the distance which separates the Two seas in this Isthmus is "occupied on the South by the Lagunes & extensive plains, & on the West by the mountains "of the Coatzacoalcos, so that the principal works to be executed would be comprised "between Lat. 16° 24' & 17° 5' N. including a space less than 30 leagues or 75 m.
"an extent, wherein no excavations whatever exceeding the usual limits will be "required. - The River Chiapas & its confluents would give sufficient water for "a canal de jonction, which is the object of the undertaking, & for which object it "is specially to convey to the point of division a requisite quantity of waters -
"The canal might have an excellent port at each of its extremities, & the "materials for construction convenient & more abundant, superior in quality "& better distributed. The Climate is remarkable for its salubrity, the "departments of which the Isthmus forms a part, have a population of 750000
"souls. - Again as regards the Isthmus of Panama, M Wheatwright says "If we are not deceived, the task is so complete, that it would only be necessary to have locks at either End of the Canal, while its total length would not exceed 30 m.
The Chagres would be made its feeder, but the elevation of the Pacific 11 ft. above the Atlantic would, I think, render the canal entirely independent of any tributary Streams. Both of the Termini would require artificial harbours or must be protected by breakwaters, no substantial difficulty exists on this point. - Before the opening of a great ship canal can be commenced, it is absolutely necessary, that a road made to meet the least loss as possible. I have long thought, that a Tram Road with an Iron Rail would be the most desirable, as it would be adopted to locomotive power where necessary; a great object would be gained by the formation of such a road, the whole distance over the Isthmus from ocean to ocean would not exceed 4 or 5 hours. Chagres the town, would be also quite avoided & pestiferous miasmata with from Climate." ---- The weather to-day looks equally as the wind is contrary. The whole morning I was employed in writing. Thr. 18th 1843 Before dinner I played against chess with Mr Cunningham Wilson, lost 2 games after dinner I ran on deck presenting my respects to Miss Cunningham, with whom I remained a good deal, then played again with the same gentleman, of whom, tho' he is a very fair player, I again gained 2 games. After Tea old Cornwallis, his daughter Harriet, whom I take great notice of, Miss Theodosia Grimshaw, after having conversed a little while, determined upon playing a Pianoforte. I selected a piece of paper and we then commenced the old german game of Fan, Fan, was for fifty &c. of course the interest arose only from Miss Grimshaw's present hazard. She would of course determine the first gentleman's name, whom she selected Mr Whitequeen on account of his mouth which was mustachioed & whom for variety he drew afterwards, is a young insipid conceited man from the West Indies, who is extremely smit upon Miss Grimshaw, but whom she does not like at all. (the name is Mr Radcliff. from Lord Erin. Mr Fanny) the following day she called him to me: a bore, a creature I do not remember what else. — When we had done writing, we sat down to [illegible] Mr Grimshaw, the father reading, & a South American similarly employed or having about vacantly. — 2 d. 3 Miss Grimshaw, Harriet & the Colonel, & Mr Whitequeen writing. We remained very pleasantly till 9 when Mrs Miss Grimshaw withdrew: soon after we others all went to our respective berths. I will just describe Miss Grimshaw: she is rather tall, well made, with a pretty waist, and neck above & below, well furnished by nature, her feet I could not see, neither her arms nor hands, the former being concealed by her long silk dress, the latter by sleeves & gloves. But now as to her face, the most lovely complexion imaginable, white with the most delicate rosy cheeks, fair hair, sparkling hazel eyes full of animation & fun, her nose rather large & aquiline, like her father's, without however in the least being a disagreeable feature, her mouth neither small nor large, but her lips the reddest I have ever seen & always dewy, her teeth white like pearls but separated from each other, and forming one with the other, the only fault of her face, which did not please me, is the chin: it is rather long and shaped rather like those of the Spanish Branches of the Bourbon family. — I confess, that I should admire this young Lady, and the Colonel would be fain to say, that widower as he is, if he were of my age, he should not have feel disinclined to make her an offer of his hand. —

Saturday 25 Oct. I awoke & rose rather early, being onward by the ground. Land is quite visible. I was on deck about 7 o Clock; was now of an island called Porto Santo, about 5 miles distant to the N. W. its outlines are very undulated, it's full of mountains & valleys, the former presenting a brownish dry barren aspect, various roads are already spread forms the coast at short distances. Miss Grimshaw appeared shortly on deck, she told me, that this Island was rather arid, with little vegetation. Mr Whitgrave was of course at her elbow, I after also accosted her, when he went away, I showed her his portrait, which last night by the Colonel, which she afterwards in a conversations with Mr Searcy & myself, called a Caricature, but a likeness for that very reason.

Porto Santo is 30 miles from Madeira. the weather was upon the wholesome, the time a squall came on, at the approach of one of which I with much attention crowded below Miss Grimshaw's elder sister, Mrs Mary Durnford, a widow, also a very nice woman, to whom to day spoke for the first time, but who, owing to her disease, for she is another time consumptive, is very languid & not fond of conversing. Afterwards I again went up to Miss Grimshaw, saying, I now come to wish you good bye, for afterwards there will be such a bustle, that I shall not have time to do so. She seemed surprised my regret, that she was leaving the ship so soon, what the evenings would now appear to me quite disagreeable &c &c on which she also gave me the pleasing answer: So, one is sorry to part with people, whom one likes. — Shortly at noon in the Shade 19th R.
76 F. — I think, it was about 12h when we made the most eastern point of Madeira, along the Southern side of which we now slowly ridge of low barren hills stretched out to the S. E. further on to the W. naked hills, which stand from the mountains down to the waters edge appear covered with terraces, where vines are planted, but which now, the vintage being over, have a brownish appearance. other parts of these hills were covered with green, with sugar canes, trees & shrubs, while country houses shew themselves, on the tops of the mountains. the highest summits of which is 6000 feet high, clouds are resting — we have

rous a bluff promontory before us to the S.W. behind which a bay opens with the white houses of Funchall, lying to the N.E. of a rather low neck of land stretching out into the Sea from the Westernmost of the Bay. Before doubling the bluff head land the there rose on lower hills, covered with Verdure, higher up a small wood, of, as Miss Grimshaw told me, pines is a conspicuous object. As we were nearly abreast the bluff head land a Gun was fired for the town and some distance on the road stead several ships are lying at anchor, one of them the Dart, Commander Bayly for Englt may like to Henry Steeling will I hope go by her. Funchall, somewhat like Valparaiso is built between the sea and the hills which rise immediately behind the town, up the hills, similar to the Zudrodar on Valparaiso and on board rather lower, all white, with the exception of one or two yellow painted, are built, the main square or Esplanade the new place or Praca of Funchall is nearly shoulder, hill to the W. ward of the same which reaches down to the Sea, incloses the intervening Garden, & then stood part, which in Valparaiso forms the Alameda or walking. Towards the E. extremity of a small fort, or rather some building meant to be a fortification, next to its gallows a church, the governor's house & a large white building, — I observed another Church, up the hills another, which may also be a convent — another fortifications upon a small eminence fast behind the town, — near the beach a clumsy conical short tower or rather pillar, which was meant to serve as a Crane but which has never been used. — Besides the already mentioned houses which are sprinkled upon the hills, I observed white cottages, which, as Miss G informed me, surround vineyards: towards the W extremity of the Town lies a rocky and a sharp Sidewise from the Shore upon which a guard house is built, towards, and upon a hill behind the Town also to the W.

a flagstaff standing, probably to serve as Telegraph. Mr Evans told me, that as might be expected, the better qualities of Madeira wines grow on the Southern part of the Island, of which the best go to the U.S. & to the E. Indies, the inferior to England: the lighter qualities grow on the Northern side, & of them a very large quantity goes to Hamburg, where, after being prepared as Wine, it is exported for Rhenish wine or Hock. I think it was about 5 h when we stopt - we did not come to an anchor - at a short distance from the Town, a number of shore boats came off, also the sanitary boat, in the people on board of which, of whom nobody came on board the Steamer, the doctor reported, that there was a slight case of smallpox on board, a child having fallen ill a few days ago. - The boat turned back in order to report this extraordinary case" - We were now of course quite in smooth water, the sun shone out, and as there was no wind, we being sheltered by the island, the heat was rather intense, an anchoring was spread, and all the passengers, many of whom quite not having perceptibly found the effects of the sea sickness, now soon completely recovered, communicated on the occasion of the anxious expectation of the reply on shore: - perhaps it was a mere chance, however it appeared to me, as if Miss Grimshaw, on my approaching her, turned from where she sat; - then I observed at a distance Mr & Mrs Anderson with Mr Collins Harvey, who conversed much with her, whom she likewise - One Letter passed away, another passed away, no answer came from on shore, - all became more & more impatient - one gun was fired as a sign of impatience no answer yet - at 4 o Clock the first dinner bell rang, at 5 h the second; - we went below, the Grimshaws, (the ladies) were dressing, - Mrs Cady dressed me, from my customary valet, received it to say, I offered it to her. - From my second Miss Clarke does not eat. - Then I sent Cady to a side table, where she was but scarcely waited upon. - I therefore sat but a little and went on deck, to converse a little with the amiable Miss G. she was now again as friendly as ever. And after a few minutes – a second gun having been fired in the mean while – the long expected boat came off from shore with the sepiend decree of the governor, which, communicated thro' a trumpet, speaking, was the following: that the family with the Children which the Master is to go in quarantaine, – that all other passengers are allowed to land, with the exception of the little children between 7 years of age – & that these are to be placed in the quarantaine building (I suppose, with the object to catch the disease) and that the parents are to be allowed to accompany their children. Now this was a dreadful piece of news to the Grimshaws. For poor Mrs. Pennille is too unwell to go into quarantaine, and to be separated from her little Mary, a girl of 5 years of age, she could not think of. – of course she commenced crying. Miss Grimshaw offered to accompany her little niece, but the Turks would not allow – and then they came at last to the determination to smuggle her on shore, as if she were 7 years old. Meanwhile it had got dark. – Of course for us passengers, who intended going on to the W. I. there was no time to go on shore – a gentleman came off from the shore, enquiring for Mr Fiedler formerly Brenner & Schiller from Hamburg. he was referred to me, & I told by Brenner all time, that Schiller would come by next Steamer, they having been too late for the present one. The Consul had meanwhile taken Miss Grimshaw under his charge. – After those had been landed, who had to go into quarantaine, we removed from where we lay and Paid Colonel Mac Mahon with his Broken leg was removed on a floating with a boat. Notwithstanding several squalls I had remained on deck and now went below. I came just in time, the Grimshaws were on the point of starting. the Colonel took care of Miss G. & of little Harriet – Miss G. helped Harriet – and we now shook hands. I told her: Good bye. Miss Grimshaw, do not forget me – then the baggage which was encumbering the passage. I minded my way to see them [illegible] into the boat. From on deck the Colonel & I called after them: Good Night! – and in a few moments we lost them in the impenetrable darkness. – I should be glad indeed, if I were to meet Miss G. again. she

a little more, but not so much as to make one look scarce. — I spent the day in a very uninteresting quiet manner, reading & considering the first pages of the diary, playing chess (I lost in day two games to Mr Levy & one was a drawn one; of course I gained also several, but I might never to have against him, for he is certainly my inferior in playing), reading & finishing the Lord of the Manor, conversing with Colonel Hasenus & talking a few words with the daughter. — Miss Grenadoes's departure has left an astonishing void. — the Colonel said, that he only wished to go to Maderas [to the Manor, where name is Colonel Hastings] one of the S. American ports Buenaventura, with whom I am much intimate, told me, that one evening, when he lent her a knife to cut open the leaves of a book, she returned him the same, he kissed the handle & to her. — I myself feel, that since she is gone, the steamer is not any thing like so pleasant as it was previously to her departure. Thermo 6 a 8h in the shade 87 R = 90 F. — There is a good deal of small strong contrary wind, & we do not go more than 7 knots the hour. — Here on board I have several practice in Spanish with the S. Americans.

Tuesday 28 Oct. I spent the day almost in the same manner as yesterday. A new Chess player turned up, a Mr Andrew Ramsay of Glasgow, who is established in Trinidad in partnership with Samuel Jamieson, brother of Jamieson of Calavar Jamieson & Co. I gained two games of 4 lost two games to him. Between dinner & tea I got Mrs Harvey to teach me Swedish. Thermo at noon in the shade on deck 18¾ R = 74 F.

the warmest day we have had as yet. About noon we caught the N.E. Trade wind. Immed[y] after breakfast I gained several games from Mr Levy, then 2 from Mr Ramsay & also 1 or 2 from Mr Harvey. After which Ramsay proposed to play two against two, in which we agreed Harvey & I against Ramsay & Levy. each two had their Board before them, each move, after having been well considered was put down on paper & communicated to the adversaries. We played from 1 to 4 & from 5½ to 6h, when Ramsay & Levy gave up the game. — After Tea Ramsay. I watched the deck for a long time & I am now writing the present. It is 9½ o'Cl. Some passengers are playing cards, others are reading.

Thursday 30 Oct. After breakfast I changed my cloths for light drill trowsers, when during which & shaving, I took off my spectacles. A short while afterwards I missed them, and tho' for more than an hour I looked for them every where in my berth, I could not find them and must give them up as lost. - Fortunately I have with me another pair, which I brought in Italy, but of which one glass is cracked. - I played again in the same way as yesterday a game at chess at two Boards against Ramsay & Harvey. - (Levy having resigned) which I gained. - At Noon our Lat. was 25. 35 Long. 30. 35. - Therm. at 5 h. 30 m. P.M. on deck in the shade 78 F. - 20th New Year's day the Doctor read to Colonel Hamilton & myself parts of a diary kept by him in 1840 in New South Wales, which amused me much. - The Steamer measures 1470 Tons Builder's Engines - Horse, so that her total measurement is about 1900 Tons. The Captain finds the provisions on board of the Company allows him for every Full grown Cabin passenger 7/ daily, for the crew 1s 2d daily. – The Name of our Captain is Bazer: he is a pleasant gentlemanly man. – There is on board a Negro, who belongs to General Flores, who took with him to Europe by the last Steamer from Chagres. this Negro, who can not stand the cold European Climate is now returning: – he is half cracked, is complaining that they want to kill him on Board. – one Evening he wanted to sleep in my berth, which however I would not allow – and he, I hear, gave vent to a fuddy soliloquy between two Sailors: "I say, Jack, the Steam Black Chap is crazy, they say, he is in love with the fine girl, who wants to stay in Madera. – What fine girl" – "Oh she, with the fine body & red cheeks" – Ah, ah! Understand you, Sir, whom half the passengers were mad after. – I guess Miss Trenham was meant. – day were spent by us about in the same manner, playing at chess (occasionally I lost some games, but generally I won) reading "Chambers Edinburgh Journal", conversing, and diverting myself with Fairies Raeburn. A young pleasant man, whose name is Ellis who has travelled almost a good deal on the continent and in the East. I got acquainted with; also with a Mr Maguire from Jamaica and with a Lady with her two little girls, Margaret & Agnes, who is going to join her husband in Jamaica. In the day we have an awning spread, below in the cabins or saloon after sea it is extreme warm; but on deck the evenings are delightful. On Saturday evening we saw for the first time the small crescent of the new moon. Venus is wonderfully bright, I met old acquaintances from the last voyage on board the

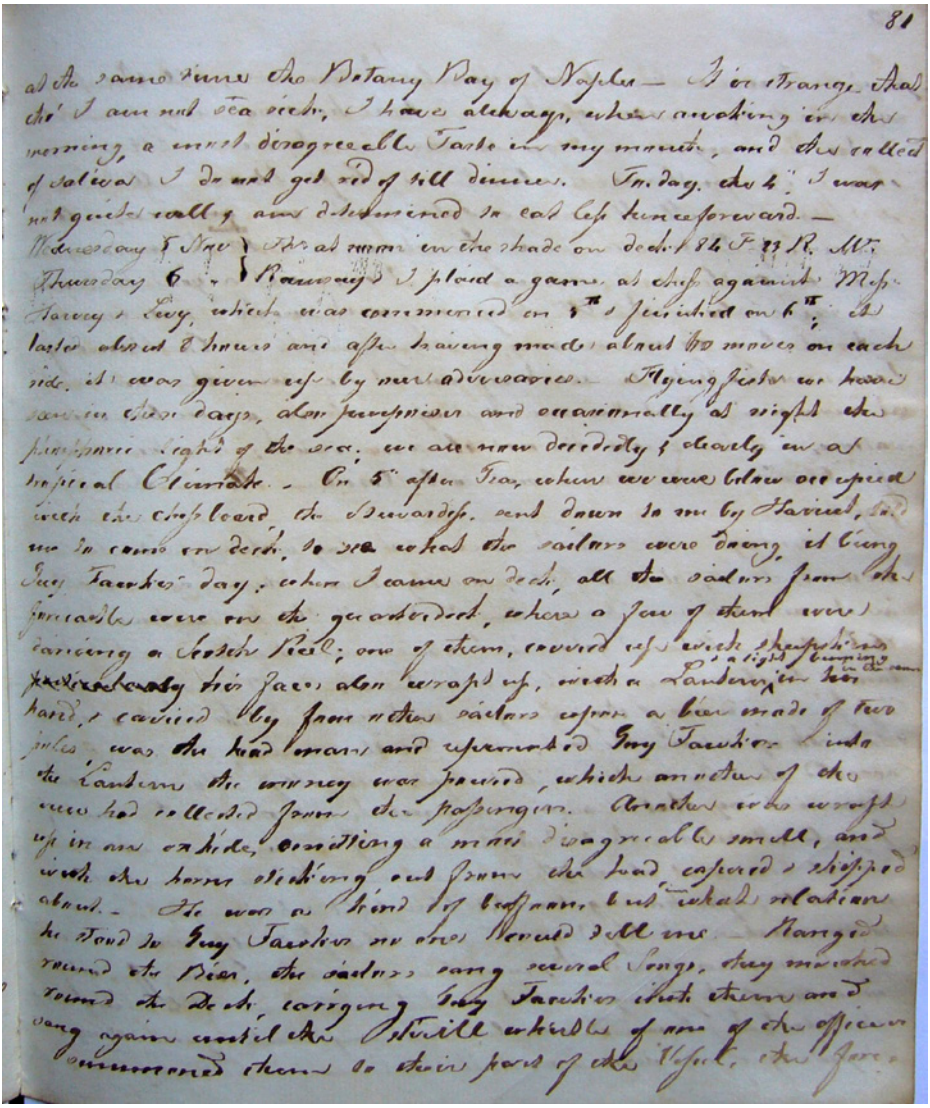
Venus, Jupiter & Mars, I never fail to look up to it every evening.



Sunday 2 Nov. We are in the Tropics. the weather is delightful it would be too warm, Wind noon 815 = 20 R. if the heat were not tempered by the Trade wind. - Soon after breakfast at ab! 10 h, there was a review of the sailors on deck (I am told, that the whole crew, including sailors, firemen, engineers, cook & his dependents, confectioner, butcher, doctor and officers of saloon & number nearly a hundred persons), after which also on deck prayers were read by the Captain. When the skylights & a few of the ladies were sitting; around them upon extempore & portemanteaus wonders benches the sailors, then the captain with his back to the wheel and before him an extempore table covered with a flag, near him his officers, and close to the bulwark the passengers on stools & chairs. Towards the South stays were fastened down from the awning to the deck, in order to keep out the rays of the sun, and tho' unfortunately the Captain read in low, that I could but partially understand him, yet I thought the whole ceremony impressive & new and particularly so, when I let my eyes stray over the deep dark blue waters of the Atlantic with its here & there white headed waves - The sailors were all cleanly dressed in blue jackets, shining broad brimmed hats, & white duck trowsers - Immediately after the Captain had reviewed them (before prayers) he ordered them to stand close around him and then he read to them the regulations, how to conduct themselves in case of fire - I like the Captain, Mr. Rees, very well, tho' I have had to speak but few words with him; he is a unjoyous fellow around in command. His father, appears to me rather rough - I extract the following from Scamler's Journal of 12 July 45:

"On 4 Sep 38 the Great Western started from Bristol to solve the great problem of ocean steam navigation, the arrival of New York in 15 days & 10 hours. Three days before the

I do not get rid of till dinner. Friday, the 4th. I was not guided well, and determined to eat less time forward. — Wednesday 5 Noon } Therm. in the shade on deck 84 F. 23 R. M.
Thursday 6 — } Ramsay & I played a game at chess against Mess. Harvey & Ivy, which was commenced on 3rd, finished on 6th; the latter about 2 hours and after having made about 80 moves on each side, it was given up by our adversaries. Flying fish we have seen in these days, also porpoises and occasionally at night the phosphoric light of the sea. we are now decidedly & clearly in a tropical Climate. — On 5th after Tea, when we were below occupied with the chess board, the Stewardess sent down to us by Harriet, to come on deck, to see what the sailors were doing, it being Guy Fawkes' day; when I came on deck, all the sailors from the forecastle were on the quarterdeck, where a few of them were carrying a Cooper's Vat; one of them, covered up with shavings, his face also wrapt up, with a Lanthorn in his hand, & carried by four others sailors upon a bier made of two poles, was the head man, and represented Guy Fawkes. Inside the Lanthorn the money was placed, which members of the crew had collected from the passengers. Another who was wrapt up in an ox hide, emitting a most disagreeable smell, and with the horns sticking out from the head, capered & skipped about. — He was a kind of buffoon, but what relation he stood to Guy Fawkes no one could tell me. Ranged round the Bier, the sailors sang several Songs, they marched round the deck, carrying Guy Fawkes with them and sang again until the Steward called one of the officers summoned them to their post of the Watch, the Fore-hours. It was a beautiful summer light & evening, all the ladies were on deck, – in none of them I take however any particular interest – they were beggd to sing. – as however all refused some of the gentlemen entertained, Capt. Power, Mr Levy, Mr Brown, Mr Magnen of Falmouth in Jamaica, Mr Harvey of Bermuda, some fine tunes & the evening was spent in a pleasant manner. I conversed a good deal with Harvey, also with Mr Levy, and with another not young Scotch lady in mourning, with spectacles. – On Thursday I commenced a letter to Siechberg and at dear times the said lady sat down near me at sea and kept up with me a very long conversation, which however did not please me much; she is the mother of a "blue" The heat is not to be borne — Flows & ebbs pass us.

Friday 7 Nov. In the course of the day nothing particular occurred, I read, played chess, &c., exactly as usual, there was a squall in the air, and my Thermt. was 22 R = 22½ R, half an hour later 18 R = 24 R. When I got on deck after dinner at about 5 hr Cl. the land of Barbadoes was visible at a distance, – Mr Ramsay one of the Chief players is one of the passengers, with whom I like much to converse & to walk up & down the deck, so I did this evening, afterwards I accosted the lady mentioned last night, called Miss Alice Kennedy, I cannot say that I admire her much yet there is the power of female attraction, that I kept watching & conversing with her several hours, at about 9½ we were near Bridge Town, Barbadoes and at 10, after having burnt a blue light & fired a gun, we came to an anchor, the lights of the town being clearly visible – It was a splendid summer light night, many boats came off, – only one or two of the passengers went on shore – Yawed & dancing now the balmy breeze, brought innumerable lighters to the quarantine & departing ships negro & mulatto boats, men and lads, almost naked superfluous again to recommend, and at 5h I went on board the Fay on one of the Frend's boats with Cairnes other passengers. — Here the Custom regarding the baggage was no joke, mine I got together in short time, but then I had to serve as interpreter for the Senor Granadinos — The Berth allotted to me was situated exactly similarly to that on b.d the Frend; viz a Middle Berth under a side corridor, on the main deck, before had drawn to the Saloon & had up to the deck appear: in size it is rather larger than that which I had on board the Frend. At about 7 we got under weigh, we had tea, but instead of a bell being rung, we are called here to our meals by a Gong being struck, which is of Chinese invention, a somewhat concave large metal plate, made of mixed copper; it makes an awful noise: I think something like it was used in Lima on the Italian Opera Nights which, hung on the castrees, was struck by Negroes, when calling the women — It was a lovely beautiful cool moonlight night, the motion of the vessels not to be felt. I accosted Miss Mackinnon, the Captain's Niece, joined that we remained conversing on deck till 11, when we retired to our respective berths. Lights are put out here at 10h Monday 11 Nov. Rat reckoned d.e the 10 at. I slept well till about 6, I rose soon after & went on deck — In my berth on board of this vessel I felt less of the motion & hear less of the noise of the engines than I did on b.d the Frend — his wife & two children, Mrs Chapman & children for Jamaica, Newcastle – all their Cases as Kingsdon – and for Chagres: Colins Martinez, his brother in law Don Francisco – Miguel Cevalos Hunter respectively Gonzalo Vaimna & Joaquim Vargas. – more orders we are about 20: the remainder of the 108 when embarked in Southampton – & We breakfasted at 8h: there were amongst other things, excellent Cabbages here called Alligators Pears, (avocado corrupted into) large as the Pineapples – The sea is quite smooth, owing to no monsoon, but the heat is great: 86 F = 24 R. I have been writing nearly the whole morning – which the gentlemen I am mess proudly will acquainted. At breakfast I had sat down at the Table where the Captains, purser and where all the ladies sit, however at dinner at 3 h or 4h instead of at 2h as now the first I removed to the other Table with the doctor at the head of the lower below, besides these two gentlemen & myself, only the Nueva Granadinos sit here, however as I am to remain with them as far as Panama, I thought myself justified, to court their company a little. – After dinner we exchanged a few words with Mrs Chapman & conversed for some time with Miss Fullerd Fairland who is most amiable. Miss Isabella Kinnear & Fermendez Isabel & Clara Martinez had taken a "much to be deplored" affection to me & it is not easy matter to wrest her talk "from under the gods jointly hand of grace. This evening I made the melancholy Experience – The persons sang afterwards & played the guitar. – It was pleasant enough, but nothing particular – It was a delightful moonlight night. At 10 h P.M. I retired to my Cabin.

Tuesday 11 Nov. The heat this night was dreadful. I awoke in the middle of the night with the wind now open & entered with nothing but my shirt and trowsers, while my whole body was ~~covered with~~ in perspiration. I rose early & after breakfast I had the whole time till lunch. Sat by myself for company of Miss Mac Kinnon who made me sit down near her on deck & kept me, rather ordered, in a not to be interrupted Conversation. After lunch I read a little & am now writing. The sea is not quite so smooth as it was yesterday, the ship is steady & we have a steady N. E. trade wind. At. at noon on deck in the Shade 8 N. 23½ F. Sharp. Capt.n of the Jay, in rather a weight & in my opinion nothing like so pleasant a gentleman as Capt. Bowen of the Trent. Till nearly dinner time I passed the morning writing my diary from the commencement. After dinner some of the Ladies came on deck. I rejoined in not having much of Miss Mac Kinnon's company. Which Miss Fellows announced a little, she is originel, cold and disagreeable, & not very pretty, but pleasant on acquaintance of her youth, she is 20 years old. The journal does sang a little. At 8 o Clock the ladies went below. Time hang rather heavily. I read below some stupid Novel, which I found lying about & turned in before 10. We were usually going at the rate of from 7 to 8 knots.

Wednesday 6th Dec. There is to day a little more motion than in the morning only a few of the ladies appeared. Till lunch time I was on deck reading Chambers' Tracts & notes, that the celebrated Marshal Macdonald Duke of Tarentum, one of Napoleon's generals was the son of a Macdonald of Scotland of Jacobite extraction who, then called Macdonachan, accompanied in the year 1746 or Miss Flora Macdonald, who conducted in a great measure to the escape of prince Charles Edward the pretender, after his defeat at Culloden on 16 Apr. Then Miss Macdonald carried Macdonachan as her man servant, and the prince dressed as a female servant, under the names of Betty Burke in an open boat with her from one of the Hebrides to the other. At. at noon on deck in the Shade 78 F. 23½ N. Sat lunch

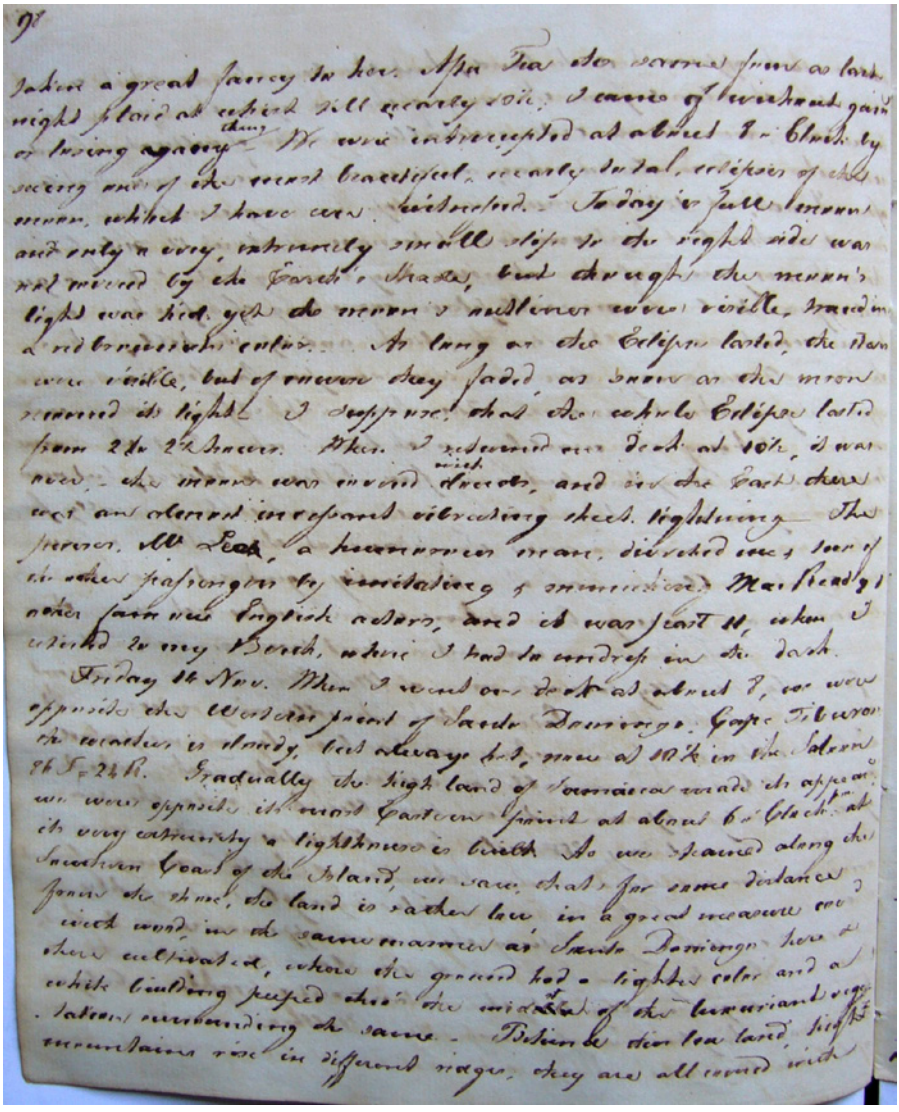
I took only two oranges, scarce when I have been reading, instead of writing my diary. It is now nearly 3 hr. our dinner time. Owing to the vessel's motion even I do not feel qualms well. However after dinner I quickly removed towards evening the ladies came on deck. I endeavoured to converse a little with Miss Hellard, but Miss Mac Kinnon always sticking to me like glue. After dinner Miss. Magnus, Phillips, Pennock & myself played at whist till 10 h. 1 Hist 8 h. I then walked the deck till nearly 10 h. when I withdrew.



Thursday 13 Nov. When I went on deck at 8 o'Clock we were steering along the Southern Coast of Santo Domingo at a distance of from 5 to 6 miles. It is a very high Island and up to the very tops the mountains are covered with bushes & trees, but cultivation is extremely scarce & for leagues my fellow passengers told me, that they, already outward sugar from the Venetian negroes Tortuga, and that our homeward cargo are taken in, consisted with a very fortunate, if may be the same with coffee. The inhabitants are so lazy as not to plant more coffee trees, than they only cultivate the old ones, which in course of time will die out. Occasionally we could distinguish along the coast some barren light grey coloured rocks, & perhaps also here & there a small patch of ground, where the trees seemed to be cleared away. Miss Hellard and Miss Mc. Kinnon came on deck, but hardly could speak a few words to the former, when she again caught hold of me. She had now a French book with caricatures. La Badauderie, engagement, certainly pretty enough, which she made me look over with a frequently explanation to her. By no means an pleasant occupation. If she is not somewhat prettier, younger & not so abominably blue. Walked upon deck in the shade 8 h. 24 M. Went I returned on deck, after having been writing the preceding, we

but we much approached the land, that the trees & bushes, which cover the sides of the islands from the verge of the sea up to the summits of the mountains, are clearly distinguishable. - patches of cultivated land, where the wood is cleared away, are very very scarce. - Immediately after sunset, at 12h, we came to a stop in Jacquemel Bay. we did not anchor, but kept ourselves stationary at about 1/4 mile from shore, the two friends of the interior bay bearing S.S.E. & S.E. Jacquemel appears to be a miserable place, consisting of a few huts or houses, which are built near the beach and up the hill, where the trees are cleared away. Here we also drew four indifferent cannon, but apparently without carriages. The Admiralty Agent was on board the Spitfire, taking the mail-bags with him: when first he came on board here they had but very few letters to deliver, but now the correspondence has become pretty considerable, especially for Port au Prince, which lies across the Island at the distance of some 22 or 30 miles. As soon as the Admiralty agent returned, we started away, having been detained here not much more than an hour. Miss Bedford was but a short time on deck, but sufficiently friendly towards me. - of Miss Mac Kinnon I cannot complain, of the other Ladies I do hardly any more. - At a short distance from where we had been lying, we passed Jacquemel Cape, remarkable on account of the rocks, which here seem to appear to leave suddenly off into the sea. In Jacquemel Bay, 25 miles from Kingston, 3 ships were at anchor, close in shore. - In other part of Santo Domingo French is the language of the negroes & colored people, residing here. The coast continues presenting the same appearance as to the Eastward of Jacquemel. - we stand almost west towards Jamaica, & gradually lost the Island out of sight. - Only at sea I had the pleasure of seeing Miss Bedford. she is a nice girl. - the Captain, Marsh, whom I do not like, seems to have [illegible] a great fancy to her. After tea she [illegible] night [illegible] which till nearly 10h. I came of [illegible] or losing again. We were interrupted at about 8 o'Clock by seeing one of the most beautiful, nearly total, eclipses of the moon, which I have ever witnessed. To day is full moon and only a very, extremely small slice to the right side was not covered by the Earth's shade, but through the moon's light was hid, yet the moon's outlines were visible, standing out [illegible] in a red brown color. As long as the Eclipse lasted the stars were visible, but of course they faded as soon as the moon resumed its light. I suppose that the whole Eclipse lasted from 2 to 2½ hours. When I returned on deck at 10½, it was over, the moon was in mid heaven, and in the East there rose an almost impenetrable [illegible] thick lightning. The passengers, Mr Peck, a humorous man, diverted me & some of the other passengers by imitating & mimicking Mr Brady & other fair new English actors, and it was past 11, when I retired to my Berth, where I had to undress in the dark.

Friday 14 Nov. When I went on deck at about 7, we were opposite the Western point of Santo Domingo. Cape Tiburon. The weather is cloudy, but always hot, now at 10½ in the shade 84 F = 24 R. Gradually the high land of Jamaica made its appearance. We were opposite its most Eastern point at about 6 o'Clock. At its very extremity a lighthouse is built. As we steamed along the Southern Coast of the Island, we saw, that for some distance from the shore, the land is rather low in a great measure covered with wood, in the same manner as Santo Domingo, here & there cultivated, where the ground had a lighter color and a white building peeped out. The middle of the Island rises [illegible] taken surrounding the same. Behind the low land, high mountains rise in different ridges, they are all covered with round with various buildings, which constitutes a large naval establishment: the hospital is a large building, and the dock-yards are pretty extensive. Between & round these buildings excessive fear shews themselves here & there. The Entrance must be rather dangerous, for buoys are placed every where, indicating the route vessels must take. Westward Port Royal at short distances from the shore rocks are scattered about, called the Keys. Various Boats came off from Port Royal & some passengers already left the Steamer. Just past the Port Royal a large man of war at anchor, also a Brig which proved her to be a ship bearer which, a man of war steamer, and three small three masted vessels, which, she enquiring & learnt, belong also to government & are used as tenders for the supply of the men of war. On the Western Side opposite Port Royal the shore rises into wood cov'd hills mountainous similar to those, we have, running along the coast, a fortification is erected there, called the Twelve Apostles, and a little further on, on the hilly side, follows a small village, Port Henderson, at a short distance thence, the hills become so as to form a level piece of ground, covered with underwood, and on a great measure swampy as I am told, from this low land to the left, behind the just mentioned hills the road leads to Spanish Town 15 miles distant from Kingston, in which place, Spanish Town, the meetings of the Assembly of Jamaica parliament, met. Mr Samuel Magnus, whose name I have frequently mentioned as one of my fellow passengers, who is a Jew, is one of the deputies, he resides in Falmouth, Jamaica, & if ever I revisit Jamaica again & have time, I shall not fail to call upon him. — Before you reach Kingston Harbour, you have still to pass by Fort Augustus, the embrasures in the walls of which are only a little elevated above the Level of the Sea. — The Entrance to Kingston is also completely defended by Fort Royal, the Guard Ship, the 12 apostles & Fort Augustus — Street Port Royal and Harbour Streets are the principal ones, where most business is done, run parallel to the Sea, the other traverse them: none of them is paved: the inhabitants say that the torrents of rain, which come rushing from the neighbouring mountains, would easily away the stones placed in the deep sand, which mixed up with rubbish now covers the streets. The houses have upon the whole a poor miserable dilapidated appearance; it is true they have fashionable (portales) Colonnades, and above galleries, but then the pillars which sustain both the one & the other are made of wood painted green: then the jardins are in many places ruined several feet above the carriage road and steps uneven steps laid down. Towards that end of the town, opposite to the harbour, is the "Square" a large sandy open place, with the Barracks, the Theatre, the Anglican and a Church begun the last by Jews the handsomest building. In one corner of the square is a market place, where most fruit & vegetables are sold: both rotten and poor. Chairs were exclusively black & colored people: also in Jamaica the number of the black & colored people surpasses by far that of the white. Labourers are rather scarce, so that the colonial government is taking active steps to import free Labourers, both from Africa as from the East Indies, which latter are called Coolies. Besides standing the commune heat the perpendicular rain drives my face in torrents. I reached a high road a considerable distance out of town, the country just the same mixed of the neighbourhood, a sandy road with miserable wooden huts, lined with high cactuses, some grasses, a few cocoa nut trees, & principally with the Orangers, here called Cashaues. A few white people I met in their gigs driving to town, and numbers of blacks with vegetables, fruits & sugarcanes on their heads: they all call each other: "Ola'am, Sir & Miss, and the ladies drop their curtsies, but when they quarrel, they call each other: "black negro" & when in a rage, a negro will even give his

the Commercial Hotel with its large reading rooms and rooms of invalids a fine view over the Town & surrounding country - the Club house, where Balls & Concerts are occasionally given. - there are three Public Rooms, the middle & principal one of which is used on such occasions by the people of color, and whence upon the whole the real whites are not fond of mixing - also the Courthouse, where the Tribunals hold their sittings - The present governor of Jamaica is the Earl of Elgin. - Mr Pinnock's dwelling house is about a mile from the town, just out of town, over-run with shrubs - when entering the same, I was much struck with the air of comfort which pervaded the outside: - the Rooms are not large but nicely furnished - above are the bedrooms, nursery & dining room. - Mr Pinnock was fellow passenger, and her sister, rather grown & not quite (who is married to a Mr Bayley, whom I saw in the store. apparently richer) the first Black or a pastor with a small share) made their appearance - they were friendly enough, - we had lunch, I enjoyed particularly some iced ale, - after which we returned to Town & I soon on board - The number of passengers was now ordered to the fine Nueva Granadinos, myself & Mr Pinnock, Mr Burbright, quite a young man, Captain in the Englishmen in Carthagena the following new ones: Mr Brandner, a very stout Dutch Curaçao man, now residing in Carthagena - St Diego from Panama & a young man from Baranquilla, a place 4 leagues up the River Magdalena - besides there is a Captain Rashbrith, resident in Kingston, who serves as pilot to the Steamer, who visits the main, since the loss of the Alexander, a company's Steamer, Captain Jamieson, which took place at 9 o'Clock in the morning in Sept: 1844 upon a reef near Carthagena, his daughter was also on board & perished - our Admiralty Agent's name is James - We got under weigh at 4 o'Clock, the same place & stopped, over in the morning, passed again under my review, - we did not get to dinner until we had left Port Royal & the very last buoy in short ended we were fairly out at sea. Some Jamaicans in the Atlantic our course lies S. somewhat E. – I went to bed early Sunday 16 Nov. After breakfast the captain received the sailors on deck, which was not done in the same way as on men of war ships, as Captain Bowers knew how to do it; we then had prayers likewise in the Saloon, – they were read by the second in command He had a pretty stiff N.E. breeze, the sea was rather rough and the vessel's motions not inconsiderable. I commenced writing my yesterday's Journal, but could not manage it – There was no church playing, no card playing, no pleasant conversation, no talking except sometimes to Miss Stallard, in short it was a very dull day only after dinner I conversed for some time with Miss Hankin a very small, insignificant, young lady of about 20. she has little sense and more conversation than Miss Stallard but nothing of her positively – Of England she knows only Falmouth, where she was born, – before she has lived with her parents in Barbadoes, now six years in Kingston – Mr Jones related a pretty anecdote: he is no more than about 9 years ago, when he lived somewhere in the western part of the county of Sussex; he used there a little girl of his to school, whose education cost 2 pence a week; "in Latin manner" 3 pence – The sea never one deck in the shade 85 F = 23.2 R.

Monday 17 Nov. D. D. D. D. " " "

The sea was smoother & there was more motion than I have experienced since I left Southampton, – the consequence of which was that I felt poorly – I took a cup of tea & then lay down upon my bed – I slept till breach, – I then managed to eat something, but had again to leave it – when lying there two "Stad, Stille & unspeakable" every thing appeared to me – I mean to sit down to dinner, but did not get [illegible] – only after dinner I got myself again – I continued reading Bulla's Nautica, which must be read twice in order to be well understood removed with Mr Fairbrich also with some of the gentlemen, washed the deck & carried in the ad about 10. The passage given Frenchmen in Bay Mancha is known to be always invariably a rough one.

Tuesday 28 Dec. A little before midnight a gun was fired, which awoke me. I dressed in the dark & went on deck. We were going in the Bay of Santa Marcha about ½ mile from shore. The Morro was and near the mouth of the shore and the mountains, of which I am led, some are covered with wood, others with grass, were clearly distinguishable. Out of the Town itself which stretches along the beach, nothing was visible. no light, no house, no human being only the barking of a donkey was heard. a second gun was fired, no body stirred on shore. then the captain determined upon making of the mail with all possible celerity agreed. & All Saints the pursers, they made a shore boat coming off. then came along side of the Steamer, some gentlemen were paid & answered. then mail boat went off again & came back at about 2. the two pursers of the land boat respectively H. M. & H. C. there was two entrances into the harbour, one to the N. other S. then which we came in. the other to the W. between the two, to the N. W. lies a rocky island, called the Morro, there is fortified, as well as the N. & S. of the Land. This bay offers a safe harbour, widely exposed to frequent & sudden squalls, which the cause of some the land about the high mountains, and whilst we were lying there, received sudden gusts of wind blew over the steamer. Patrick died at Santa Marcha. At 2 we steamed away again thro the W. entrance & as soon as we were out of the Bay I went to bed. At midnight on deck 10 F. 22 R. When past 8 I could see land, the land was clearly visible at a distance of about 20 miles. We had passed the mouth of the Magdalena, & here the Town of Savanilla lies. We have a nice breeze, but being somewhat sheltered by the land, the ship's motion is much less, which has enabled to bring up my diary to the very moment, when we

The sea has now more the shape of a great, silver green the dark blue of the Atlantic. It was about 2 I believe, when we were opposite the spot, where the Astraea was lost, and soon after the white walls & towers of Cartagena, with a few steeples and one superior overlopping the same, extending to the very water's edge, opened to us, on one side of the towers rises a prettily high hill, La Popa, crowned large white building, a convent, on the Pope: this looks very pretty & is the more conspicuous, as, with very few exceptions, the land all around is flat. We now went to dinner, as per Clock, and, when I returned on deck, which I did very quickly, for the heat was quite insupportable (the Th: varies on deck from 85 to 88 F - 23½ to 28 R) we had Cartagena as well as La Popa far behind us, many years, perhaps a century even longer ago, one entered the harbour of Cartagena by the boca grande, which is an entrance formed by a long low Island & the main, on the side from which we came, the Spanish Government, in order to impede the entrance to the Pirates from that side, had the channel up with stones & rocks, so that at present no vessels can enter that way. The New Granadians now speak of clearing away these impediments. We had then to round the said long low wooded Island, and to sail down the Boca Chica, an Entrance on the other extremity, which, for some wide is defended by two forts, the one on the Island itself, called el Castillo de San Fernando, the other el Castillo de San José, which occupies the whole of a small rock, and the embrasures of which are just above the level of the water.
The colors of New Granada are red, blue & green in perpendicular stripes, were hoisted on the Castle of San Fernando. As soon as we had passed these two forts, we found ourselves in an extremely long Bay, the most capacious, which I have as yet seen any where: its waters is extremely monotonous, - the low land, which surrounds it, is covered with wood, without any cultivation on the left side two small villages appear, but they are so miserable, consisting of a few houses in both, that they are scarcely worth notice. The water in this bay is quite smooth, and with the exception of a few shallows, there is excellent anchoring ground all over the same, what a splendid harbour this Bay would make for the hands of the English! but in the hands of the considered descendants of the Spaniards the Town & its Trade are going to wreck & ruin. — We anchored at a short distance from the Town. La Tapa with the steward we had now to the right and between the Town & the same upon a lower hill another fort called San Felipe, which bears some resemblance to Edinburgh castle or also to the Castle which lies in the Centre of Santiago de Chile. Of the passengers I am the only one, who converses intimately with Miss Rodericks, — she was now merely dressed in order to go on shore, but then her father & Capt Sharp said, they would not go, because they were not sure, she took other little disappointments very greatly, which pleased me much. — As soon as we were at anchor, the boundary boat came off, and as we have no sick on board, there was of course no difficulty in our landing. Joint Mr James, with the mate & Mr Vendrights keys, — and in another boat, the servant, Mr Rea, — Mr Brandon, the passenger sailing in Carthagena — and we rather, who go on to Chagres, with the exception of Ramsden & Sleigh. — Mr Brandon was the oldest man & there was much jabbering aground, we were easily landed at the quay of Carthagena. In our right we passed an older fortification, called Castelilla, I did not observe a single Cannon in any of the embrasures but along the beach old guns & shot were lying about. — Without any molestation we entered the Town through a large Gate: — In Gabriel Martinez & I remained together and walked all over the Town. — he had a friend of his, who accompanied us & who, after it had got dark took us to "el Café de Jeminis, called de la nueva Granada" where the other passengers joined us, with whom we dined on a Steak we returned on board in a shore boat. — I have

In the Streets I did not see a single one, who was not either a Black or mulatto, one of the rules — I can certainly not say, the fairer sex, not a single specimen of what I should call a Lady, — and above all what shocked me, was to see so many children, black, brown & yellow, play about in the streets in a state of complete Nudity. — In the refectorium I took some nice chocolate, which much agained my taste, & found I Nancy intended upon staying — we then sat down outside in the street to enjoy the sea breeze. For reasons the heat was suffocating — and whilst the others were conversing, I strolled about their rooms of ob- scurely dirty, ill-lit, not at all, or badly lighted streets, — many of the doors of the ground floors were open, to show a miserable lamp & some blacks or mulattoes sitting round the same on the floor or on low seats — some there they were busy laughing or else making — occasionally also I heard the sound of a guitar & some singing — but every thing had some an appearance of filth & squalid misery. — My fellow passengers the Two Brandiers, were a little annoyed at my spending of this, the second Franc in their Brandies — Santa Fé de Bogotá in the finals in such unqualified terms of dislike: — they boasted of what it had been — of what it will be, as soon as it is made a French possession & as soon as the Canal times be there will flag de- lirious be finished. — On my return on board I conversed in the Saloon with Mr Lear & Mr Farren, the latter a little in the wind, & stayed in on the deck at first half past 10. — We take on the years 1840 & 1841 Carthagena was besieged & invested by the Revolutionists belonging to Obando's party, the inhabitants suffered much of famine, but finally the besiegers retired confounded having obtained their object —

Wednesday 25 Nov. The sea was rather rough. after breakfast I managed to write my diary of yesterday, but with much difficulty & as soon as I had done, I hastened to my berth, where I remained, for the first time after having been out 8½ days. I then went on deck back in order, who keep a watch, for all the while I felt very much I lay down on the deck quite flat, passing the time pretty much Reading & Meditation, pretty agreeably. I did work very little at 2 o' Clock the first Bell was struck, & dined well at 3 o'clock, and after dinner I felt considerably better. I read on deck, and to evening before going below I had a long conversation both with Miss Rastrick. At noon on the deck in the shade Th. 85 F = 23 ½ R.

Thursday 29 Nov. The Sky was covered with clouds and had rather a wild appearance, when I went on deck. At 9 o' were opposite Cape Monganillos. The Sea is less agitated than yesterday. Our course from Cartagena to Chagres is West, a hist Land, distance 280 miles. At 10 o'clock we were opposite Porto Bello (the is the portuguese name, which is sometimes changed into the Spanish Puerto Bello); the land was now just distinguishable. Till Lunch Time I was busy arranging my Luggage, which made me prepare to such a degree, as to make the preparations run down my face in actual rills. After Lunch it commenced raining so as to conceal the land from our sight. I lay down in the Ladies Cabin and read a bit of Walter Scott's. I then went to converse with Miss Rastrick, who was in our the Captain's large & convenient berth. We were now opposite Chagres. I took good by to Miss Rastrick, in her Father and Captain Sharp's, after which I attended the disembarking of my Luggage. The Coast was about 4 ½ miles distant, it rose into hills and is covered with wood. Of Chagres itself from where we lay nothing but some fortifications upon the top of a promontory were visible. — The first boat put off with Mr James, the admiralty agent, and the mail; in the second I went with the servants, some passengers & part of the Luggage, the third took the remaining passengers & the remainder of the Luggage. As soon as the boats return called river. after having partaken of their plain supper, I was preparing to descend to my comfortable Cayuco, when the master came to me and invited me to occupy one of a hammock, in which I lay down embraced, covered with my cotton poncho. I slept pretty well. — Here we had the croaking of frogs & the particular call of a bird, which on account of the sound it emits, is called "pecan machado" for the people think that there is some resemblance between the sound & their words. Other birds distinguishable by their peculiar voices.

Monday 24 Nov. Mr Biegas & myself were down at our cayucos at about day break, may be 6 o'clock — now the river commenced to be shallower, so that the Baga in the forepart of the Cayuco made use of a pole, to push it on. — the Cayuco continued dry. — we passed the village La Burgessa, and stopped in the middle of the river near a bank. I breakfasted upon a hard boiled egg, an orange & bread, owing to the unsteadiness of the air I am not at all steady — the Bagas took a batch, after which we moved on and a little past 10 we arrived at Cayuco. here the water was so muddy, that one of the Bagas carried one upon his back to the dry ground & I then followed Mr Biegas to Sandunia Dawda a Dutch merchant to whom I had a Letter from Mr Marguerat. he received me friendly, but as he was just on the point of going out, he did not remain at home on my or Mr Biegas account. — My Bagas brought up my luggage. on opening & examining which, I found that the contents of one of my small portmanteaus had got a little wet. — I then walked about the village which may consist of about 100 houses & has only inhabited by blacks & mulattoes. The houses are like those in

Charges, the roads possibly covered with grass, were however dry when we arrived, owing to the sun shine. they arrived a little & on a little eminence as a decoy stands, which lies pretty in view — Further than a few steps round the village, I could not extend my excursions, on account of the river, swamps & forest which surrounded it — I therefore amused myself a long time with watching the industry of a shoal of large black ants; — they came all busy circling gnawing in pieces the bones of a particular sort of land, and then each of them endeavoured to drag, she and still a small bit of the leaf, larger than the insect itself, just as much as it could carry, in their way attention was first called to them, by seeing a great number of small bits of leaves crossing the footpath, for the ground, the bones which lay on each bit, was concealed under the same — When I returned, Pacra had also come back, he had shot wild ducks & peccaris, — for the first time in my life I saw the latter, with navel, feet, they were ready to be cooked — I should have liked to have tried them, however they were not placed on our table. Mr Diego & my dinner consisted of a stew of bacon, some fried meat & rice, — instead of bread, which is not to be had, boiled plantains & mandioc balls were placed on the table. Diego also name "dolce" I name — for this dinner we were charged 6 rs each — After dinner I commenced conversing with Pacra's youngest daughter, Rosenda, a rather good looking mulatto girl, 18 years old, she wore round a waist of Rawl Co Cloth, la Veronica Rosa", & her conversation was quite as good as might be expected of a girl in her situation of life, her muslin dress was decently tidy. — My father seemed to be quite in his element, for we remained sitting outside the door under a verandah until it near 9 o'Clock, & she did not go in before she was called by her grandmother, who as soon as one enters it, reminds a decayed town with one's face. I asked my way to the hôtel. — Hôtel des Trois Rois, — I arrived, and after some trouble came to such one. I had to walk up stairs & to make myself heard, before any body made his appearance. I was received by a boy des cierges, a gentleman, M. Jaccard, came & offered me a large & tolerable decent looking room with red carpet & mat, with a stretcher bed, a marble table, three Jews chairs & a washhand stand. — I now got out my clean linen & dressed myself, but notwithstanding the shelter afforded by my thick boots, my shoes & stockings were wet through & through. I had to buy a pair of new cotton stockings & appeared at dinner, which was abundant in the usual Table d'hôte fashion. I had little appetite & relished much some slices of marmelade from apples — Jamaica (the manner of the hôtel) an Englishman Johnson, a colonel, appointed as Spaniard, banished from the Equador, two natives & formed the party. Whilst we were at dinner, M. Lévêque whom I remembered having seen in Lima some years ago, came in to call upon me. — we had a very long talk after which I took a boy to show me to M. Dyrnes, for whom I have a letter from Gibbon. — he was just on the point of going out to call upon me. Ingrahame, who has very much changed for the worse since I saw him last about 20 years ago. He is now quite an old man, completely bent down with years, becomes & I may almost say, childish, as if he were in his dotage. — Dyrnes is a pleasant French Switzerman: — he introduced me to his wife and a respectable woman. — We had long conversations & tea, after which I returned to my hôtel. I received Letters from Mary & Anne, — my sister Sarah complains of my long silence & with justice. — I hope my letter which I sent from London on 27 Sept. will have set her mind at rest. — And both she & Anne remain = boats of four or three thousand tuns and of others - but of these we can ordinarily not boast - which are lying in ranks, which are moored with cressets and in the very middle of which I rest in water knee deep at low tide. The principal streets are "la Mercid" in which the Hotel lies - del Comercio, where the shopkeepers live & de las Juanas, with a few stores, where good manufactured are sold by the piece: here Byrnes has his small counting house - also Lewis his store - In these three streets as well as in one or two others, which run in all sporadic towns and cross other at right angles, stores are known with the ground floor and two stories: around galleries or balconies run around the tables. the former, the ground floors, with the doors open, are invariably used for shops - of greater or lesser size. I was told the December is very good - These windows are a very meagre article - shutters, postigos are generally used. - The Ancon is encircled by a wall in a very ruinous condition, ruinous small gaps lead to the Beach, and upon a small piece of elevated ground between the wall & the beach, vegetables, fruit, bread are sold, - it is the smallest place, but a more miserable one I have ever seen. - Now as regards the situations of Panama I am quite puzzled and without a map it is difficult, to form a correct idea of the same. - Turning from the Beach towards the sea, I naturally thought, that I was looking westward, but this was not the case, for more or less the Beach runs East and West. Mr Byrnes told me, that I was living here at the bottom of a deep bay, causes this apparent contradictions, which however for the present, as already said, I cannot solve. - Standing on the Beach with the face towards the sea, I saw to the left of me, a long woody mountainous country stretch out into the sea - to the right I saw no land - but just round the corner as I may say, for Panama lies on a low promontory, various islands are lying before me at a short distance from the land. these Islands are

Friday 28 Nov. Early this morning I sailed from Southampton. Last night the 5 New Granadines, my fellow passengers from England, arrived – The anniversary of the Independence will be celebrated today by a dinner, tomorrow by a ball given in the hotel, the landlord, Sandoval master sailor all the same time. After having breakfasted in the Hotel in company of various gentlemen, the breakfast being as usually, à la Fourchette very abundant, I brought my diary up to the day and then went to Mr Lopez's to undergo a new, he was very busy arranging & making up the Correspondence for to board, sent by the mail, all the known in the different ports pay him a certain amount annually for the forwarding of their letters, he is also Boulanger's correspondent & accordingly the consignees of Boulanger's packets, the Magdalena & Josephina, two small Spanish, nicknamed fast sailing brigs of about 130 Tons each, unfortunately for me as of these two vessels has lately been retained in Paita, so that in order to economize the regular forwarding of the correspondence, Boulanger had been obliged to send down to Panama, the Remadedios a miserable small schooner of about 35 to 40 Tons, in her I am obliged to take my passage for which I pay 10 ounces. – Boulanger had two Casks of the sperm oil of a whaler, arrived upon a trade called la Florida. The postage, which Boulanger charges in my bill, the rates are the following:

Saturday 29 Nov. I passed a pretty good night & rose at 6h. I warded in deck at 7 Shewn dock 81 F = 22 R. We are going along nicely, and much wind, but a heavy sea which causes much motion in the little bit of a vessel. To new left we had the main, not distinguish-able, to the right & in the W. ward Tierra mala, the further most point of the Panama Gulph. I took my breakfast on deck, it was rather greasy; the boiled pigs were plantains & limes squeezing out on same, & about 6 miles distant, the land of the coast of Central America was clearly visible, behind the same hills & mountains. Lying on the Companion. I read Tristram Shandy, at 2 our dinner was placed on deck, plain, but not bad. Th: 87 F = 28 R. great heat, no shelter against the sun. had Carlow the afternoon & night. I staid on deck till midnight.
Sunday 30 Nov. For breakfast I took in bed some boiled rice & sugar, which I had to chaw up as soon as I got on deck. I felt very queer indeed & lay down on deck under a sail. Th 90 F = 26. At 2h we saw to the S.W. about 15 miles distant a waterspout. Out of a heavy Cloud, black as pitch, a grey tube descended towards the water & funnel down, above grey clouds formed the background, it was also distinguishable — but from the sea the water was seen bubbling up & uniting itself with it. Gradually it lost its clearness & distinct outline, until finally it mixed itself up with the surrounding mass of Clouds. At 4 p.m.
I went below. Heavy Rain during the night.
Monday 1 Dec. I rose at 7h it was a cloudy day. At 12, 2h hastily ate cold meat this & heavily my mess indisposition — for how could it otherwise than feel sick with such an abominable motion of the vessel — Dined on deck & to bed. Monday & Tuesday I remained in bed, eating but little.
Wednesday 3 Dec. I managed to get up, & ended the day

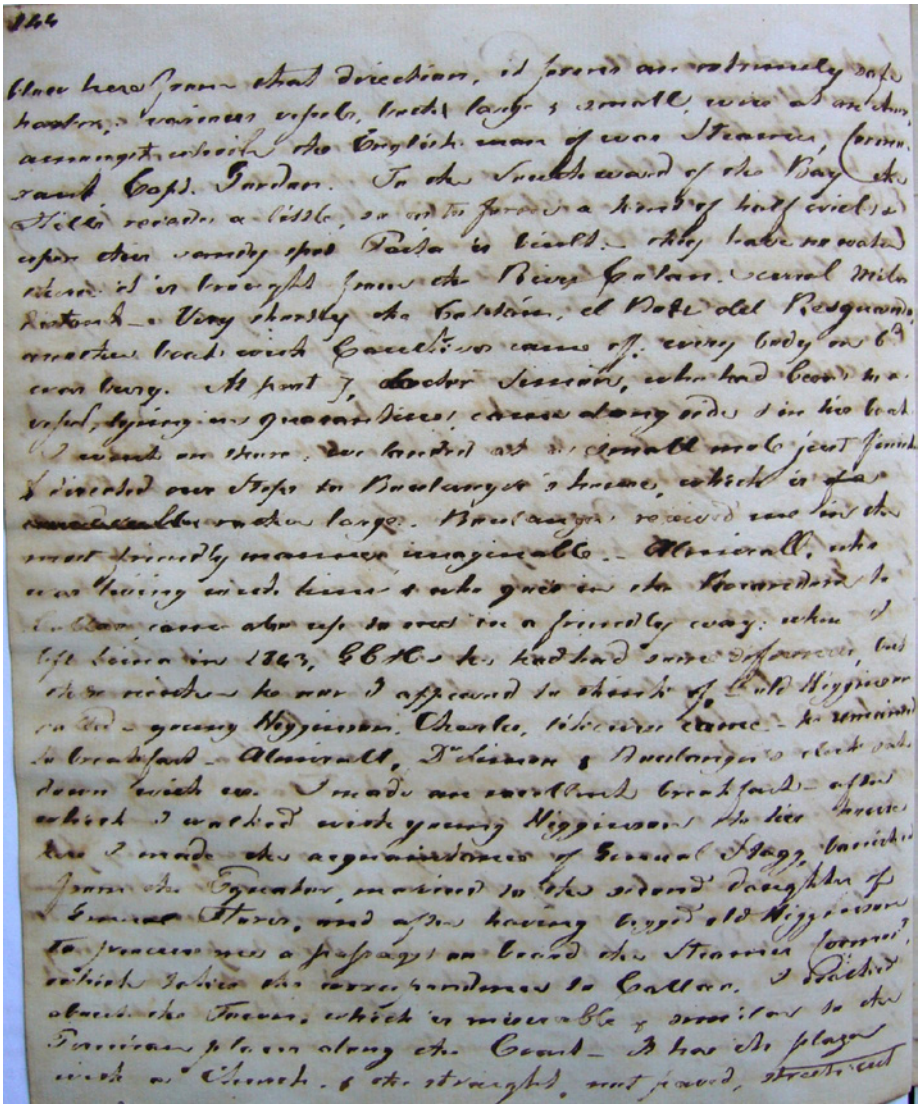
I turn round again & manage to sleep one hour or so. At 8h I rise. perform my ablutions on deck — eat then breakfast. Chocolate rice, chapes or bread & fruit which just about now is then, also fish, when we catch them, we caught some Dorados, Delphines & Bonitas and an Agujon. the latter is long narrow high fish. — I take no tea — after breakfast I lay down upon my French, my pillow under the head and the accompagnes, which are destined for the ward, the bag containing which Dyonis has left upon. They contain little new to me, but it is the best way to pass away the time agreeably. I take up Fridtmann Skandy & the Instrumental Journey. Part of which I have read before, the Italian books Orlando furioso — Jerusalem liberata, also Metastasio & Miss Garland's Translations are my mines & readers which I get in pawly or I do. — sometimes I lay the papers aside & Thirsty, drink at 12 I take a glass of lemonade & then. — I am sorry I must say so, — I endeavour to kill the intervening time. At 1h we dine, about the same as our breakfast with the addition of pancakes with Treacle, & an omelette of wine & water. — Soon after dinner, the Sun is so far down, that I can lay down on the companion my pillow under my head, without being sunshed. I then myself up with my cloaks and Blanket of times past by 8 times to come. — Saturday 6th in the morning we made the land as a point called La Tuba. to the N. E. of S. Mar., 1° 30' N. Tuesday 1th Dec. No change whatever: we proceed gradually towards the Tropic, varying continually my way of living also the same. The temperature is however getting cooler, in the middle of the Day we had in the Shade, Th. 21 & 22 R, last night after sunset 18° F = 14 R. The day, when we passed the line being a cloudy day, we had the coolest temperature. Towards Noon we have usually a cloudless sky of a beautiful dark blue color. This morning we made the first observation, it is bright & has the usual barren and appearance from the very beach the hills rise to a considerable height but behind them are the Cordilleras or snowy Cordilleras is visible. I left Calais 28 May 52. 2 years 9 months have elapsed, but at the sight of the peruvian Coast I do not experience any of those heart thrilling, enchanting & as the same kind pleasant sensations, which I felt when I saw the 1th on 21 Dec. 1. am now only 5 miles of the day, when I shall be able to recognize at least the place against which to my dear Adolph.

Wednesday 1th Dec. This morning we had a heavy sea & rather a strong wind which is generally the case near Cabo Blanco, 4° 13' N. which we made at 1. The Captain had in reef all his sails, Jew as they are, (he is never at rest about the least suspicion!) I was in the Cabin - felt for some while! After having passed the Cape the Sea went down & this evening from 8 to 10 I spent as usually lying on the same hammock & thinking of the past & future.



Thursday 12 Dec. In expectation of soon reaching Paita today, the captain had his cabin cleaned a little. I shaved & got my Clothes ready. At noon. 4° 55' N (Paita is 5° 5') last little wind: our reckoning was almost done. Towards the N. we saw two high hills called el Cerro de la Brea, to the South entrance to Bella de Paita — After dinner the wind coming more Westerly a little, at 4 when the Boat came the Bella de Paita & the Coast could scarce be clearly visible. I stood on deck an hour longer & then went. Taken of the Village by Francis E. Pagel M.A. Rector of Elford & Chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Oxford, which Mr Willcock had made me a present of a few days before I left England. It is a religious book & written to prove &c. &c. and tends to assist the superiority of the English Church in every other Creed. In my opinion it is written in an illiberal, intolerant, bigotted, arrogant Strain — As I suppose no hopes of going on shore — when I reappeared on deck, we were in Paita Bay: to our right a W. wind, the land, — head of us, the lights of Paita were clearly visible — The Boat of the Capitania del Puerto came off, in the name & stead of Boulanger's, who himself is not quite well, & Prieto Senior, the Ecclesiastic Doctor, Lambert's great friend, whom I left in Lima in 1782, he told me, at that very moment, lived in Boulanger's house occupied, and there being no hotel in the pratique & merchant boat had not yet come along side of us, nor body came on board. I watched the deck, morning, read a nice tale of Walter Scott's & proceeded upon deck, the Highland ordered and went to bed at about 11.

Tuesday 23 Dec. I awoke early in the morning and as soon as I heard one of the officers come down to the Captain, that the capitan del puerto had come for the letters and that there was no quarantine, I rose & was on deck as early as 6 h., but as on board of men of war one had gently to submit to the captain's arrangements. I had to stay on board, until he thought proper to send me off. Then I walked the deck till near 9 o' Clock, marveling at many wonderful sights, sometimes with the mother ship Daphne, Herald, Pandora, Brig of war, the two latter sailing ships, were anchored near us, also the Shark, H. B. Majs. ship Victory, Frigat, H. B. Merchant ships, the Enterprize, (Campbell, from Leith) amongst the vessels the Magellan near us made to me. Immediately after breakfast the Captain went on shore to go on board the Daphne, on her return the anchor was heaved in more near the Brig of war. Just when we passed the French man of war. I believe, that there more or less hostile feeling will exist for some time between these two nations for many years to come. We now anchored very close in shore. Callao Bay is open to the N. ed, but as the wind never blows from that quarter it is a very safe anchoring place. In the S. E. is protected against the prevailing winds by the island of San Lorenzo, a barren sandy Island, 3 leagues long, between San Lorenzo & the main lies another similar barren, small Island, called . Callao, as every one knows, is defended by two strong round Castles, also the Custom house are here, the town is situated as upon the S. Eastern shore the Tower. After entering Lima about Carlos Tales I was struck with the miserable looks of the houses they are more & less dirty, the white wash & paint are rubbed off and mix with another they have a miserable dilapidated appearance. In the calle de la merced the main steps here I alighted & walked with Jean to my house we walked down the portal de Escalera & into the Plaza and every thing was so well known to me as if I had been absent only a few days. In my house were Margarita Peniguela, Comadre & Dª Rosa were in the bedroom, of course we embraced each other tenderly, I believe they were glad to see me again & I am sure I rejoiced to see them. Margarita may perhaps look a little older, but of the two the change is not very perceptible. In Peniguela there is not much alteration - Comadre has grown very much. Dª Rosa looks considerably altered is completely lame upon her right arm, in fact she cannot move at all. The remainder of this day as well as Wednesday 24 Dec, Thursday 25 & Friday 26 Dec were all spent by me more or less in the same manner. I had much to relate, received many visits both in the day time & in the evening (being a remainder of existing custom) were sent congratulating Merry Xmas & many returned. I could spare a couple of days in arranging my room. By Friday morning I had every thing in pretty good order & I am now at 2 p.m. writing the present. The in the shade in the gallery which runs round the patio of my house 75½ R. - 85 F. Here is a list of those who called. Dr Paroissien Melendez - alias Mr Bergmacher - his two sons - Mr Bosch, the Belgian Chargé d'affaires who paid me a long visit - Mr le Moine, the French Chargé - Mr. Marchipieux, who has been Italian Consul the same capacity, but having been recalled, returns now to France by the next packet via Panama - his secretary - Farmer Jack of Arequipa, who is going home via

Mr Juan Villamil, whose daughter, Mercedes, Mariq.ª de Comadre, has married, and meanwhile keeps here in Lima a store of produce of the country. In the morning Mariano Blas Fiscal of Aud.ª, principio de Estado called.

Sunday 28 Dec.r Shine my Calcony out the Shade at 9. 6l. 5 12. 18. Mariq.ª de Orrigoitia went as usually to mass. I waited home, and the French Admiral late, say at half an o'clock, after which I had only to dress and to begin paying my visits. I first went to Henry Read's house, a fine large building, belonging to the family of Gamboa, in my absence, his first wife, Antonia Lopez of Arequipa, has died, & he has married her sister, Manuela, unfortunately this poor fellow has addicted himself so much to drink, as to injure & completely upset his constitution, he as well as his wife have now gone to Miraflores — Thence I went to Redondel, who I took round of his Estate was working in his sugar plantations, since a few years he is partner of Gibbs Smith & Co. house, — he was very friendly and we conversed on many many things, he showed me how the whole affairs are managed by Hillmann & are now by him; they are kept in excellent order — Old Mr Palacios was the next, upon whom I called; I had a very long talk with her; — Le Moine & Dorbe I was very sorry not to find at home; Mr Barrere, the French Charge in Bolivia, now recalled, & his wife were very busy packing up & arranging their things for their voyage; on 1st Sunday they leave for Panama, & therefore remained but a short time. — At Mr Pinchen's I had to converse for a considerable time with Dr Sanchez Boquerundo a Priest, Mrs Pinchen's mother; she is considered to be very amiable & interesting, but she does not please me at all; she is also a wants to be young, rather loud, pert, talkative — near her was the orphan girl Dolores Alzua, Mr Pinchen's cousin, an extremely pretty young lady — & vis à vis of them Mr Campe, a Guayaquileno, whose acquaintance I have, brother of Mrs Arnaiz, an old Peruvian Merchant. Mr Pinchen had arrived at 12 o'clock from his house in Monrovia, having made 13 leagues since half Eleven in the morning after having taken a warm bath. he came out to see me & we had a very long conversation on a number of topics of interest to him & myself, whilst he went to dress. I played a game at chess with Dr Salazar, whom I beat of course. I remained to dinner, which I did not like at all — Ygnes, Pflücker's partner in the mine, came. After dinner we went together & went to the ladies. Pflücker & Ygnes joined us again, — they had chosen the album of Dr Ricardo Caballero, with which an amusing evening past so I left together with Comradena, who had spent the day at Pflücker's, as play fellows to little Francisca. At home I found Garland — Juan came & we did not go to bed till a late hour.

Monday 29 Dec. It is in the same spot as yesterday, where I leave it hanging, at 8 o'Cl. 15 Sept. The whole morning I was busy writing in my room, Enriqueta & Comradina were always with me occupied some way or other with exercising, French, (the former) english (the latter) &c. After dinner I went to Rocca y Sarzo who has bought a large house in the Calle of San José, from the heirs Salazar y Vaquejano. I requested him to give me some informations respecting the state of the market, with which he was rather chary. In the drawing room up stairs I saw his wife, not Lady Claiborn, but rather insignificant — At home I was again occupied with my patterns — Towards tea time D. Mamerta Duenas, wife of Juan Aliaga called, also the old Mistress Villamil. the former I received here — I then went with my patterns to Blt's evening shower. The only ones, who were at work, were Hittmann below & Pflücker above. Ygnes was with the latter & after he Ygnes had gone. I staid with Pflücker conversing with him telling his opinions on many things till nearly midnight. It is wonderful, how extraordinarily kind & willing to serve

Tuesday 30 Dec. At 9 h. 15 m. 7 s. P.M. This whole morning I was busy writing in my room to Liverpool. I also wrote to the Prussian Government, inclosing my Commission as Consul General, and some way or other was occupied until dinner time at 5 h. o'Clock: when various gentlemen, whom I had invited, to meet some Friends of Cerqueira, came in; at 5 h. we went to our dining room & sat down as follows: Cerq.a at the head, to his left Jack, then Cerqueira, Pfeiffer, Garland, I at the foot, round the corner, Reinhardt, Jean, Cerqueira, Rebecca, Old Villamil. Our dinner was excellent, but in my opinion too abundant, we had Claret, Hock, Sherry, a portuguese wine, Champagne, Port & Madeira, when we were taking tea, Mr Rosa, a very handsome woman, the wife of Mr Vicente Rosa, superintendant of the Quarter and brother of old Pfeiffer's mother, came in, - after we had tea, Dolores came, Cerqueira sang, one at about 9 h. o'Clock. Villamil, Pfeiffer, Garland are very busy with their correspondence for the Brazils, the Brigg, for Tarragona, Mendanger's packet sails on 2d Jany, for Pernambuco & Bahia, the Commerce about the same time. Maceio - I went to bed as soon as the guests had left.

Wednesday 31 Dec. At 11 h. 15 m. 30 s. A. M. a clear day. I arranged my papers, and was a long while with Serrado, who gave me information regarding Cit. Clerk, Rheinfing. I then wrote a long letter to Mr. J. giving an order for the purchase of various manufactured articles for the amount of about 1000 £, which occupied me not only the whole forenoon, but even after dinner until about 4 o'Clock, when Mrs. Mascarenhas & her wife called, to bid us good bye, after which I remained with my family, taking tea & conversing till midnight. Now departed of the new year, ever of the two last years! Last night I was quietly by myself in an hotel in Genoa, the year before at Krauer's, in Altona. To Bed Adam & I answered till 3 h. o'Clock in the morning. -

Thursday 1 January. Another year has elapsed. What will be the result of my affairs at the end of the present year? what will then be my plans? Shall I ever return with all my family to Europe? All this is concealed in the womb of futurity. But, whatever may happen, I shall always endeavour to do what is right & proper. — Thursday 29 Oct. 1846. Till about 11 o'Clock I was in my room arranging, writing &c. I then dressed & went out to pay visits. The first, whom I called upon, was the Augustin Friar, as foolish example follows, who has his rooms (for cells they cannot be called) which he inhabits in the convent, furnished like a Jewish master. The next visit, I paid was to Mr. Henry Wyman of Trujillo. Trinidad daughter of the Expresident Colegrove. After having dined my way some time, her father daughter came out to tell me, that she should me must happy to see me on Sunday next in the playera. to be Married here old Mr Gomez, whom I was in the habit of visiting frequently in 1829. A young lady met me, I thought at first, that she was the elder daughter, Rafaela, married to Romulus Zevallos, but she herself recognizing myself immediately introduced herself to me as Mariquita, the youngest sister, married to a certain Alvarado. I was well pleased with her way of conversing. In the conversation of the same house Miss Dª Chepa Boza of Sta, widow of Wm of the Callao, her sister received me, very common & disagreeable. At the Tristans I found every thing shut up. — also at Dª Juanita Valle Riestras widow of Admiral Guise, I had to wait some time, she however made her appearance, & conversed with her pleasantly enough for about half an hour. it is a pity, she does not keep her teeth clean. At Ormeño's none of the Ladies made her appearance with Dª Cristina I staid for some Time. — At Juan de Dios Calderon's I saw only the two wife, an insignificant but appear very good natured little bit of a woman — At Dupernay's were various visitors — D'Caramuru, Riedewald, Duprevoux and a Native, whom I do not know — Mr Duprevoux was agreeable — but whom I was much pleased with much more so, than I thought — I should by, was D'Chevalita, a pretty nice girl, with whom I conversed a little — At home of various visitors had tired me. Garland & Rincho dined with us as usually. it is very disagreable, that these two are on such bad terms, as not to exchange a single word with each other. I try hard to keep in very composure towards them, an exact balance between them, so as not to give the preference to either — After dinner I called upon James Tack & Frederick Maitcott, the latter just arrived from Arg.ª, but found neither at home. Garland & I then took a walk together thro' the "Mamedas" as far as Mr. Tack's and the Evening we spent generally at home with him & Rincho. Mr James with his daughter called & remained about an hour — It is rather an irksome way of passing the time every day I am more & more confirmed in my determination to return to Europe some day or other Friday 2 June. Before breakfast I called upon James Tack, who lives at Peter Cearny's — the grandest, best Mde. in which he received me, is prettily, I may say, splendidly furnished, with looking glasses, handsome carpets, curtains, chairs, sophas &c. I told Tack, that should he have spoken of establishing a house in Lima, I should be glad, if any arrangements could be made between us to our mutual advantage & that I was open to any proposal, he or his brother might make me. In return he replied, that he was glad, I had spoken to him, because I had only anticipated him. we had some desultory conversation & we separated, he promising to write to me from Liverpool. — Dined now, past noon, Pr 80 & 2 1/2 R. I have done nothing but, endeavour arranging my room & writing my diary I shall write various letters in order to Carmen Torrente, D. Rincho's were all very pleasant & friendly. Mrs Yrun I did not find at home, but left my card. nearly opposite lives D. Manuela Martina, wife of Don Domingo Fortun & gravida of Mac Call, her youngest daughter, quite a child, received me, & we had to wait pretty long before the mother & her eldest sister appeared. The mother was many years ago one of the handsomest women of Lima, rather stout, at present she has lost much of her beauty, she has become dumb, but nevertheless she still good looking and very agreeable in her conversation. Mrs Tuesta of Arequipa I did not find at home. Lodges in style. she husband, Bernardino, the great gambler, is now proprietor of a silver mine in Copiapo & is doing well. His wife is an agreeable woman, the daughter did not make their appearance, her young Mexicans were with her. The Mexicans are considered one of the first families here. the mother is dead, one of the daughters is married to Pizarro. the three surviving daughters are extremely dark, but said to be pleasant. the father a very old man. D. Pancha Torre, a lady of Chiquinaca, widow of the late minister to Torre, is a pleasant woman, whom I visited today. she is also good looking, and many visitors were with her, amongst whom also Mrs. Letcarnal of La Fay & Legarde of Engl. Mrs Thomas Legarde the wife of the rich D. Mariano, is a disagreeable stupid woman. Mrs Thomas Conray has grown very stout since I last saw her. she has a very large family, no less than 10 children, of whom the two eldest boys are in England by the Magellan a present for the children. a Miss Slater, has come out for the children, she is four pretty. I conversed with her a few words & she did not displease me. Mexicans Thomas I did not find at home. In the hotel of Mauny's I went to see young Don Cesareo Alzua. It was about 4 o'clock. when Juan & I came home. Garland & Reinike dined with us casually. Pizarro & I went to the Alameda. it was a beautiful evening. both rivers & some stars were out. Manuel Garland took tea with us. he read to us aloud some pages of a book of Garland's called "los Espanoles devorados por el mismo"; when they was all gone. I commenced reading till midnight Clairmont's Town of London."

Monday 5 January. Craigwater told me, that she had seen a most shocking of an Earthquake in the night. Th. at 9h C. 14 - 11 at noon 14. 21. During the whole morning my Time is taken up with teaching Craig's Comadrines so that until now 12 C. I have not been able to do any thing but writing my diary. - Nobody else hearing tells an Earthquake, Craig's mind to misbelief with regard to the same. I was busy writing at home the whole day until 5 p.m. when I went to Fl[illegible]'s round house and conversed with Garland & afterwards with Fletcher on various topics, also regard my money in their hands, in the morning I had given an order on Fl[illegible] gave Reinicke for www £. Fletcher's 100 rix ℔ I have prolonged for a year. At home I found only Garland & Swan, the latter not quite well. I gained a game at Chess from Swan & another from Mr. The prussian Government has observed to me my Comm. as Consul General provided with the Exequatur.

Tuesday 6 January. Feast of Kings. Tuesday, Epiphany & King. I rose before 6 o'Clock and at 7 o'Clock I rode on a pretty black lady's horse, of which Garland has made a present to Craigwater saddled with Swan's Saddle, to Fletcher's house. Craigwater was already up & visible. we took a cup of coffee and then started for Thorrillos, viz. Fletcher & his little boy Frederick in a light nice Rig on four wheels, drawn by one horse, Liberato Algeras with Carlos & I on horseback. In the beginning I was rather timorous, but gradually I got me well; the horse has a poor pace, but a convenient & quick canter. We rode out of the town thro' the Guadelupe Gate. The Road to Thorrillos is very miserable; it is sandy, on both sides are low mud walls. Tapias, and the fields are not much cultivated, - here & there they are green - but upon the evening. Ffletcher Irish has with us — I omitted to say, that in the morning on our return from Chorrillos we looked in at Julio Ffletcher's new Miraflores — in the two years of my absence he has much changed: he looks considerably older than he did before. He lives he inhabits in Miraflores, is living with a Spanish girl. he has 6 children. 5 boys 1 girl, but none is pretty: his wife is very dark. The families have long been on bad terms; but now it appears, they have made it up, at least old Ffletcher was very friendly towards all of them. — I saw were Mrs Julio Ffletcher — the children towards him & her boys Carlitos & Federico —

Wednesday & Thursday } Nothing particular. I was busy writing letters to Dickeltz, the Danish & Prussian Consuls, to Mr Matthiesen & to Sheridan Knowles. — I also endeavoured to collect useful information respecting the State of the markets. — on Wednesday I was many hours with Manuel Olagues for that purpose. — on Tuesday I saw Malagrida, Dr Tabo, Mr Rodrigo, Domingo Castaneda, Mac Lachl, Henry Higgins, that is to say, I met them here & there. — On Thursday Henry Higginson came in the morning to me from Callao, to make some arrangement with me about the prod. agency, which I intend giving to him & his partner Agüero who have just established themselves. On Tuesday I went after dinner to Thomas Conroy, to tell him that this was my intention & to beg him not to take it amiss — In the Republic of the Equador Vicente Roca has been elected President: accord to the Constitution the presidents must have 2/3 of the votes, & it lasted several days, before any one of the candidates, who had voted for Olmedo, would give in, so as to give Roca the number of votes required. — Here on Peru many things go on quietly with Ramon Castilla as president. The Government have returned to me my Consul Commission as Prussian Consul provided with their Exequatur — Peru is unwell since Sunday with a swell in the glooms of his Grave. A Ceremony attended him — Friday 9 Jany. I was busy from the morning till the evening, collecting information & writing Letters. At 7 o'clock I went out with my wife in the Calesin to pay visits, first to a Mr Salaverry, the same with whom in the beginning of 1843 I had spent at Manuel's in Tarapoto.

She is from Moquegua, an insignificant, but not unpleasant woman, next to two old ladies, both Nieves, who have for a long time been living in La Paz, they are Arequipenas by birth, and now widows of fortune & intend spending the remainder of their days in Lima: pretty furnished house, carpeting, a lamp on a round table in the middle of the room, looking glasses are seldom found wanting in Lima in any house in Lima, the owners of which make any pretensions in gentility; curtains to the windows are not in general. The third visit we paid was to Manuel Salazar, who lives with his pretty young wife Mercy Mendiburu in an elegantly furnished house: she was very agreeable indeed, Mary conversed with her "Tacaya" & with D. Manuel. — Our last visit was to the marquesa Fuente Gonzalo, an old devil: — in her house all was dirty, old fashioned, dark: — we had to pass thro' two or three antic. rooms, all lighted up by one system candles which in a common hall lamps hanging from the ceiling. — the Sanctum Sanctorum was lighted up in the same way: here the old lady, miserably dressed, was received, sitting on an old Sopha: — in two corners of the room stood two dirty cupboards, painted grey with golden lists, covered with dust & dirt, as well as the windows of the same, their white panes glass & earthen ware were dirtying unheard: — a chest of drawers with brass handles was another piece of furniture, — upon a table stood sweetmeats & a number of bottles with cold water — We left at half p. 8 o'C. at home we took tea. — Isabel was already gone. — Timoteo & Manuel. Velarde came there, — afterwards ladies

Moine was within. she is an agreeable good looking young lady & with great pleasure did I remain some time with her, conversing in French. – At J. Mar. Alvarez's I saw only his stout wife, conversing with me about venereal diseases! – M.ª Del Pozo Nuevo & M.ª Merck had gone to Chorrillos – Barcalla I did not find at home – Vicente Oyague at his formal evening I was well pleased with – D.ª Aragonesa Tristan I do not fancy much – still less D.ª Victoria, her daughter, the wife of D.ª Pedro Echenique – Old Centeno, old Villamil I did not see at home, – with Carlos Cajigas, who lives in the House of Nicolas Rodrigo I staid a long while. – he has a great mind to form an Establishment with me in joint concern – Home at 4 o'Clock, when I returned home: Marcoleta of Arequipa, Manuel Velarde Ministr.º Villamil, Nemesio Garland dined with us, we had a pleasant party without ceremony – after dinner Charles Bergmann, Brigmann & Salbuchen looked in, – then old Centeno came to take tea with us, – at 9 o'C. I got away to call upon Mr. Fletcher's, – at first only D.ª Gertrudis, Franc.ª & Librada Alzua were present – then Fletcher's came, & after him D.ª Conchita Berenguera with the handsome Dolores Nieto. – I remained conversing with Fletcher till 11 o'Cl. –

March 29, Saturday. Wind S.W. a.m. Fine & Clear. This was again a Day of many visits & little writing. Three Times I went to the palace to see the ministers Mr. Sullivan, in order to introduce me to the President, but did not find him. The people I called upon were the following lawyers Barriga & Urrea, with both of whom I remained a few minutes only, the same with old M.r John Maclean. – with M.r Gilfert I staid a pretty long Time, he me also is always friendly, but Marco.ª young fellow, Carolina a tall fair not badly looking, but rather a little stupid looking girl – Guillermo, who is at Cotabalos I have not seen yet – Ramon I did not find at home – both wish D. Pablo Calderon, the wife of Vicente Rocafuerte, & Mariuga Torres, Juana Aliaga's wife. I remained some time conversing pleasantly enough: these women are very nicely furnished. I also paid nearly half an hour with D. Carmen Carrasco, a stout woman, who I have no doubt, one might make love to without her getting angry In the same house up stairs a very old man, Don Sotomayor, an acquaintance of Mariq.ª's, lay unwell in bed, he was very thankful for my visit – Yesterday, whilst I was absent, Sr Orrido introduced to Mariq.ª a French tourist, Maugin or who belong to a scientific expedition. I went to see them at Mariq.ª's hotel, but did not find them at home. Notary Molendez & Vera, the bro-

-in-law of Mdg.ª Villamil, nephew to Sotomayor, I also called upon, in the evening I went with Mariq.ª to some ladies. Pérez. of Arcq.ª, one of them Manuela, wife of Pacheco of Lampa, has had 12 children of whom 12 are alive, & two miscarriages, & looks still very well. – At our return home we found D. Jos Tristan & Ramirez general, J. M. Obando, of the Equator, who is supposed to have been the author of the assassination of General Sucre, many years ago – He is tall & broad shouldered, his face pale, a remarkable nose, his mouth, his nose rather large, his eyes lively, but small & much set in, their color apparently blue – his hair, fair just turning to grey. In my opinion his appearance has nothing which strikes the attention particularly – I slept next to him on the same cabin, as I observed, that he did not clean himself at all, when getting up in the morning. I got but little acquainted with him –

Wednesday 14 Jany. After an excellent night's rest I rose as the weather was delightful, we breakfasted, & were then abreast the Chincha Islands, which are Guano, they look riddish; a little further Northward lies the Island of San Gallan. At about 11 we neared the Coast, along which vegetation extends for some distance, – close to the shore we distinguished a few buildings, the Custom-houses of Pisco, – about one English miles from the shore, the Town itself with its steeples – A heavy surf renders the landing here always difficult, sometimes dangerous. At 12 we came to an anchor, when a great many passengers landed here, a few vessels were lying in the port. At a short distance from where we were lying, the water presented a strange appearance, a distinct line of fresh or foam separated the dirty water nearer the shore in which we were lying from the clearer water outside –; on my enquiring the reason assigned was, that the waters of the river, which here empties into the Sea at Pisco, extend their influence so far. At 1 3/4 we started again. Our course lay thro' the Bogueron between the main & the Island of San Gallan. From Robertson's Letters I noted that Francia died 20 Sept 1840, 21 years de

Friday 16 Feby. At 11½ a. m. opposite Caracas, where the Land which runs thro' the valley of Major Guaricuto the Sea: vegetation stands along the Coast for a pretty considerable distance. Further on we passed Puerto Cabello, we dined on board & at 5 p. m. [illegible] came to an anchor at Porto Cabello, the coast is here again wooded as it possibly can be. Above the high coast the Custom-house, a fortification larger & the others miserable buildings of Porto Cabello. Various English & other ships were at anchor in the port, — in reality nothing but the open sea, defended to the Southward by various islands. — there were the Ville, the Nautilus, the Vicar of Bray, which took me home 1763. Seymour, Sawyer now captain, Ward's black Cuba came on board. the two former were particularly friendly. I went on shore in the Pinnace boat. the landing at Porto Cabello is very bad. there is no mole: only a rock sticks out into the sea, whence a few wooden steps lead down particularly on each side of which is a handrail & holding hold of which you clamber with as much difficulty as, if not more than up a vessel's side. My little luggage passed unsearched, Sawyer & Seymour showed me to Schmidt's habitation, two large Rooms, up a staircase, void of decent furniture. however I got a stretcher a mattrass. Schmidt gave me a blanket, a pillow & sheets as [illegible] bed was made up for me. He recommend a great deal about Mr. Schmidt, Bishop, then went to Ward, always the same good fellow. we took tea with him & went to bed at about 11. Schmidt, who has Graeff's communicated another to Mr. Williams, but, after having written them, I was not pleased with them, so, I did not send them off. Mr. Taylor's called an insignificant, but not disagreeable man — the same character I gave of Mr. Vance, manner quiet, lady is timid, Virginian, the youngest of the children, whilst Mr. Hamilton is a rough, dirty, disagreeable Scotchman. We dined to-day somewhat earlier, Schwartz has an excellent cook & keeps every thing in the very nicest style & order — After dinner I took a ride with Mr. Wilson the horse, which Schwartz had procured for me, was not of the best, so that at first owing to my bad horsemanship, I was timid & made but a bad figure, gradually I however got over it. The Environs of Tarare are very barren; some stones cover the plain between two ridges of arid sandy hills, in which plain the Tomatoes, it is true, that here & there some fields are cultivated & trees go, between which I observed some cotton trees, however the want of water is always but too perceptible, no rapid, what they call here, dry rivers, bridges over, full of stones & without a drop of water, these only take on certain days the water flows. We passed near the English protestant churchyard, a small piece of ground in the prairies of sandy plain, surrounded by a whitewashed wall — To the Southwards a ridge of mountains rises; the highest summits are the snowcapped peaks of Tarare, at the foot of which the road passes to La Toy, when these summits were still illuminated by the rays of the setting sun, whilst they had already disappeared from the plain & the lower mountains, this presents a handsome prospect — The evening itself was delightful — We returned at 8, took tea at home, conversed & when Schwartz went to his office I went to Bed at 10. I am reading Bulwer's last by the barons, which please me exceedingly. The last of the Barons is Warwick, the King-maker — A midnight we had a second shock of an earthquake.

Wednesday 26 January. Schwartz & his clerks had visited all us in the morning, we therefore breakfasted late. After which Schwartz I accompanied Mr Wilson to 3 little ladies whom he invited hop'ed us to the evening. he also took her opinion, whom to invite. Mr Wilson did not appear, but two of his children, two little girls. Thence we went to L. Mr. Pividal's second home, he is a pleasant man & we conversed some time with him — Jacobs & Vanes: Mrs Vanes is a tall thin woman, not over amiable. I also called upon Hannewacks with Schutte upon L. Stevenson. At about 8 o'Cl. a pleasant little party assembled at Schwartz's, viz. Wilson & his wife the undoubtedly the most interesting & agreeable of all pleasants. — Mrs / Mr Maclean, the latter a native, whom I took no notice of, together with a relation of his a Miss Jack, a young brunet faced healthy Scotch girl, who enjoys dancing, but whose conversation is rather insipid. Mrs & Mr Pividal, the latter an elderly lady, with her two daughters, one in the family way, but who nevertheless danced uncommonly much to Luthers, Wilson's agent. — the younger, Jeannette, a nice blooming young girl, quite European looking & excellent dancer. — Dr Vanes, his lady, an old vulgar native lady, Arriaga, with married Dr Vanes, face with her two daughters, the elder, very dark brunet, apparently ruged, but otherwise not badly looking in her dress. — the younger, in black, insignificant. — The gentlemen I do not remember, nor do I know them. There were various clerks, upon the whole, nice young men, but the only thing I have against them, is that knocked up a wind to see. Schwartz took Schultz & me to the theatre, a barn with an open place in the middle, filled with benches, this is the pit, covered with an awning, round the pit is a sort scaffolding, up to which on each side are narrow steps leads, this scaffolding is divided in a few large compartments, ycleept boxes, we went to one of them, belonging jointly to Wikens, Wellmann, Schwartz, the parties present are quite exposed to the view of every one, the boxes not being divided into small rooms as in Lima, but by low railings as in London & Hamburg. Mrs Wilcox sitting in the middle of her box in a large easy chair. Schwartz behind her & very attentive to her. The house was lighted up by spermaceti, the performance might have been worse, however the loud voice of the prompter & the occasional appearance of his hands & feet were displeasing. We had a comedy, a solo by a single female dancer & a jubilee. Schultz & I went next for the admittance Mr Maclean's box, where I sat down near Miss Duck, with whom I conversed nearly the whole time. Mr Schwartz, Schwartz & accompanied the Wilcoxs home, but Mr W. being very sleepy, we did not stay long, but went home, where we arrived at finding us

Friday 23 January. To day of to new Pernambuco was an addition to our breakfast party. Schultz brought his contract with Maclean to be done. I read the last of the barrels we arranged our few things & started at 11½ without a guide after having given thanks to Schwartz for his extremely kind reception. The horse which I rode, was so lazy, young or weak, that at length our 6 leagues distance from Tacna, - Schultz being ahead of me - it would not go on any further. I had to dismount & to pull it. Fortunately Schultz looked back & rode up to me; he being a better rider than I, rode it, abandoning his horse by which he broke at

we went on pretty well, the Schuttle went much different for the least could not go at all fortunately at the halfway hut we met a boy on horseback driving cattle before him. the Schuttle resented & giving him a gratification of 6d induced him to change horses now we crept on much better, of the sandy desert road of course nothing to be said. - about 2 leagues we came to some trees & hut, there the road turns to the left, - owing to the sea breeze, the heat was not excessive nevertheless our faces were a little burnt - it about 8 o'clock we in Arica, & where stopping Pollard's house, his partner Rodgers, from Berlin, called us to dine with him, which we did with pleasure. His wife is handsome & pleasant, has sister, rather dandified, upon whom we called last Sunday morning, is also disagreeable either. dinner was soon, the wines were bad. after dinner we had tea & we conversed till 10. Pollard had to go to his office to answer the letters received from Tacna. our baggage was carried to a Room, belonging to Mr Trividal, Pollard's partner, it was carpeted, nicely furnished & provided with 2 bedsteads. we slept soundly till Saturday 24 January past 8 o Clock. From our balcony we have a splendid view over the sea just before us - the weather is delightful. We in our room 76 Fr. 17 Sts. We went to see Mr Bock, supercargo of the Georgy Henry, a N. A. ship, consigned to Maclean, he promised us a passage to Islay.

We breakfasted with Pollard, only his wife made her appearance, daylights she looks a little yellowish, but is always rather healthy. We conversed till nearly 12. I then returned to my room & read "les miserables de Londres". Takeda, a Russian captain of the Forte, called upon Schuttle, we then partook up our things. had them carried to the mole & back against the winds. the Lighthouse near Point de Nau, which it was found not to be, & we were a Board of Tacks with a nice breeze we wind along, the breeze slackened again, however at about 6 we came to an anchor in very deep water in Play bay, only the Victorieux was there, only the frenchmen men of war, Lionne, abandoned, the remnant of the Venetian Navy. We went on shore to Schuttle's house. the head man received us full very glad we took tea with Ward, & I then paid a visit to Dow, a man with whom Anita Gibson lives for the present at Corfu. both families received me in a friendly manner.

Tuesday 27 June. Schuttle had been speaking the previous night about getting up early & starting at 2 o'clock in the morning. myself had not opposed this plan, but I was certain, it would not be carried into effect, and so it turned out. I was the only one, who awoke at 2 ½ o'C., & called Schuttle, who was then of opinion, that it was already too late, & therefore laid down quietly till about 5 when we all got up. we took some tea, & at 6 we started, viz. Schuttle, his black Lad & myself, each mounted by an old muleteer Latinas. we rode their mules, their horses went loose & our luggage was carried by two mules. Immediately on leaving Foligno, the road ascends gradually, to the right we have a small hill of water, in brick tubes, 6d from a distance of about 2 Engl. miles. the soil is sandy & arid. at a distance of about 2 Engl. miles we come to a small village called Pissignano, where some olive trees grow. this village lies between two ridges of hills, which in the rainy seasons say May, June, July, are covered with grass, then called Pomar. now they are burned by the heat & have a burnt brownish appearance, however on the side a few hundred north of the hill is a small spring, which we rode, by gentle grades to our beasts. Ebrulle la Jara & I now left our muleteers behind us, and rode on. From Huancayo onwards the roads ascends much more perceptibly, than from Tarma to Huancayo it winds between the two ridges of the hill, the soil is sandy & only here & there some dry dusky bush stands. we were favored by the weather, the sky being overcast, and thus with the excellent beasts, which we had, we reached the summit in an unusually short time, at 9 o'clock we were on the top, where a rock stands, — a long water dried sandy extended before us; in former years it was the custom of keeping much to the left and so descend into the valley of Tarma, on the way to Huancayo, since a pass the post had been moved from Tarma to Jauja, this way of travelling was altered, & passengers must guide to the right at the end of the plain stood and probably still stands a Tambo — there we had to pass a high ridge of mountains, on the other side of which lies the village of Huancayo, thro' which the road led to Huancayo. now, since a few months, a new road has been cherished out, which going in the middle of the valley has the advantage of being shorter than that thro' Tarma, and of avoiding high mountains on which the Huancayo, Tarma chain which is however extremely is. After having rode about a quarter of an hour, we alighted, spread our ponchos and took a breakfast good of cold fowl, bread and Bordeaux wine. — we mounted at 9½ & rode leaving in sight, we reached the same Tambo at 12½.

Ebrulle & la Jara much more fatigued than I, at about 11 the sun had dispersed the clouds & heat which we had been fearing so much then, & the last hour & a half we suffered much of heat. The Tambo consists of some poorly con-

[illegible] badly board buildings, with a few plain tables, benches, & stretchers, upon which mattrasses were laid, & we lay down upon them. The owner of the Tombo is a certain Mustapha, who precedes the travellers with plain food, viz. tea &c, & the beasts with grass & water, - the latter is by far the most expensive article. - Both water & grass being carried thither from Velor. - At 2 o Clock our dinner consisting of a few Cheese, Conserves, Bread &c, was ready. - Schmelle carried Claret & one Bottle of Champagne with him, - the latter were mixed with water as a pleasant beverage. - La Jara & Schmelle were still much tired, we again lay down, and I had some trouble to persuade them that it would be better to start again in the afternoon than to pass all midnight, which La Jara abhorred strongly however at 4 o Clock we mounted again as at the middle heard & went on at a pompous rate upon our horses for a considerable distance at broad road is swept thro' the plain, so as to make it impossible to lose the way. - This last night we came to a hilly barbarous ground with various ascents & descents, a continuation of the ridge of mountains, which we had to cross by the former road, it is true that with the exception of the two last descents to Ubbinnago, we had no particularly high hills to pass, but then again we had to wade thro' much deep sand - The Alledones, which cover the desert, thro' which we passed, formed a strange appearance. - They are bits of any light coloured sand, which the prevailing South blows together & which are shifting, their shape is invariably that of a horse shoe, the convex side, rising gradually, to the S. the concave side falling of abruptly, to the N. &c. - they vary much. - there are some, the points of the crescent

(I e a ride, he in 20 days), his wife, her two brothers, the grangers, Dal, the elder, the Doctor, neither of them very amiable — Johnson always "adulon", but not disagreeable — Stella, Hunt's daughter by Juanita (Chevero, a real handsome, but apparently good girl — Ward's eldest son, who has been educated in England & who speaks English like an Englishman & whom Ward has also gotten Fabian under his charge — Escamilla, Febres wife, with her daughter Escamilla also came in — & conversing we spend the hours very pleasantly till past 12. At home I found Estrella in Bed, Rosita still upon, and Kendall (el ojo de Diego) whom Mclaughlin has left in his stead, before the same, conversing together — I have hitherto omitted to make any mention of Ferrer's little girl, Amalia, a very healthy round faced little creature.

Thursday 29 Jany. This morning Señor Febres, Ward's Salvador, called. I like him very much — and whilst I was out, Brown, Clergyman & La Colonier, Rumler & Möller (Rosemund's gentlemen) had also looked in — We rode a long distance after having written my diary. I went out to pay visits. At Carmen Dustamante's house I could not find. I went then to Ward's Consul House, where I had some talk with him about various business of mine, esp. the recovery of what is due Augustus last, Juana Rosa Nieto, not yet paid — the recovery from De Lisle on a/c of Pfeiffer & myself — Estrella's debt to the estate of the late Henry Bunch — manufactured Goods & wool, — upon which he gave me a long & rather tedious account of his dispute with Stubbs — It was now three. I called upon Dr Candelaria, Möller's wife. Möller & Rumler came & we talked together a pretty long time. Candelaria is not disagreeable, but I was astonished at the dirty which covered the looking glass on the Piano — Hutcheson is very poorly. For several months he has he is a great diver in water, and behind him sit 9 persons ever crowded together, supposed to be the musicians, but unfortunately all, more or less, hoop-bellied. — When we came, one act of the performances was just over. the performances consisted in Feats of extraordinary strength & some of agility, first done by a company of men: — there was nothing to be shewn which, but much to admire, & to be surprised at. all kinds of colourum by the men climbing upon each others, & they joined always formed by a little boy. the principal one tied his legs to a rope from which he hung down, and with his hands, each end of which he tied round his waist, he lifted up a person hanging in the same position by his teeth up & down, how many pillars, and two with his Teeth. — Another pursued now & then and again over a number of soldiers, who presented their muskets, without bayonets however, & fired them off just as the man? he jumped over them — The cloud then fired. — after which they represented Italian Ballads, which was much admired, viz in mimicry: their color was that of gypsum & their attitudes were always musical, with lances, books &c., the desk, upon which they turned round pretty quickly, made as much disagreeable creaking noises — Candalaria, Müller's wife & Clemmer joined us in our box: — and Moreau with his daughter Fortunata joined us a third — It was past 12 when we went home & very cool: I gave my arm to Frau Baegany as far as Mrs Strad. door —

Friday 30 Sept. After having been writing in my room in the morning (at Th 6 4 = 14 ½ Fl) I called with Schaeffer upon the Consul, Fidler Conrad, who is much blood in the Department, & was so obliging to receive us, and therefore we knew generally in the anti-room, until the Consul whom in the inner room we heard in a long conversation with the judge Davila came out, & received Schmitt & myself very friendly. I was introduced to him, & also to the other gentlemen. We amused us in an off hand manner & left us about a quarter of an hour. The prospect is pleasant & rather good looking. There was also the general Aranivar, rather short, pale, but with very black hair & mustaches, and agreeable. Schmitt & myself separated. I called upon Dª Carmen Bustamante y Alcocer, an excellent, good hearted, very stout Lady. Her daughter Pepa got married 11 months ago to a Mexican, & is now very near her confinement, & I think believe she is not happy. Since I saw her last, she has much changed for the worse as regards her exterior. Her youngest sister Margarita also is somewhat queer, not to say foolish, has got very much & do not envy such a life as their ladies lead, & especially they do not live. With the doctor Pedro Sa Bustamante I had rather long conversing with him. He wanted to Carmen the wife of Rey de Cuba, who is a handsome & nice one of the 3 remarkable women Angelopolis, while I was with them, Pepa called & we went home together. Angelopolis does not improve, hardly any new house is built, & the old ones look frequently ruinous; the white wash & the other paintings are knocked or rubbed off & not repaired, the pavement is bad. The portales dirty, obscure, & that of an Augustus smelling terribly, owing to the catables & drinkables which are sold in the shops. There is not one single shop in Cuernavaca which has all a pretty exterior. The houses are mostly built of adobes, some stones, found in a generally clear style, the roofs vaulted & flat, several have at top upon the ground floor, the walls, those of Tillans which measure from 3 to 4 feet, the rooms are spacious, vaulted & provided with [illegible] furniture, but contain in the

to the high road — to the other extremity of the village. I passed the church & was at 6 h back to breakfast, after having taken which Schutte & I rode to town. I rested a little, & then called upon Mary H, who was busy with her correspondence for the steamer to the Church, the Letters for which go down to morrow to Islay by the post. From there to Mr Gibson, formerly Juana Vargas who sends word, her daughter Juanita I do not dislike. — then to Maria Arango, as fat as ever, & as prone as ever to show off her knowledge of geography. She has now her Sala for May well furnished. Her brother Juan de Dios is now doing well enough in Iquique where he is always Ballagan & la Fonda & Club. — in the adjoining room lives her natural sister Carpetana, to whom to the gamble Lavalle, whom I found playing as "Nocambor" I staid but a short time, having only time to kiss her pretty children little ones, three girls — To day being the Saint's day of the prefect, San Pedro de Nolasco, peruvian colors hung from the balconies of the houses and block to block were festoons from the tops of the stalls which fill the plaza, so that the whole had quite a gay appearance — The prefect, Pedro Bermudez, gave a large dinner party, to which all the foreigners established here, amongst them Mr Wendt & Schutte were also invited. Wendt told me to go to his house, to take pot luck there with his wife & family at 5 h Friedrich Schutte the youngest brother of the three, arrived from the sierra, say from Corbajahe's Reverse, Cerro de Pasco which, they say, gives but few ores but little & poor metal. Mrs Friedrich is tall, thin, almond eyebrows, black, bad, broken old & cracked stupid. At 6 o'Clock I went to Wendt's house, of course I had to introduce myself & to tell them, that Dr Farmer had sent me thither to dine with them. they were all very friendly, Mr Wendt, Dr Robertson, the others Brother Pat. Wood, the two Clarks, Ridley a N. A. Salomon, the eldest son of Wood, who has been brought up in England, & speaks now much better English than Spanish, and I sat down together. the dinner was very fair. when Mr Wood & Acosta left, the Indian rather rough, & remained conversing till 8. in the drawing room Mr Wood had the bagatelle table placed. we played at 8. Wood, Schuttle came in, back a little merry, but not in the wind. they gave an account of the party. Capt Seymour also appeared and then our wish an. when I spent the time pleasantly enough till about 10. when Schuttle & I went home. I exerted myself to make myself agreeable to Mr Schuttle, in which I flatter myself I succeed pretty well. I cannot say, I like her particularly, tho' at the same time I am also far from denying that she is disagreeable to me. several she has beautiful, Elizabeth Mary, whom she resembles herself, she is rather better looking than formerly: she has grown a little, whilst formerly she was quite flat. that of Wood I like much. she is pretty, he is so deaf.

Sunday 8 Feby. It was very late before we breakfasted after breakfast. day at about 11, Schuttle came to fetch me to his house. to wait there for the Steamer. I regret much yesterday to Mr Madden of Alicun Crombridge of Tara, offering him my services. West having been so kind to allow me to retain one of his horses during my stay here, I immediately, and took a ride to Tiavaya, which is the always the prettiest spot round Arequipa. From the plaza or main square, formed by the Cathedral to the East and the portales or portico's round the three other sides, a street, somewhat descending, leads in a Northerly direction to the bridge, which crosses the river meets it with clear sweet water, on the other side of the bridge you pass a valley with pretty looking pasture. to the right you have an uninterrupted view the villages of Tanaguara & Cuiaca, to the right — four steps lead up to a long broad open place, paved, with houses on the one side, on the other looking towards the river. — this is called the Mamedon — The road leads thro' the suburb Northerly & then Westerly to the sandy plain, which surrounds Angaipa & its cultivated fields. there I had to pay 1$, offering a pretty prospect. in the plain itself solitary houses, belonging to Indians or Creoles were spread here & there. Quitting the plain, I passed, when already near Tiavaya, the village of Tio, & then a narrow entrance between two low hills, came into the handsomely cultivated village of Tiavaya itself. continuing my road & keeping close to the high barren stony hills to the right. I have to the left the lovely valley itself with all its cultivated fields with houses here & there, on the other side this valley is again bound by said hills. the path close to the rocks to the right leads thro' pleasant (low pasture) where about christmas many members of people are in the habit of assembling in the open air, dance & drinking Chicha, a fermented beverage made of Maïs I passed the house of the late Carlos Sanitos, where in December 1820 & January 21 John Tschudi was married to Miss John & Chamber servants, both dead. & I spent some merry weeks — At the very end of this paste which stints there more than one mentioned rocks, the road turns to the left, & enters the real village of Tiavaya by the long street of Maravillas. here Tschudi & the end of 1825 Mr & Mrs the Letten (now my Maria) had lodgings. and Dr Schmitz took some new another turnes, where I accompanied him two times change[d]. On leaving Tiavaya, I came to the road, which passing the Mill of Regita Lea, took again into the forrales. Ct by mistake followed them, returned to the village, & again did not find the road, which thro' the lanes or calléjones took to Sachaca. I came upon another by path, which took me out behind the church of Sachaca, where I crossed the rivers came to Tinga, attracted the Arequipeñer resort to take cold water bather in wells, & always riding thro' pretty fields, & reached Arequipa at about 12 o'clock, the harvest of wheat is just over. Had no where seen, does the Indians come from more convenient, than here, it will be end[s] about the month of April. I had only time to rest a little, when the two Schaeffer & I rode out to Yabaudia. Jose Rey de Castro & James Kendall, Macloughlin's Clerk, who manages the business in his absence, soon joined us, we dined & ended they left, they made me all the while relate of my last journey in Europe, which really seemed to interest them. When they were gone, we were wind to bed.

Monday 2 July. Before breakfast I strolled in the neighbouring fields, it was a beautiful morning, the sun shone merrily, the Volcano was covered with snow more than half way down, a great many people were coming from Arequipa on horseback, men & women, gaudily & gaily dressed, to be present at a religious festival in Characato, a village a little further on than Yaladia, when in honor of to-day it is to be celebrated with a procession round the church & water about the plaza. Otto Finsch had come out to breakfast with us after breakfast he accompanied Schaeffer & me to show us the road to Tingo, we met a continual line of horsemen & horsewomen pouring out from Arequipa to Characato: some

Alvarado we rode thro' Vancanpatan, where we turned off a wide sandy road to the right. They called it Candelaria, because sometimes another flower of ours, Avenida, grew there. The way was hard and bad, more than ever as dry & sterile as imaginable, sand, stones & dreadful cactuses were the only objects which met our eyes. The Volcano we had always in front of us. Further on we came to a ~~narrow~~ gulley, on one side of which a small canal irrigates, with a little vegetation, which along. Following the same upwards, we reached some cultivated fields & houses, where Vanmans resides; he has been suffering dreadfully for several months of rheumatism, which he told us, that he is now getting better owing to the heat, which has to belong yet to us he appears still very young, he can not walk upright yet, his eyes are watered, his eyes are watering. With some cautions regard, this made to take water, but does not offer us anything with Vanmans wife & sister (her wife Dolores Serrano had gone to Arequipa) and then rode up to a few houses further up the hill, where we took shelter. The water is not ice cold, but rather cool. It is collected in a basin, in a house, built of stones & roofed in the same manner as all houses are in Arequipa, with a dome. The road back to Arequipa leads again over a sandy plain, at some places which comes from Cangallo, passes to Candelaria & enters the town by the church of Candelaria. Alvarado. The cloud is the plain of Miraflores. We arrived in Arequipa, still burning hot and Moran found me a long cool & shady room, nearly 3, I called upon Don Vanmans, of whom I made mention page 190. His father is a poor old Indian, who does all he can to keep up for his daughter a genteel appearance, and Miss he succeeds, for she is really a nice girl of 17 years of age, and really pretty, for she has

Wednesday 6th July. I rose very late, at 9½, we breakfasted rose at 12½. I have at last brought up my diary. We then went to Schmidt's countinghouse and took him to Louis Brailard, formerly manager of Portier's house, also to Mde. Dubrueil, formerly consul in Aug. formerly Co Maine's secretary in Lima. of both these with I have nothing particular to say except that Dubrueil now looks one in the face. We then went to Jorge Delard's, he is dead. D'Adhemar old, grey haired, not very amiable, Fanatic, Pichereau's widow, came on, she is now 32 years old, still very good looking & interesting. D'Adhemar has a certain way of speak she was nicely dressed & shewed a little of the handsome bosom, tho' very decently, has grown quite stout. Still remains a tall good looking. We remained there half an hour. I then bad good bye to Mrs Gibson & her daughter Juanita, who is remarkably pretty, I like to talk with them & I was soon
"I am gaining golden opinions", there was also a grown up lady looking, daughter of Mrs Gibson's youngest sister Rosa, widow of Mariano Cornejo. Mrs G. takes snuff & is very acquain Mrs Cannon Rey de Castro I did not find at home, but with D'Cannon, Dubrueil and, her daughter & her sis in law Romaña I remained some hours. — Afterwards I went with Schmidt to his countinghouse, I drew bills on Lizares to make up the 20000 ₤ which I lend him, Explanations Aug at 8% p.a. ½ for b, ½ for y months. — Aug 9 came I made his acquaintances & liked him. — Past half past 3 I went to Wert, e, Johnson & the Doctor Robertson were sitting there. D. Matias Paz Soldan came, we removed in the drawing room, there were D. Pancha Orviano, Anita, Conigunda Johnson, the Dr. Prof. Dr appeared to me as if we were advancing to Arequipa. [illegible] having walked about a mile, putting our beasts, my guide commenced to agree with me; it was now 3" 45', - no star, no mountains were visible, - nothing but the sandy plain & the polar plough along the road. - we stopt at one of them, and lay down upon a pellon round with a Poncho. in a short time I was fast asleep. I was called by my guide at 3" h; it was now day light, but still so foggy, that no mount. could were visible, nor could it be said, where the sun had risen. it however was streak on. To take the medanos or sand hills for our guide, I took the middle & I agreed in this proceeding the open ocean to the Arq", it com. gently the sand hills to the Islay direction, on these went we confidently, at 7" 30' I was at the Top of the second h. overlooking, where the road stands, I waited for my guide till 7" 45', & riding very fast I was in Arequipa in Islay at 10" 1'; the steamer el Peru, had not yet arrived, I breakfasted at Ward's, - directly after me the pumpie came with the correspondence from Arq", about half an hour later my muleteer & Pat & the steamer appeared. - I whiled away the day as well as I could. Commenced reading Reinecke's "Fuchs" round or Reich Fuchs" written in his usual jaunty style. he keeps humour upon humour and throws an enchanting halo round immoral people, as in this instance, Reich Fuchs a noted highwayman. I paid a visit to Newman's, who always received me with much kindness. I joked a good deal with Annie Ward, who looked quite pretty, & Captain Dawson told me, that on Saturday a ship there has been a new "Indianche" in Tacna. the passen.

was to be on the point of going to Lima & there on board the Warren, the preparations made in consequence of his removal, the Treaties was recorded, the passes executed between the Governments opened by Jones & the prisoners released on liberty, & it is said, about a number of muskets, belonging to the Government, which were to be sent by the Steamer to Callao, have disappeared on the road, however by this same Steamer a number of muskets belonging to Maclean have been consigned by him to Gibbs of Lima — I was glad, when at 5 o'Cl. it was time to go on board, on dined, — besides a French physician, whose acquaintance I did not make, I was the only foreigner on board & took my seat at the head of the table close to the captain — The time on board the Steamer I spend in the usual manner, conversing a little, walking the deck, reading a good deal, besides Hawkesworth, also Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield & Adventures of Pompey the little, & read, drinking & sleeping. — Thus passed

Sunday 3 July } I got acquainted with General & Monday 4 } Alvarado, who is on board with his lady & two Indians, Capistrano & Gradiaviano, whom he has picked from Coquimbo — also with a Mr Pizarro, and Argentine, with his daughter, with whom I mean, the daughter. It was impossible to get into conversation. Sat I had it more than once — with a Lieutenant Colonel Salvador, who slept over the saloon talked with me — with Dr Matias Paz Soldan, brother of the minister — with Dr Zegarra of Arequipa — with a certain Pedramercedes — with Dr Zegarra of Arequipa — with a certain Pedramercedes of Sant Pedro, & Machil's son in law — Early in the morning of Sat Pedro, & Machil's son in law — Early in Monday we were opposite Pisco, — in the evening we were close & thus I continued reading, sometimes talking with them, which I was sorry for — Francisca Palacios & Dn Dd Tristan called to congratulate my wife upon my safe return. I took Mrs Palacios home and then went to Pancha's in Gilli Count Thomas, with whom I conversed till nearly 10. At home I found only Ramcha —

Thursday 12 July. I went again in vain for the 4th or 5th time, to the minister of war, he was not visible. — I had to wait was about 2h, before I could start for Chorrillos upon the nice black horse, which Garland has presented to Enriqueta. the weather in the present season of the year is beautiful: we have always a dark blue sky without Clouds, a breeze moderates the heat. only the dust was disagreeable. I rode to Garland's Ranche, but did not found either him or his companion Costas an ugly, but lively little fellow from Pisco, who does an extensive wool business with Mrs Arg. I waited some time, but neither of them appearing. I called upon Dn Gertrudis Pinchen, her pretty cousin Dolores Algeria, both good natured, amiable females, & old Dn Panchita Bocanegra de Rios, Gertrudis mother, whom I do not like. she is too lively (verde) she speaks too loud for her age. — she spoils of Celebres. — Thence I went to Magno's Ranche close by, — he was in bed on account of a bile (Chupo.
Spanish Cuba) I sat down near him & had a long conversation with him. I then went to Mrs Magno, who is always very amiable. Towards me, — she used to me some german, translated Spanish, and I was surprised to see, how much she knew.
I returned to Garland's Ranche, who was now there — his health pretty good — I bathed, which is delightful — ate a fine fish & a beefsteak, took tea & wine, also a glass of iced Chicha at Dn Gertrudis & rode back to Lima, where I arrived just when the rain had set, at 9h 45' P.M. — Tho' I was tired I went with Maríq.ª Enriq.ª la viejita old Blas Salomayor, a man, said to be more than 90 years of age. he was lying in bed & looked more like a corpse than a living human being. his tongue has had a paralytic stroke, so that I could hardly understand him, moreover his memory is so far gone, that he confounds not only names, but even words! — I am sure, his last hour is close at hand. Below lives the D.r Carrasco with his wife Doña Carmen, we looked in there & staid a pretty long time. they are very friendly towards us. — at home, after having taken tea, Maríq.ª Enriq.ª & Nicanor commenced playing which, but after the first deal, Officier came, we then left off, afterwards Melchor Belaúnde came in. a — they left. — we have now beautiful moonlight nights. — Mesa & Salvo have left payments here in Lima, Canciani in Calf.ª —

Friday 13 Feby, at 10 o' Clock PM in the balcony on the Shade 10 R. 21 ½ F. The whole day I was quietly at home writing, only in the evening at 7 ½ o' Clock I went to Officier & with him to M.r Cox, the husband of Doña Fermola, the widow of the late Henry Reinicke of Guayaquil, with whom, Cox, Officier & I had a very long conversation regarding Reinicke's Estate or Testam.ª —

Saturday 14 Feby. At 7 o' Cl. a.m. Th.r 7 R. 19 R. At abt 10 I rode to Callao, where I arrived abt 1; Cigale took me to the Custom house, where I found Henry Higginson and with him & Juan Luis Orrea of Arq.ª as visita. I made my very & advendred request despatch of the 8 packages, which I have received pr Chalaca from Altona. Finally at 2 we had done & at 3 I was back in Lima. I can finde some difficulty to sell my Cinnamon. This I was rather glad, I regarded to wish after dinner till about 6, when the 8 packages arrived from Callao. Garland stays in Chorrillos. Reinicke has sold out, their only Melchor Belaúnde called to take his watch on. Since about 3 weeks I have a pain in the back part of my neck — it is nothing but cold, however it might it had an unbearable increase, that I could

…d early & took something to prepare, it had its full effect, however on Sunday 8 Feb.ʳʸ, when I saw the pains had not gone. Mariguita called me afterwards with Alcali, which did the same good. — This whole morning I was busy opening the boxes directed to Julia, Mariguita, Carradina, the Sacristan, in short all apostidones, almost every thing has arrived in good condition, only some bottles of the Flannen Alcalies were all broken. Francisca Zubiar, Victor Laguna, husband of Rafaela Gomez called. — Also the French Minister passed. Chas Juan Luis Gomez with Jaunches Cumplendo &c. the Gallac Gentlemanner & finally Vicente Gonzales de Rivera. Mariq.ª Luisq.ª Carradina & David by another, which has not happened on a Sunday for a very very long Time. — Mariq.ª Luisq.ª & Carradina are gone out in the Calesin, I am writing. Extract from the Concession of 29 Jany. — At the time of my absence from Europe, a great dispute was pending between Thomas Conway & his clerk, Henry T. Phillips, whom Conway had sent to Europe to make purchases, for which he had opened Credits & afterwards had withdrawn them. — This dispute by mutual consent of the two had been submitted to a Jury, presided by Wm Tell Adams, the British Chargé d'affaires, & the following 12 persons, John Rankin, John Marlean, John Hayne, H. G. Radewald, C. R. Flucker, H. Penrose, J. D. Davis (the friend manager of J. Hagan & Co. between H. Severin & Francis Nelson &c, C. A. Manning & Rodriguez & Contadores, J. Craddock of Wm Read &c. — On 23 January these 12 persons assembled at noon in the commercial Rooms. Conway made his complaint, which lasted till 4 o'Clock. — On 24 Phillips made his defence, to which Conway replied a few words at 2 o'Clock the Colonial closed & at 4 o'. gave the following sentence: Que se hà probado contra Phillips grand deceit & culpable inexactitud en sus transacciones con Conway, pero que Phillips no hà obrado con ninguna intencion fraudulenta. —

At 10 o'Cl. a.m. the firing commenced & at 6 o'Cl. p.m. the English & French landed, the Portenos flying on every direction — It appears, that the railway between Santiago de Chili & Valpar: is likely to be carried into effect. the promoters are: the president & the first ministers of Chile & then follows a list of the names of the directors both in England & in Chile. — Henry Kendall in London having given up the peruvian consulship, he has named W. After many & long negociations, the original contractors for the Huano monopoly Messrs Allsebrook, Gibbs Crawley & Co, and Quirnival Montane & have made a new agreement with the Government dated 6 February of which the principal conditions are: the three named houses make a new advance to Government of 3,000,000 ₤ viz 1,000,000 ₤ Cash down, 200,000 ₤ in 15 days, 1,000,000 ₤ in 45 days after the date of the ratification; the Government allow 6 ℘ annual interest upon the advance until it be reimbursed in Europe. — the

I remained quietly at home, with a considerable pain in my stiff neck. In the evening we amused ourselves looking over my portfolio with engravings, which I have purchased in the course of my travels. Mr Reuter came also.

Tuesday 17 Feb. We called D. Casanova to prescribe something for my neck. I was quietly at home writing, and reading during Carnaval. Dr Penn rubbed me much of her right arm, which is completely paralyzed. — The Peruvian has arrived. — In the Peruvian Extraordre of 17 Feb an official report from the Prefect of Moquegua dated Tacna 10 Feb, is published, stating that Gen Salaverry has escaped to Bolivia. — Before going to bed I took a warm bath and afterwards something to perspire, which had the due effect, however

Wednesday 18 Feb. I did not get up any better. At 12 m. Th. 79 F. 22 R. I wrote to Gray, then I was brought on the Sangler of my guide Juan, I calculated what they cost in Texas would cut and running to effect their Sale. Yesterday Juan Tabara called upon me, Sunday Carmen Arriaga, the new Granadian consul. — the weather is as usually beautiful, but my stiff neck & the pains which consequence upon it, prevents my enjoying the pleasures of the year. — At 6 p.m. I took a walk to Redondilla & back again: at 8 o'Cl. we take Tea, when I join the family in our drawing room, La Calita, Mathews Belarde, Reinke, Parland, who has to-day returned from Chorillos, our new regular visitor. Chess is occasionally played. — Juan was to-night at home, the Engineer & Cedrides, whom he usually visits, being on Chorillos. — Mathews also came in, he had dined at Redondo's —

Thursday 29 Feb^y. The pain has now drawn into the back part of my head & inconveniences much. At 9 a.m. Th. 87° = 20° R. Notwithstanding my indisposition I went out, & called upon Brown, Finch's partner in Callao, who is now on a visit at Redondo's, to fetch his wife & Mam^a Aliaga, who is a little crazy. Brown has now 4 children, the eldest Mariquita is a tall grown up girl. On Sunday next the whole family leave on the Steamer for Valparaiso. — From Brown's I went to the commercial Rooms on my absence the Subscriptions of the Principal & the Reading Rooms of the Clubs have been altered — and all English papers as well as many new English publications are now to be found there. — In the same house of Reydond & Odenwald in the plaza & up to calle de Bodegones, three pretty large rooms are appropriated to that purpose. — Chabert is secretary. — I remained there about one hour & read the most of the latest number of Bell's Life in London. In Russia a rail road of 770 Leagues from St Petersburg to Odessa is projected, — & in Cundinamarca it appears, that a general railroad movement is to be tried with Faviengdon encouraged — At three o'Clock I was at last so fortunate as to meet Manuel Mendiburu, the minister of war, who was very polite — he wanted to see one of the muskets, which I should have consigned to him. — I soon effected some sales of my goods for Peruvian — I may consider myself fortunate, if for the Velveteens I get back my outlay. — The textile Strickenzy & Cotton Flannelette are sold pretty well. – Remarks. Garland & Melchior Beloades [illegible] tea visits exc. Swan told us, that whilst he was in the theatre, Ygraine had been arrested. –

Friday 20 Feb 2. My stiff neck & pains continue. – Thaw 10° Reaum.
7° F. – 24° R. I remained the whole day at home writing, and only in the evening will wrapt up I went to Pfluckers in the room below who told me, that according to the latest accounts to 17 Nov. from England all goods were dull.

Saturday 21st Feb 7. I again stayed at home writing, still with my stiff neck, also Swan felt ill, was only with a stiff neck, but with a sudden pain in his leg. I am fearful, there is something revealed in it. – In the middle of the day the packet arrived from Panama, bringing in 66 days news from England to the 17 Dec. and these news are of great importance. – on 10 Dec. Sir Robert Peel resigned, quite unexpectedly; it appears, that in the new session of parliament he intended to introduce a great change in, if not a total repeal of the duties on Corn, but that as the Duke of Wellington had opposed his proposition in the house of Lords, Sir Robert saw, that he could not carry the measure & so he withdrew. – In the manufacturing districts still war raging, all goods were dull, & upon the whole prospects were by no means cheering. American Bonds down to 3/. – I received a letter from Daniel of 12 Dec. advising me of a Consignment of about 22 bbls Pr. me which he has taken to Share for myself. I am very fearful, it will not turn out well – the articles are half worn out stuff for dolls, hats, woollen & guipe woollen shawls. – Garland is so busy, that he cannot come in the evening, when Pennabe was gone. I played two games at chess with Mariquita, both which I lost, she was giving her the queen, the other, a castle. –

Sunday 22 Feb 7. I rose this morning with somewhat less pains. I opened one Case, which had yesterday come from the Ford in Minstrel Bay, containing my Saddle, scales & Cushion. – I at about 12 o'Clock I dined out in the Calejon to pay visits. – first to Ferrer, whom I did not find at home – then to Carlos Cajigas, who is unwell, Rodrigo & Valdearellano were with him & I remained a considerable time conversing with them, news to Europe &c. who were not in – to Jose Caballero, the widow of John Black, who many years ago was Sales man at Mons. who died of drinking We had – the Castanedas, one of whom Mercedes is married to Cmdante Villamil, who sailed in Trade in the Cuna de Jasso, were in Mayaguez with – Luis Sanchez Jong, formerly one of Cevanes's minister, & had a long sufficiently pleasant conversation – the same with Dn Mariana Alejo Alvarez, who ordered a bottle of ale & visit whom I stayed a long Time – Manuelita Altham & Concepta were sitting with Mrs Dominicans at Mary's I also remained a pretty long Time, she shewed me her Album with many pretty drawings. – It was now 3 h. o Clock & I returned home – Forlano & Melchior Delande dined with us. after dinner I arranged some of my books until it got dark, went to the communal reading Room. the late papers are of course filled with their speculations on the grand news, the resignation of Ministers, the Time of 16 Dec. say, that it was uncertain if who will come in, whether Peel, Russel, or Golden: – I believe, it will be Lord Johnny. At home we had as usually, Tea at 8 o Cl. only Rinaldo & Garland, who are on such bad Terms, as never to speak to each other, even visits &c. – To speak candidly, the Evenings are rather stupid, I to spend them in such a manner, as we do – actually doing nothing, except talking on the gossip of the Town, or perhaps 10. emboss chess in plaid – is an actual waste of Time –

Monday 22 Dec, Carnaval, but no plaguing at Cuny strictly prohibited by the police – I read a pretty English Tragedy Douglas by Mr Home; I cleaned my tables, Corrig translated French.
Corradina ciphered, & it was then 12 o Cl. without my having done any thing. I then commenced writing my diary – at 9 A.M. I called upon Hillmann, who arrived in the Rachel – he was particularly friendly – then upon Judge Caspis, who was in bed unwell. I shortly saw his wife a Chola – Tomeka Juana was not in – nearly an hour I read papers in the readg room, am now finishing my diary. At 2 o'cl. Dine my Coloring in the Shade 78 F. = 21 R. Very quietly at home the remainder of the day with the exception of Marig. Conig. & Comradina driving out in the Calesin to the Alameda del Rincha: there was not one single carriage besides theirs. Reinicke, who had dined with us together with Garland, & I walked to the Alameda, Conigreta alighted & we walked up & down together. After Tea Marig. Conig. Reinicke & I played at whist for love, – to say the truth, played enough –

Tuesday 24 Feb. I did not leave the house & hardly my room, being busy writing the whole day. Reinicke alone dined with us: in the evening Garland came, also Melchior Velarde, als Contreras both to visit us. Juan is gradually getting a little better, he may suck in still a little blood. Dr Reinicke relieves much of her anxiety. Marig. is also continuing of "irritacion de vientre" Conig. is enjoying excellent health & spirits, – she is happy with seeing R. daily & entertaining the hopes of becoming his wife some day or other – Comradina took her leave[illegible] de la casa.

Wednesday 25 Feb. The longed Carnaval days are over. 78 F. = 21½ R. The weather is lovely with a deep blue, unclouded sky, but my way of living here is very insipid – how different of the continental nations. I have been in during my stay in Europe. One day passes by as regularly as the previous one: in the evening I went for an hours to Hillmann and then a second hours. I hardly see any one else but the family, Garland & Reinicke.

Thursday 26 Feb. No change in my occupations: I am gaily at home writing. I am copying my Cash book & have just finished a letter to Francisco Candia of Buenos Ayres regarding Kennedy's Tetam: According to the Mercurio of the president of the U.S. published in the Comercio, there seems to be a great inclination on the part of the Americans, to take possession of the whole Oregon Territory. Will the English quietly submit to it?

Dined at — N in my Cabin at 3 o'Cl. in the shade 86 F. 24 R.

Friday 27 Feb.y Nothing particular, but Saturday in the evening, Saturday 28. after I had written a long Ltr to A.B.C. and went to the drawing room, where I found Mary by herself, I had a long and merry talk to her, but nevertheless very disagreeable conversation. Garland, who I have towards all of us with an extraordinary kindness, had told her, that the night before, Pliscker & Wagner had had a very long conversation. the latter, Wagner, had been very much annoyed with Juan having offered Isabel for me, he had been laughing at the smallness of my business, had said, that I might as well give it away to the Swede, that I should receive a patrude of the very smallest Trades, in one word, had by no means expressed himself towards me in a friendly manner. Pliscker had been writing, but, as far as I understand, not approved himself very decidedly to Wagner's views of the affair — Pliscker & Garland are of opinion, that the best I could do for Juan, would be to send him for some time away from Lima, in order to break him a little off his extraordinary attachment to Chavelita Negreiros, in Silbi House Bellavista, who has hitherto been in the three weeks Pliscker, intended going home, Miller is to go Colao — I think they had first thoughts of going the first to Tacna, but it seems they are now changing their mind, because Wagner has no confidence in Juan, this the latter has taken so much amiss, that he has determined upon not returning to the Custom House, if this "desaire" be not represented by Lesson, which to-morrow I intend taking from Zilla the governess of Pfeiffer's Children.

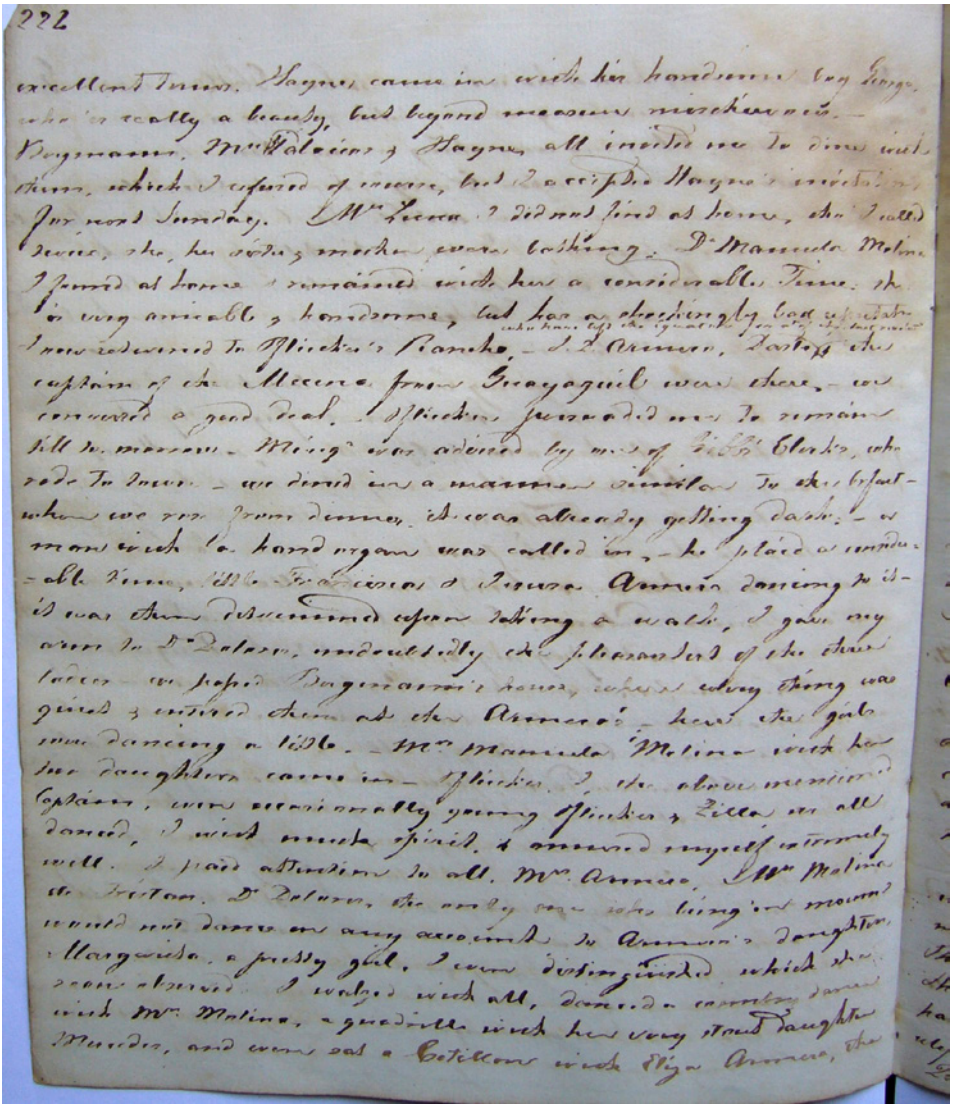
Sunday 4 March, at 10 or 6h in the morn. Thr 21 F 22 R. Continually the same dull way of spending my Time. I am determined upon not returning to Gibb's Count. House. I do not interfere, but let him do what he thinks proper. In the Evening at 7 o'Clock Zilla, the governess of Pfeiffer's, came to the first time to give me a Lesson in Italian. we read Lange's Italian Preface to his Edition of Tasso. it was very difficult to understand. till 10 o'Clock.



Thursday 5 March. In the Church of San Francisco the Feast of Jesus's mother were celebrated. I was on the point of going there at 10 o'clock, when Antonio Magr's Clerk came with more than 100 Pf. the counting of which detained me till 12. – I then hastened to that Church, but came too late, – it was all over – In the Treasury I cancelled a pagaré of mine – From 4 to 5 I took a walk to the Alameda, after which I went to the Read's Rooms, where I read Blackwood. – In the Evening at Tea we had Garland, Pinedo, Mlle. Manuela Delarde & Mr Lama, with whom my family had quarrelled a little in my absence, but in consequence of a polite note, which I had written him, he had come to see us again, & this evening he brought me 3 oranges on account of two Pf. he owes me – My stiff neck is again worse. The Steamer Chili arrived to-day from Callao

Friday 6 March. Susan is getting better, but my grandfather Meinig is not altogether well. – At 11 h a. m. Th 6h F 23 R. I took a walk with Genig. In the Alameda from 4 to 5. From Zilla I took my second Italian Lesson. I translated to him the 3 first Chapters of Tasso, which are very easy.

Saturday 7 March. Nothing particular. There is a great amusement of all of us in the house. – From 7 to 8 I go sometimes in the evening to the Read's Rooms – I told Pfeiffer of my arrangement with Schultz. Susan wrote yesterday at Noon excellent Dinner. Wagner came in with his handsome boy Jorge, who is really a beauty, but beyond measure mischievous. Bagnasco, Mr Valencia & Wagner all invited me to dine with them, which I refused of course, but I accepted Wagner's invitation for next Sunday. Mrs Lima I did not find at home, tho' I called twice, she, her sister & mother were bathing. D.a Manuela Molina I found at home & remained with her a considerable Time. She is very amiable & handsome, but has an disagreeably loud voice. I now returned to Flinder's Rancho. D.r Arnoux, Doctor & the captain of the Mercur from Guayaquil were there. We conversed a good deal. Flinders persuaded me to remain till to morrow. Mrs was ordered by me of Pablo Clarke, who rode to town. We dined in a manner similar to the breakfast when we rose from dinner it was already getting dark. A man with a hand organ was called in, to please a wonderful Time, the Frenchmen & Signor Arnoux dancing to it. It was then determined upon taking a walk, I gave my arm to D.a Dolores, undoubtedly the ploasantest of the three ladies in Wagner's house, where every thing was good & enjoyed them as the Arnoux's. here the girls were dancing a little. Mrs Manuela Molina with her two daughters came in. Flinders & the above mentioned Captain, were unanimously voting Flinders & Pilla as all dancers, I was much spirited & amused myself extremely well. I paid attention to all. Mrs Arnoux. Mrs Molina & Triton. D.a Dolores the only one who living in town would not dance on any account. D.a Arnoux's daughter Margarita, a pretty girl. I soon distinguished which she soon observed. I waltzed with all, danced a cotillon dance with Mrs Molina, a quadrille with her very stout daughter Mercedes, and even sat a Cotillon with Miss Arnoux, the

went to bed at 12½ & slept in the same room with Zilla, young Barker Fletcher & Libanio Algua.

Monday 9 Mch. We rose at 5½. a thick fog was still lying upon the sea. Mrs Fletcher & Dr Fletcher were up at this early hour. — the horses were saddled & without waiting for breakfast we started at a little past 6. Fletcher & his Hamburg nephew on his Peg. Zilla, Barker & I on horseback. It was a pleasant cool morning; in Lima I found Maria still in bed, I myself was sleepy, lay down & slept till 9½. — Juan is getting better. I busy the whole morning writing my Diary. — The day is a little cloudy, rose at 2 h p.m Fr. 83½ Fa 22½ R. in my bath. — Continue taking my tales Drops from Zilla every Monday, Wednesday & Friday. In the Evening Garland had a long conversation with Juan, on consequences of which —

Tuesday 10 Mch Juan, who is getting better, went to Zilla & Commodore & agreed with Hayne & Garland, to join them again and to take charge of the Cask with a Salary of 2000 ℔ annually

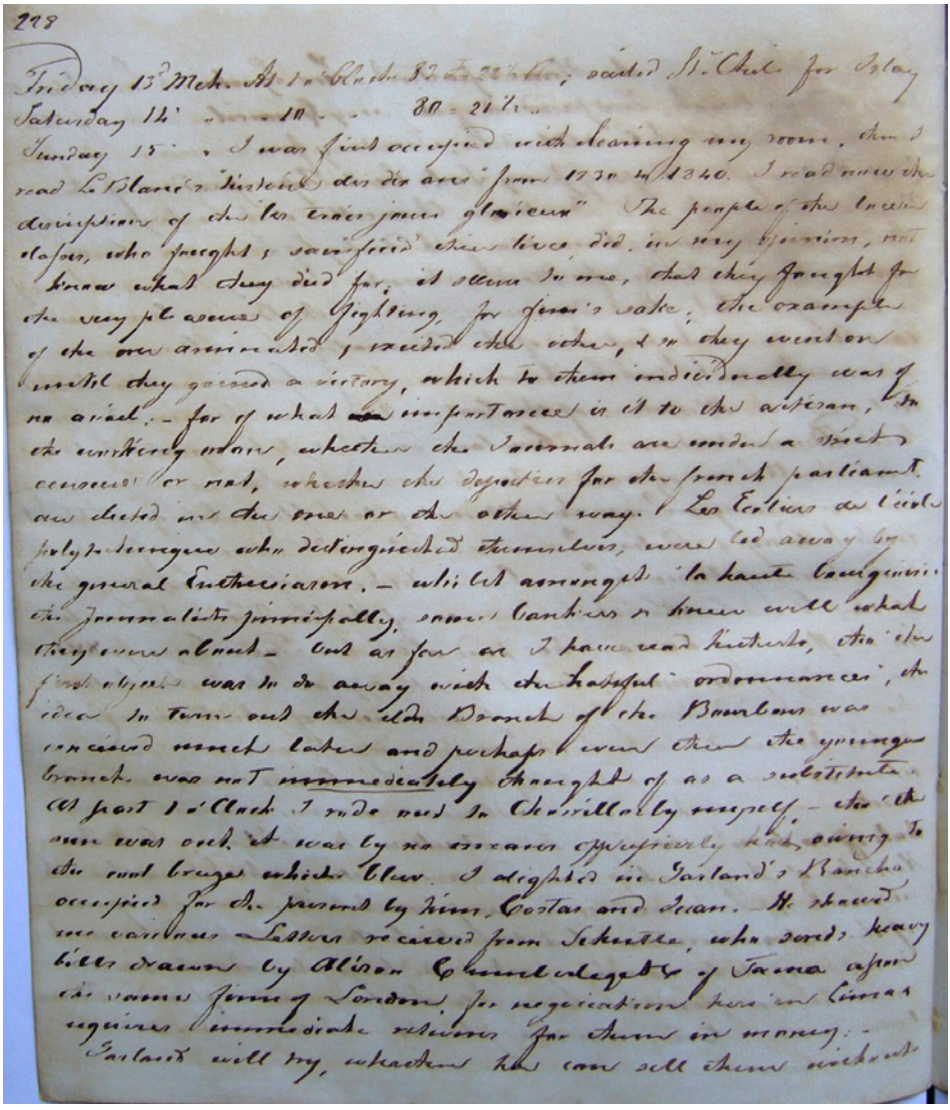
Juan round to Chevillon, to renew strength.



Thursday 12th Mch. — In the morning I read Haynie in Gibbs Hor. which does I took a Letter to Wind. — In afternd me his arm, we walked together & he commenced speaking about Scarr, whom he advised me to establish in Bridgewater in a Store of War. Sail, Salem &c, before I had time to reply, we met Wheelwright, who has arrived in the Commorant & came to remove in the Steamer for Arica. Baden joined us, & we conversed on many subjects, but I should say the others conversed & I listened. In Haynie's absence, we noticed it taken of me, which is not very flattering — Three days, when Zilla does not come, to give me Latin Lessons, I have now commenced taking a walk to the Alameda from 6 to past 7, & come back in the dark & then go to the reading Rooms, where I remain till near 8h. & then take tea at home, where Chess is frequently played — Knights & Pawns Rocafuerte, & Dolores & Libertad Alzeas & little Castro Officers called. Here follow the principal European News: Lord John Russell could not form a Whig Ministry, the principal difficulty or at least the proximal thing that Earl Grey, formerly Lord Howick, son of the Reformer Earl Grey — refused to take a Seat in the Cabinet if Lord Palmerston was to be Secretary for Foreign Affairs — Palmerston would not give in, neither Grey & would Lord John could not find the necessary ingredients & gave up the Power of a ministry as we had Feb. news Papers think, that he was glad to find an excuse because he himself did not find in his mind sufficients strength to cope with the thorny question. — Lord John resigning, of course Sir Robert had to come in again & with the exception of two or three, all the former Ministers have come in again. — Lord Warncliffe died in the Interval. — Lord Stanley gave up the colonial Seat to Mr Gladstone. The following are the new Cabinet Members: Sir Robert Peel, First Lord of the Treasury — Sir James Salisbury, Secretary for the Home department; Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Chancellor, Duke of Buccleugh, Lord president of the privy Council, Duke of W. Commander in Chief; Earl Aberdeen, Secretary for Foreign Department; Earl Haddington, Keeper of privy Seal, Earl Ripon, president of the Board of Control; H. Goulburn, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Granville Somerset, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; Earl Lincoln, Commissioner for Woods & Forests; Sidney Herbert, Secretary for War department; Earl Dalhousie, president of the Board of Commerce; Earl Ellenborough, first Lord of the Admiralty, Earl of Ripon, Postmaster General; W. E. Gladstone, Secretary for Colonies; - the three last are new Members of the Cabinet, not having been in the former Tory Administration. - Corn laws are likely to be repealed, it was said the U.S. not respected - Funds have risen, American Bonds 6d. The new arrangements in the Ministry took place before the Christmas holidays of Parliament was to meet on 22d January for the "dispatch of business." - Czar Nicholas of Russia, the Head of the Greek Catholick Church, one of the handsomest men living, in the flower of his age, has paid a visit to Pope Gregory XVI an old imposing man, but it would appear that the latter has upbraided him for his persecutions of the Roman Catholics that his words have made some impression upon the Emperor, who was upon the whole badly received in Rome: - the inhabitants neither received him with acclamations, nor even took their hats off to him, the Pope did not return his visit - On 8 Dec Hencke of Driessen has discovered a new star which is either the nucleus of a comet or a new planet: - the general opinion of the astronomers is, that it is the latter, in which case it is supposed to be another part of the large planet which from exploding, has given existence to the four small planets, Juno, Vesta, Pallas & Ceres: the new planet is situated between Vesta & Juno.

Sunday 17th " I was first occupied with clearing my room, then I read Le Blanc's "histoire des dernières années" from 1730 to 1740. I read now the description of the last three years glorieuses" The people of the lowest classes, who fought & sacrificed their lives did, in my opinion, not know what they died for; it seems to me, that they fought for the very pleasure of fighting, for fame's sake; the examples of the one animated & excited the other, & so they went on until they gained a victory, which to them individually was of no avail: - for of what importance is it to the artisan, to the workingman whom, whether the Journals are under a strict censure or not, whether the deputies for the french parliament are elected in the one or the other way. / Les Ecrivains de l'école philosophique who distinguished themselves, were led away by the general Enthusiasm. - whilst amongst "la haute bourgeoisie" the Journalists principally, some Cantines & knew well what they were about - but as far as I have read hitherto, their first object was to do away with the hateful "ordonnances", the idea to turn out the elder Branch of the Bourbons was conceived much later and perhaps even then the younger branch was not immediately thought of as a substitute. / At past 1 o'Clock I rode out to Chevrillon by myself - the sun was out. It was by no means oppressively hot, owing to the cool breeze which blew. I alighted in Garland's Rancho occupied for the present by him, Costar and Dean. He showed me various Letters received from Schuttle, who sends heavy bills drawn by Alison & Chamberlayne & Co of Jamaica upon the names Jenny & London for negociation here in Lima & requires immediate returns for them in money: - Garland will try, whether he can sell them without one particularly — Manuel del Rio. The latter is Minister of finances and has now also been entrusted with the war department during Mariscal's absence. — Don Solano is minister for foreign affairs — in charge of the home department (del Gobierno) instead of Capio. — A quiet dull day. In the morning I called upon Manuel Orlando, my wife's cousin, brother of Melchor, — upon young Pena (see p. 229, 8 lines from below) and upon Benavides, a young Arequipeño, who is going as vice to Tacna, which latter I did not find at home, as little as D. Luna.

Wednesday 13 March. I rose to day earlier at 7h, now at 8h. Th: 10°-21°R. In the morning I called upon Garnevare and bought of him one of the Bibles, and further for sale by Schmitz, see p. 228, viz $5 00 = 48 Fr., which, without putting my endorsement upon it, I intend remitting to Schmitz on his own a/c — This evening I had no Latin Lesson, for Zyla, in accordance being holiday, in the morning San José, events with the Family of Gliches to Chorrillos —

Thursday San José, 14 March. — In the morning before breakfast I am occupying Algebra and of Hirsch Meyer's book. To refresh my memory, and for amusement I read Le Blanc's histoire des dix ans (of France) from 1830 — 1840: his principles are those of a decided republican — I went out to pay some visits, but the greater part I did not find at home, Mr Garnaro was unwell, — Mr Malagarda was not in, his wife was visible, but not being acquainted with her I did not like to enter — Juan de Dios Goldemar & his wife (Josefa) were in Callao: only Dr. Algamorra, a judge of la corte superior de justicia, who assisted us much in the lawsuit, we had with the Mulrmans about our former house, I found at home; — he is now Vista fiscal de la corte suprema instead of Mariategui, who is occupied with the forming of a Codex for Peru: generally in continually asking his (Algamorra's) opinion, as do D. Pedro no doubt, a clever little fellow with a good deal of a high opinion of himself & his cleverness – Seriously in the morning Mary & I had called upon Sra. Villaamil's son in law, who is just recovering from a pretty severe Attack – Melchor Pilarde, Garland, Rinchi dined with us; – after dinner I played "games at chess with the former, Melchor, & "par pedes" lost me – We had Took my usual walk to the Alameda, whence I return in the dark, at 7h Clock – & from 7 to 8½ I read in the reading room. I then take tea at home & spend the remainder of the evening conversing with the family & the above mentioned. – a rather stupid way, which I cannot recommend you in another light than as a real Loss of Time –

Friday 20 Mch. It was cloudy till 10h Clock, only now at 11h Cl. the Sun is breaking through. At 80 F. 24 R.

Saturday 21 Mch. At 10h Cl. cloudy + 78. 24½. In Thursday the Diario of Manila Copy Seymour, received from Iloilo and yesterday he paid us a visit – I heard from him that Miss Emma Roberts, sister of Mr Garland & Mrs Read was living with Pfeiffer for some time – I therefore intend to pay her a visit this day morning she had again left for Gallao, & remained with Mr Pfeiffer, with whom I conversed about half an hour. Caroline, her daughter, is tall, but rather clumsy. she has a fine complexion, is however far from pretty & appears to me rather "bonne". In the Morning I paid a visit to Maria Luisa a visit to Mrs Jane, who has lately lost her mother in law. – Her husband, Jane, Blacker's partner in the copperminers, is very ill & people seem to think that he is not likely to recover. – One of his boys, the eldest, Xavier, is sent for education to Germany, another little one, Pepe, is one of Comadina's companions at Blacker's under Sylas tuition. & the daughter Dolores,

Dejeuné à la fourchette in the corridor. the Guayaquil ladies nothing themselves as usually in their hammocks, breakfast, as usually too abundant, was over at 12. I then conversed with Pancho about various business. - about my correspondence of Rancho - late - the Cambas, relations to Nancy, Pancho's first child by Dolores Camba, have commenced judicial proceedings against Carmen Fernanda. Pancho's wife - shows about a Loan of 8000 ff. which Senator wishes me to make to him besides the 12000 ff. he already holds of mine; I think of lending him 3500 ff. as soon as Gallatyn pays what he owes. - and shows about a purchase of 3 pack of embossed printed Cotton velvets at 34 m B°, which Senator wishes me, he can sell in Arequipa at 5 m ff. - Our conversation being over, I called upon Thomasa Pareja, the widow of General Lamarra and the widowed friend of the late "Gran Mariscal Gamarra" now married to D Chalo, Pacho, governor of Chorrillos, she was absent in Lima on account of her many Covenants. - he received me in a friendly homelike manner quite Chalo like. - thence I went to D. Manuela Molina. - she was not yet visible, but her daughter Mercedes was, who, sitted in the rocking chair, conversed in a manner, quite similar to her mother. besides me, there was D Pepe, very respectable gentleman, whom I am not acquainted with. - after rather a long time D. Manuela came out. - to day she looked charming old, than I had ever seen her before. - I then went to Ameno. Enrique, very stout & bearded, was playing at cards with an uncle of his, Mr Ameno's brother Carmelo. I smoke rode to town together. I breakfasted & have wrote now. It's 4, hardly time for any thing else but writing my Journal. A ride from Chorrillos always makes me sleepy. Thermr 81 F. 24 R. Accord.g to the ministerial Chile papers, a revolution was to have broken out in Santiago, which was however discovered in time, in consequence of which those who are opposed to the present government's party and who favor Freire's views upon the presidency, viz. & principally the Vicuñas are arrested. There is no doubt, that a most violent demagogic revolution any papers, subversive of all regular & established government, containing amongst others the words: "Abáp el Ejecutivo, el Ejecutivo al infierno" has been published, but there is no proof, that the Vicuñas & others had any thing to do with it, on account the contrary it is even said, that these informed the government, that mischief was brewing, — and some go so far, as to say, that the government raised all this noise, in order to have a pretence for placing Santiago & environs under military law, "para ponerla en estado de sitio", in consequence of which these events have taken place, which are quite opportune, as the elections for the new presidents are now about to begin —

Friday 27 Mch. Thermr at 9 h. A. 82 F. 24 R. Gen. Carmen Temeroda, the husband of Remedios grandmother, called. I went with him to Gibbs & Co's house, where we conversed with Gibbs about the Testam.a of Remedios; Basque also called in to give advice whether I should be ordered to buy 2000 £ worth of government bills to pay to Carmen as it is customarily done, or whether I should pay to Cavallero 2000 £. — I told him, he might arrange it — as other relatives always to Cavallero as it is customarily

In the evening Franc.o Zuárni & his wife, Rafaela Correa, called but I had spoken para Zapas. In the Corderico appears a proposal made to the Government by Juan José Garica, Juan Tafaca, José Garica Arnedia, Manuel Zgarza, José Antonio Garcia & Juan Cavallero to "desecar y hacer navegable para toda clase de embarcaciones el rio Rimac entre Lima y el Callao, 2.o establecer quatro diques de carenaje Saturday 28 March. As I had no lesson upon this evening, I availed myself of the leisure hours to pay visits. Mary came with us to Calaya. We first drove to the Lodgings of Henry Wyman, who with his wife Trinidad Arbegoso has returned from Chile, where they have left their children in school. He was not in, she was unwell in bed, and we therefore merely left our cards. Next we drove to Chepa Boza, the widow of an Italian brother of the Bishop, there were several ladies & gentlemen, but the visit was extremely stupid & tedious.

Thence to D. Blas la Fuente's to his wife Trinidad, also just arrived from Arequipa. He is Consejero de Estado & they intend remaining here. There were a gentlemen & his pretty daughter, also Trinidad, the young daughter of Manuel de Althaus, who heroically also made her appearance we remained here some time, conversing agreeably enough. our last visit was to Lachaviere, who is married to a daughter of the late judge Tellería. — his wife was unwell, but he & his sister in law received us very friendly. Before 8 h we were home to take our tea and to spend the evening in the usual manner with Garland, Rimathé & the chief board.

Sunday 29 March. In yesterday's Comercio an excellent article, Remitido, has appeared against the diplomatic fracas which has taken hold of the government, who agitated by the same have now & are sending superfluous & expensive legations to Chili, England, etc. etc. U. S. &c. — visible in every but true and well meaning. I read the same words to Mr Campbell and Lawrence Fernandez de Cea, Mrs Farmer, brother in law, the ladies, widow of Henry Rinecker of Guayaquil, who has named me her executor, and which two persons have commenced a lawsuit the one in the interest of Nancy Rinecker, Rinecker's daughter by his first wife, Dolores Caicedo, the other for herself & her daughter, Rosa Elena. I dispensed them from going to law & counsel arbitration, but I fear in vain. At about noon I started on foot first I called upon a Frenchman, Ortego, who keeps a shop of which whom I wished to speak about Ward's Son, but I did not find him at home. went on the French hotel of Mauri's, I had to see Genl Wright, Rinecker's brother in law and Mauricio Cazotte the former Vice, whom Mr Le Moine introduced to me last Sunday, in p. 234 with both I remained a considerable while. Wright praised the Expression Flore to the very stars. and as Cazotte's I said: "le chancelier de la légation française" or in other words, Le Moine's clerk, who told me, dead that he received a Letter from Mr Mac. Gregor (see p. 187) from Kingston Jamaica, who was on the point of embarking & intended upon reaching Southampton on 1st March. Thence I went to Mamselle Adhemar, with whom I remained a long time conversing very pleasantly. her daughter Jeannette, young, is a nice girl, she's not positively pretty. Old Maisonne Alyo Alcaly, the judge, I was sorry, I did not find at home, but on his stead his wife was in, an elderly disagreeable woman, with whom I had to stay some time, listening to her accounts of old Lima families. I was now not far from the Richmonds, precisely Dr Concha, widow of late Ministro de Torres, wrote her I joined my companions on board the Steamer James Bray, the daughter of the Argentinian, see p. 207. she's so grown up, at Mrs Cole's. she is still very bashful & hardly opens her came in. — I had still a few minutes to spare, which I employed in looking over Lt Prime's, to whom I in fact owe Rafaelita, formerly Correa, my old acquaintance & flame since 1827 & 1829. I made my Excuses for not having been in the drawing room, when on Friday night they called upon me as — After dinner Mariq. & I, Rincke & Irigoyen took a walk down our street to the ruined walls of the Towers. — at the End of our Street towards the Ramos, dirt & filthiness have agglomerated in heaps — & at the very bottom is a stream of running water, which my room a very pretty german book, called: Maria Befreiung. Von Emmy Freyberg, im Jahre 1827. Herausgegeben von W. Meinhold, mit einer Vorrede von Joseph Görres, der Abraham Schwieder in Caserne mit Lesedorn. — When I went to take Tea. I found in our drawing-room or Salita, besides Garland & Rincke as usually, old Agustina Contreras Manuelita Correa from Arequipa, the second wife of Henry Read of Taylor's house. — they are now preparing to take for England via Panamá on 15 April, & she is paying her farewell visits. — When all com gone besides Garland, we, guided by chance came upon a very confidential (half in the way to, Mariq. & I) conversation on the subject of Gilli Crawley & Co house. that Hayne & Davy are going out of the concern on 30 April 1847. there is no doubt of that Alpin will be at the head of the concern here in Lima.

to Pflucker, but there his unfortunate copper-mining speculation is in his way. Garland Baldwin, that he, Pflucker, has invested about 100000 $ in the same, and that that amount in his Cred[r] is sufficient to pay what he owes 66 & upon advances account & Memoranda: — their books certainly very black, if he were to die suddenly. I believe my affairs in his hands would be gone — In Mairs's bedroom, the 1st I came — I do not know — to speak of my having danced twice at Armuri's & dined in Chorrillos at Haynes's, with both which things the Mairs, was much annoyed — the result was the same story, which I have heard many a time, that I do not mind myself [illegible] slights done to myself, and must do Mairs's family for instance, because she is on bad terms with Haynes & Armuri, I should not have gone to either of these two houses — I do not deny, that there is some justice in what Mairs says, tho' on the other hand, I think it is hard, & I told Mairs so, that [illegible] ready to amusements as in Lima and more[over] as my life is, I should still spend the few evenings, which oft. to spend some pleasant hours — and I repeat, that as the 1st in Chorrillos at Armuri's & as the 2d at Haynes's & at Thomas's I amused myself very well —

Monday 20th March — At 9 hrs 7[m] S = 22 R. at 11 h, 82 S = 22 R. at 1 p.m. 21 S = 22 R.

Tuesday 21 March. At 10 hrs 82 S = 22 R. till 20 Clock I went to see Henry Read, of the house of Taylor Read & Co, whose health is quite gone, owing to his almost habitual drunkenness — about 3 years have elapsed, I believe, since I saw him last, he looks rather poorly, his hair has turned to an iron grey, he had a rather long beard, & was dressed in a torn old grey coat — Now however he was quite calm in his conversation rather pleasant, tho' apparently of short memory.

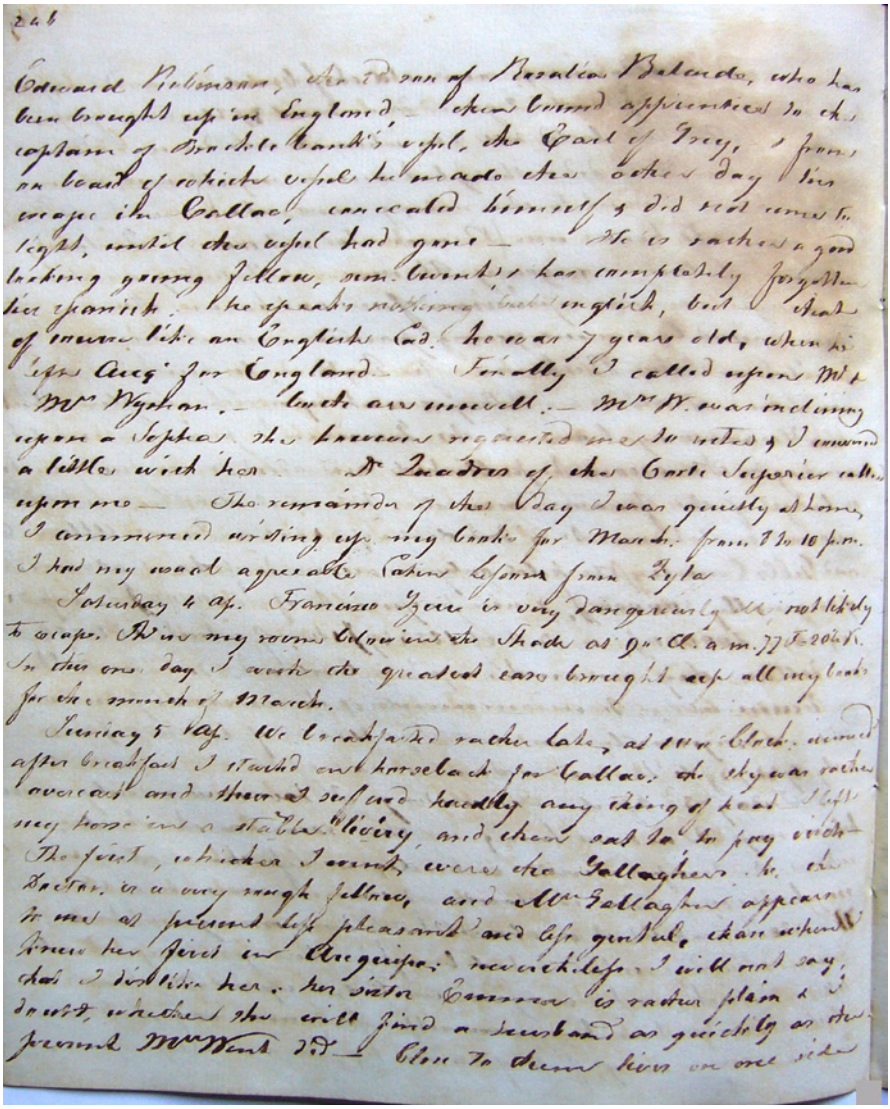
At 7 o Clock I went to see Mrs Hicks, who has been unwell of a very bad cold since Sunday, which time he has kept his house, he was now however better & thought of going out to morrow. I spoke about his copper mine & specimens, which he gave, is not in very unfavorable, quite different from Garland's opinion. At home I found Dr Caravez & his student and Senor Escalera wife, Dr Carmenedia, also Garland with Captain, now Mr Seymour —

Wednesday 1 April. At 10 h 30 m 83 F 22 h R — Yesterday a lovely Xmas, to whom we had 61, blew w into the reg. Champie, the two rooms in front of the street door, left as all our regard, and I removed thither, establishing there my counting house & writing room, because as I expect some goods by the Callao, Agent & Debt, and Juan is prohibited from effecting Sale for me purchasers must come to me & when I do not like, to take them up Stairs in such out of the way room as my room has hitherto been — just whilst I was busy removing, Mr Boardman called to repay my visit — Juan came in the morning early from Callao and de Gibbs. Inventory Charge of the Cash, Mills having removed below, as Hutchinson intends leaving at the end of April & going home to Hamburg, whence he will return after some time & establish himself here — Whilst below I was talking my Cabin Upon, Capt Wright & Gertrudis Hicks called up stairs & took Tea with us



Thursday 2 April — At 10 o Clock I went to Read's house, where all his furniture, Earthen & Glassware, since it was sold in public Sale by Thorne — the purchasers were for the greatest part foreigners, Dartnell, Wheelock who remains in the house, purchased most, — also Blas La Fuente from Arequipa Xmas who manages now Hegan's house. — Mucci for his hotel, — Enriquez Armero, — I bade for various things abt succeeded in obtaining some old chip boards & mess, 3 very old books on ships in 4 Vs, also 2 green decanters & 37 31 green glasses in 12 Vs. The sale lasted till 3 h, when it was dinner Time. In the afternoon I did nothing but amuse myself with reading. For an hour I went to the reading room, which I met Mr. Seymour. At home was (Nicolás had not come) Garland, Manuel Bilardi & a young Alsacian. Yesterday a certain Manadegui, a naval peruvian officer and known officer, accompanied by various young peruvian naval men, have left in the Richmond for England, to purchase a man of war steamer. They count upon the Temple, which the Neuva may have to the Government peruvian, whilst according to the accounts published and added to the prospectus or budget of the Finance minister, Manuel del Rio, which account or statement is dated 2 Sept 1845 Quirós Allier & and Gibbs Crawley & Co hold only on accounts of their advances originally 300000 ₤, & new payments of 300000 ₤, as p. 263 together 600000 ₤, a D. of 1833473 ½ d, of which 187000 & odd dollars they are authorized by Contract, to cancel ½ in documents, & ½ in documents of the external peruvian debt - consequently, until 2 Sept 1845, of 1800000 ₤ ade only 900 ₤ 3 ₤ to 18 were actually paid off!!

Friday 3 April. For writing I have now entirely removed from my Room now hung in the room, in the shade, where the temperature is at 5 degrees F. less than above in my balcony. Now it stands at this moment at 2 h pm 77 F. 20 R., whilst it is above 80 F. At 8 this morning I forbade from Read's what I had bought there yesterday. I called upon Fletcher, who is again in bed, - upon Melchior Bilardi, who has been unwell for some days, - I saw in his room, dirty, full of disorder & various Argentinian,

Edward Richmann, the 2nd son of Ramalho Ballenda, who has been brought up in England — when I found appointed to the captain of Brackle Bank's repl, the Earl of Grey, I found on board of which repl he made the other day his voyage to Callao, concealed himself & did not come to light, until the repl had gone — He is rather a good looking young fellow, can talk, & has completely forgotten his spanish — He speaks nothing but english, but that of course like an English Lad. he was 7 years old, when he left Arcq for England — Finally I called upon Mr & Mrs Wyshan — Both are unwell — Mrs W. was inclining upon a Sofa, she however requested me to retire & I remained a little with her — Mr Quadros of the Court Superior called upon me — The remainder of the day I was quietly at home, I commenced writing up my Cash for March — from 7 to 10 p.m. I had my usual agreeable Cabin Lessons from Zyla

Saturday 4 Ap. Francisco Jose is very dangerously ill not likely to recover. It was my room Colonel the Shade at 9 o'Cl. a.m. 77 F. 20 R. In the course of the day I took the greatest care brought up all my Cash for the month of March.

Sunday 5 Ap. We breakfasted rather late, at 11 o'Clock. Immediately after breakfast I started on horseback for Callao, the day was rather overcast and there I received hardly any thing of heat. I left my horse in a stable Viceroy, and then set to to pay visits. The first, which I made, were the Gallaghers. Mr the Doctor, is a very rough fellow, and Mrs Gallagher appears to me as personal less pleasant and less genteel, than when I knew her first in Arequipa: nevertheless I will not say, that I dislike her. her sister Emma is rather plain & I doubt, whether she will find a husband as quickly as the former Mrs Wendt did — Close to them lives on one side

M^r Branch the English Consul — and on the other side M^r Barton, left in M^r S. Adams stead. I called upon both, but found neither at home, neither was M^r Barton visible — consequently I left my Card, — at Aspdin & Higginson's, & saw Higginson, who, after having drunk himself, accompanied me to Carrallode, the governor of Callao, quite lately married to Panchita, daughter of D^n Pedro C. — they were not in, having gone with the president Castilla and his family on board the Steamer — on a passage to & round the Island San Lorenzo, — thence to D^r Pedro Gonzalez, both he and Augusta, our landlords, looked very old and ungenteel, — their house they have in a miserable, the staircase leading up to their room, like a ladder, — it seems dressed a stranger thing for them to leave their fine house in Lima, for such poor apartments as these, they inhabited here, of an afternoon they do for coolness's sake. D^a Panchita, mother daughter, married to Sanfromio, very plain, looked as unlady as her father & mother, their ruins equally sturdy — Juan Leon Torres, I did not find in, Conroy or Tibbs, but in his room was an Englishman remarkably sitting & writing — extremely better looking, cleaner & more neatly dressed than the rest — Pedro — had it not been for his strange appearance, I should with pleasure have sat down & conversed with her — Finally I took a boat and went on board the Commodore, whom Captain Gordon received me in the most friendly manner imaginable, — as he was busy writing there, I only remained with him about 20 minutes — he intends leaving on the afternoon, sailing not steaming under easy order. I left Callao at 20 min. past 2, & reached the Lima gate in exactly an hour. From the gate to my house it took me about 12 min. — To day the following dined with us. Garland, Rencher, Seymour & Charles Bergmann, which Father Irmel had invited to day in honor Charles Irmel to dress & watch in his father's Cabriolet. Dinner was very nice, we had Bordeaux & Rhenish wine, Madera & Port. After having had a short time at our rooms, all broke up. Seymour & I took a walk over the bridge as far as to Plaza del Retiro. In day time Calm. Sunday, just as soon as it was light we were all on deck, however we saw none, only canoes of people which were in the streets. - when we observed, Seymour & Mr. Craig's plain at dark. I slept a little till Ten hours, by which hours Garland & Reinecke made their appearance, Seymour amused us much with reciting his german ode, Manuel Delardo came, then we played, then at about 9 h. it being a fine warm night, we all walked out together towards the Alameda, & came back at 10 h., when I was so sleepy, that I immediately hastened to my bedroom, neverthe-less I still read a little in bed on Thomas Thomson, it is calculated, that every minute 28 human beings do fall asleep at midnight, but awoke at 4 h. 3 Years died this morning leaving his wife, Ignaz Gutierrez of Aug in poor circumstances & with three children, of which the eldest was sent not long ago for education to Germany thro Spain. - How well I remember, when he got married ago, in Arequipa, about 12 or 14 years ago. he was then thought to be an opulent man - It is said, but I do not, whether it is true, that he unfortunate have in a great measure been destroyed by venereal disease. Last night I read in the reading room, in La Revue des deux mondes, an interesting memoir of Mexico by Lady Hester Stanhope, written by her medical adviser. She was the daughter of the sister of William Pitt, born in 1730, she was a favorite of his, and lived with him, and then, as long as he lived, she could get full credit for her fervent & carnival temper. She despised flattery, hypocrisy, and cowards she thought. In those disregard these two qualities, she did not spare any one, however high her or his rank might be. After Pitt's death in 1806, her reign was at an end, and she, too proud to live at home an occult life, went to Syria, where she lived upon the Lebanon, as queen, as prophetess, she was feared by the lawless tribes around her, and died in 1839 in the greatest misery. She had never been married, & for many years before her death had completely adopted the oriental customs & dress. She used to smoke an long pipes.

Thursday 9 Apr. Holy Thursday. At about 10 o'clock I went out by myself to visit some of the churches, it being on this day the custom of the Roman Catholicks & Indeed others, that is to say, in imitation of the same journey, which Christ is said to have travelled when & when He Cross on his way to Golgotha, they went visit 7 different churches, to say a certain number of certain prayers, or at all events they went kneel down before 7 different altars & say these prayers. At this hour of the day the churches were very empty, and as hardly any lights were lighted, they looked poor & miserable and presented by no means a striking prospect. I visited Santa Domingo, La Merced, the Cathedral and San Francisco, almost in all these four churches a badly made wooden statue of our Saviour, with crowned eyes, with a lantern face, was spread reclining upon a table, and the devotees, almost exclusively exception people of the lower classes, kissed the not encrusted hands & feet — In Santo Domingo, before the high altar, twelve wooden statues of the Apostles, dressed in a bishop's garment with mitre, sitting in a half circle, — the one taller than the other — Judas Iscariot is distinguishable by his red face — in San Francisco they are still round tables covered with a table cloth, upon which many decanters filled with wine, fruit, candlesticks with upon candles under shades (gecandelabras) Here the red faced Judas Iscariot had an eye in his mouth & one in each hand — I returned home, disgusted with these ridiculous ceremonies superstitions — Henry Read paid me a long visit in the morning. at 8½ p m Th in my room below 77 F = 20 R. When I got back, dead at 10 my almost half an hour later I visited again the Church & Santo in my room also San Augustin, where I had not been in the morning — now filled with devotees kneeling, praying, looking, & staring at, also well lighted up, they looked pretties than at day light — I was in the highest degree disgusted with seeing particularly in San Francisco, rows of people in an orientated upon occasion, kiss the feet & hands of the wooden Statues of Christ. Some stepped off, & stalk the one minute past the lips upon the very spot, still moist by the lips of the previous one, — very pretty indeed. — black, brown, white & yellow, men & women, old men & children, negroes & Negresses, Polynesians & pretty decently looking females followed one after another. In the evening we had only Manuel Delarde as visitor —

Friday 11 April, good Friday, a dull, tedious day similar to nearly all which I pass. I finished my letters for the Steamer — Meinig & Ehrig fasted, that is to say, they did not breakfast. we chatted, dined at 6½ earlier than usually, say before 3. Pinheiro came at 4, expecting, I suppose, to dine with us, but we had already finished. — At 7 p.m. Th. 86 R. 19 ½ F.

Saturday 11 Ap. The Steamer arrived from the South. it brought me nothing except a letter with indorsement from Schutter Wms had arrived in the same to fetch his sister in law Emma Robertson. In the evening I went to the reading rooms and met the acquaintance of a Clerk of Hagan's, called Upcott, a speaks Italian.
Sunday 12 Ap. Easter Sunday. After breakfast I amused myself with reading after which I went out to pay visits, — I called upon Cajetano, who is indisposed, — remained with him sometime — upon D. Franzita Valleriana de Lima, — she is by no means a disagreeable Lady, but it seemed to me, as if to day she did not receive me quite so friendly as she used to do on former occasions. — at D. Fernanda Perry, at Mrs Simoens's, Mrs Veach's I left cards. — at D. Candida La Forre a lady, who pleases me much, Ferreyras, in former times head of the Custom house, Minister at the Time, when I was made consul, — now Conyers de Estado, also Franc. Xavier y Achilles Allier came in almost at the same time with me, — consequently, the conversations was rather dull. — there again I invented quite of hand a very pleasantly joke with D. Carmen Canario, whose husband procurador, el tuerto Chaves, & then with D. Rafaella Correa de Queiroz, when two gentlemen came in, both unknown to me — At home Edward, Manuel Orlando, Costa dined with us. — Pinheiro was invited to dine with Rodewald — in the evening Henry Hyman & two wifes, who leave us a few days for Figuiera, called. — he appeared to me very vulgar, like so many Jews. The manner in which I spends the day, was dull & stupid as usually, — my humours was accordingly.
Monday 13 Ap. I finished reading "The Bible in Spain" by George Borrow, of which I may perhaps some Extracts, — wrote plan, in my opinion, the opinion of a half cracked brain, which he developped in his Lettres "d'un habitant de Geneve à ses contemporains" was, "that a subscription sh[ould] be opened before Newton's Tomb, every human being without any exception or difference should be called to subscribe something & any subscriber should name: Three mathematicians, three physicians, three chemists, three physiologists, three discovery men, three painters, three divided amongst the 21 subscribers of talents, elected by twenty three elected, united under the name of the council of Newton, and presided by a mathematician,

Godfrey is a good looking & very pleasant young man, & he speaks Spanish currently. Mann is still backward behindhand both in amiability and the Spanish language - I read in Bud till near three o'Clock in the morning a rather insignificant entertaining English book, called / containing amusing stories which I had borrowed from the reading Nuns - for any young people

Tuesday 29 April. I arose very late; after breakfast I mounted my carriage, harnessed 4 horses and rode to Chorrillos, the same road, as I can not disagreably had, - the road is sandy, the fields on both sides little cultivated, frequently barren - to the left at some distance, there is some rows of hills & mountains, one of which the other. - to the right, about half way, a little off the high road, lies the village of Miraflores, always distinguishable on account of two steeples which adorn it's church: - further on, a very short distance before reaching Chorrillos, you see to the right a Church dedicated to la Senora del Manantio, close to a ravine, which runs to the Beach. The parish is clearly visible ahead of you lies the Morro de Solano, a very remarkable hill, and the point of which the village of Chorrillos - I rode to Mr Linden who were still at breakfast, what our countrymen have to endure in keeping up. There were sitting around the table: he himself, his wife Dr Gutierrez, his children: Francisco, Carlos, Federico, Justin (the youngest Leonardo does not yet dare to sit Federico, Augusta & Veronica, the intimate friend of the house. — the eldest daughter Sophia, who is consumptive is very ill since Friday. D. Manuela Molina de Freitas I did not find at home; neither was Mr Wayne visible. with Wayne I remained half an hour — To day is Sunday Decimo de, when peace is to start from all Churches. — D. Gertrudis & I went to see Chatillon Chevilles, but came just too late. — she is always partial & early towards me. D. Candida & the handsome Dolores had gone out immediately after breakfast & I did not get observed. D. Gertrudis gave me an excellent lunch at noon, mayonaise Oysters, Cheese. Ale &c. The boy had taken them home to wash, so that it was past 3 by when I started. I gallopped nearly the whole way; from Flinders Ranches to the Gate I rode in 50 minutes, thence to my house in 1/4 more — Only Garland dined with us. — Juan was in Chevilles, Richards at Lambeth's, Commadore at Candia's. I lay down after dinner — Tena & Villamil took tea with us — I went to bed early & very sleepy.

Tuesday 21 " " 5. " p.m. 75° = 19°. This morning my long expected furniture brought by Messrs Pichon in Hamburg by Daniel Schuetz arrived, but though they are pretty enough, we cursed all of us dreadfully annoyed with the light manner, in which they were worked. the Jacquaranda wood of which the whole framework is made is beyond measure slight: it is not solid, but veneered, and the veneering is of the legs which Velocity, moreover it is not visible to the ordinary mind unbecause, but merely glued, so that in many places it is broken off & must be fastened again. The round table came packed in the a chair wooden case in the most negligent manner possible, without being at all covered with paper, so that the varnish was completely lost & gone, seem to be so disappointed, after the extravagant cost of the furniture, is most abominable. Orgett & Higginson dispatch the 14 packages furniture at a low rate, say in hand. In the Commercio of today appears the change which has taken place in Castilla's ministry, owing no doubt to the unfriendly Remarks, which have appeared in the papers against Manuel del Rio, who has hitherto been minister of finances. Carpio, minister of the Interior, has resigned, Manuel del Rio has taken his place, - Mendizabal, hitherto minister of war, now abroad, is made minister of finances, and Rufino Echeverria, Lt Gen. Infantry com. in. Cav., minister of war. - 26. Jay Sedan continues minister of the Interior & takes the finances under his charge until the return of Mendizabal.

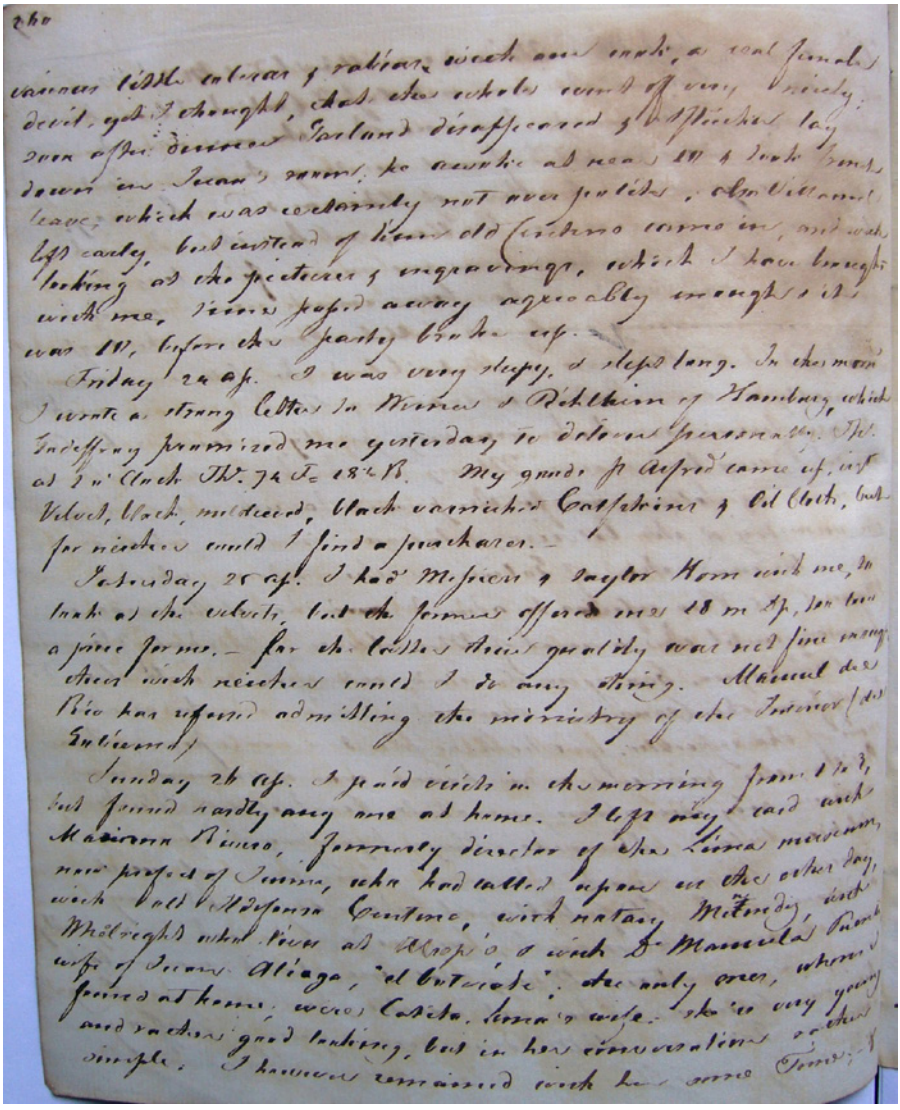
Wednesday 22 April Thermo 9° Cl. 7h 1/2 - 18h 1/2. The whole day we were busily employed with the furniture, one carpenter opened the boxes, another gave hooks to the tables. In the evening the library bookcase and the two presses for blankets made by Otto of Altona arrived; these were beautifully & carefully worked, which we saw, when we opened them on Monday the



Thursday 23 April in the morning. What with opening of boxes, having the furniture carried up stairs & getting every thing ready for next dinner-party, the whole forenoon till 4 o'clock passed away very rapidly. In the morning I went to Lemmens, with the object to invite them to dinner, but, as they, the Chancellor & Consul

Clerc told me, that Mr Le Moine was ill in bed, & Mrs Le Moine not yet visible, because she was not dressed (which I found after-wards was the case) I saw neither the one nor the other & was therefore impeded from inviting them. — Lord right Honble the youngest brother of Thomas Pelham Comte de Sussex to the former in Calleo, cut his throat with a razor. He is said to have been melancholy for a long Time past; others say, that he has been much given to drink. — Tomorrow morning early he will be buried in the English churchyard at Bellaviesta — At 2 o'Clock the following assembled gradually in our Cadres or drawing Room, which with the new furniture looks now very pretty, & towards 3 o'Cl. we sat down to dinner: Marq.e at the head of the Table, to her right Baz Saldan, who for the present has entire the Charge the ministry of the Interior, relations exteriores, which is properly his real: chef of Embassie, or the Interior, which Manuel del Rio refuses to admit — and chef of Hacienda, or finances, until the arrival of Mendizabal — & chef of Guerra until Iturrigui, Consejero de Estado, obtains Leave to absent himself from the Consejo. — Our at present he is the grand-man of the republic, of which he is not a little proud, Ramon Castilla, the president, is an honest man of common Sense without any education. — next to Baz Saldan, Mr Tschudi, Celestino Delard, Ramirez, Mayor, Godfroy & Superannuated Francisco Quiroz, with whom I amused myself much at dinner, I, Hdg Villamil, who is at present very much down in the mouth, Enriquetta, who looked very pretty to-day, Juan, of whom Marq.e told me, that he was in bad humour, because we had not invited the two young Heydemanns, Garland, old Mr Heydemann & young Godfroy who is very amiable. — The Marq.e had an invalid

I walked to the alamedas del Acho. there being a bullfight in la plaza del Acho, a good many people were promenading, in the middle of the avenue & the carriage road was filled with carriages, which were about 200, there carriages are full of ladies, who drive together, in order to be seen. A good many small tables stand in a row, where Negritos served aguardiente del país to their customers. In the alamedas further on there at Acho was a human being was visible. At about ten oclock, my hr Clock, the fights were over, and the Plaza dingerzed swiftly of its spectators, of whom by far the greatest part consisted of the low rabble, blacks & mulattoes with a sprinkling of "Tapadas". Troops had also formed part of the night. They were marching home. To the ones with arms then the crowd was pushed from el Acho down the Alamedas, the streets, over the bridge, which was lined with soldiers on, as far as la plaza. Garland, Brinckerhoff & all Villarreal took tea with us.

Thursday 30 Ap. In the morning the thermometer inside stands at 8 h. a.m. F 73 = 18 R., outside down 72 F = 17 3/4 R. At 10 o'Clock I went by a gunboat to le Havre, the french chargé d'affaires, here the following plenipotentiaries, Chargé d'affaires for the Equador, — Senna Fonseca for the Brazils, Consul General — Barretta, Consul General for the Papal dominions & for Sardinia — Barton, plenipotentiary Chargé for England, Swett for the U. S. The object, why we met, was to take into consideration a declaration of the peruvian government, dated 17 April, & published in the Gazette of the 20th, in which they declare, that foreign diplomatic agents are not to intervene or to interpose in any manner, which their countrymen may have to make in this country, — all agreed, that such a principle could not be admitted and the majority determined upon protesting against the same — Barretta said, that he had already acknowledged the receipt of Paz Soldan's official Note — Vicente Rocafuerte, then he said, that he perfectly agreed with the remainder of his colleagues, yet he could not possibly expose himself in decided terms, because his government entertained more or less the same opinion as the Peruvian government. — Le Moine's notes were the principal objections: — the former translated about into Spanish, his answer to the Gov.t which pleased me much. Francisco also read his — Ecuador who is already in open warfare with the peruvian govt. on account of a Claim, which a certain Alexander St. Norre of Augsburgh makes thereon his medium against the Govt. pecuniary the same Peruvian and regarding which subject he & Paz Soldan have commenced a violent correspondence, understands neither Spanish nor French. — then Lord Barton translated to them what had been said & decided upon & then I translated

I walked home with Ewell; the poor man & his family have suffered much of sickness on the Cascade, they have now removed to Aleppo & thence they are going to remove to la calle de Dolores, where they have relations. Friday 1 May. Luisa Philippa's birth. day. I hoisted my flag & sent a card to La Ménine — In Paz Soldan I entered my note protesting against the declarations of 27 April. At 4 pm. This in my room 73 F = 18 R. Otherwise nothing particular as till to Saturday 2 May.

Sunday 3 May. I amused myself with running over a german book, which I had brought with me, called "Der Ewige Kalender"; then Mulenweg, the N. American, a very pleasant man, perminter of manners & radicals, paid me a long visit — I called afterwards only upon Mr Rocafuerte, Dr Valdés, rather afflicted, but otherwise not disagreeable. Her room was full of visitors; on my return to my house, I had visit (de Pellegrini Rosenthal had already called) Zacharias a very little Frenchman, Vicente Rocafuerte, a very pleasant, lively, active man, Manuel from Arequipa, quien tiene una loco tan mala a Flandres tongues, — and Domingo Elias, the rich landed proprietor from Ica, who during my absence governed in Lima for a short time: he is far from disagreeable. — Our Black Journals Book has lost an ordinary without any cause. — then Angela had to visit Pinches & Garland, who never speak to each other, dined with us as usually; — the evening we always spend quietly at home, accompanied by the two gentlemen. Juan & Alberto is home. I myself rejoice, when these Fêtes [illegible] cease to give us this Latin Europe. We have now finished Sallust & commenced Fabricius de moribus Germanorum, which is more difficult, also interesting, but in my opinion not quite so much as Sallust.

Monday 4 May. Senor Tavares the Brazilian Consul General, also young Centeno. Juan, who works in Faz Saldan's ministerium, called & took me a good deal of time — I am busy with my books but cannot tell any thing.

Tuesday 5 May. This morning I was a long time with Yanke endeavouring to understand how he arranged the accounts for my house with the "Abrigo de la Concepción" — Old Villamil took up more than an hour with useless conversation. The at 7 p.m. ins my r. num 74 F=18 R.

Thursday 7 May. Francisco Sanpedrano, a young man from Santa Cruz engaged, who was brought up here in house several years ago, a cousin of D.ª Gertrudis and of Dolores Alzua, called in the morning. he is intrepid. I was glad, when he left at 11 o'clock. I then went to the reading Room. I found Haynes there, who by the by had called upon me in the morning. he asked me to play a game at chess with him, which I did & gained. I then played with Saldan, a clerk at Naylor's, who is considered as good a player as Bonner. I think he is superior to him, but inferior to me. He beat me, that is to say, he made me know my queen & as it was now 11½, we broke up. — The Steamer Peru came in our anchorage with the 7 July & 17 March Mails from Engl.d

Friday 8 May, my sister Maria's birth. day. I received a kind letter & inclosing from Secretary of 25 Feb.y & 17 March At 9½ a.m. Th. 72½ F=18 R. Somewhat later I received three 4to Letters from Schutte & from Gibbs Sons: the latter contains nothing; the former send me A.S. of my pensions

A conspiracy in the duchy of Tuscany which exploded on 22 & 23d February in Cracovia into a battle just drawn, that was the 24th February the Cracovians gain a victory over the Austrian General Collin: but on 3d March Russian troops entered the Town & Austrians were installed next day. Also in Galicia there was a rising of the Nobles against the Austrian Government, but the lower Classes took part with the Austrian & many of the Nobility were killed. — In Spain Narvaez captain general of the troops, president of the council of State and Minister of war, has resigned. — Mr Wheaton has been sent from the U.S. to Sweden, in order to endeavour to conclude a commercial Treaty between the two countries: that at least does not look warlike. The Times has a long article on which it proves, that to prevent Mexico from falling altogether into the hands of the U.S. would be that it should abandon the republican & return to monarchical principle with a Spanish prince as King. The U.S. also said on our Treaty for California. War between Nueva Granada and Ecuador seems not to be improbable. Back Friday.

Saturday 1 May I was busy with my correspondence for the Steamer. I sold my Velvet & varnished black Calfskins to Bourdi, my old Uncle Pedro Uceda took some days ago. My new last Cases of Cinnamon I sold to Mr. Favre: there I hold only 2 Cases of black Muslins with white & Persian.

Sunday 10 May. I rose late. For all these nights I have been reading in bed till a late hours: Paul Clifford by Bulwer, interesting, but in my opinion disgusting was the Garland dined with us. Treadwell dined with the two young Dagnaans to go with them in the bull fight. Reinhart dined at Lambeth's with Rambach from Rambach & Cramer who has arrived via Panama. Young Alvarado arrived to establish himself as a branch House of Meyer Bland & Co. The Callao arrived 37 days from Liverpool. After dinner I slept a few minutes & went to my office to write. Th. 70 F. 17 N. 17 to 18 in my room.

Monday 10 May, my birthday, how it was celebrated two years ago! last year I was in Venice, to-day, the day passed as quietly as any other. The Steamer arrived from the South. 1 no? Ad. of Schmidt & H with some fair letters. My Sampler did not come up in "Callao".

Tuesday 11 May. Busy writing for the Steamer in the N. and in the S. After dinner my sampler came up. I made some visits to Dorat, Asst. Mag. Campos & Estrada. My Mouquinieres de Laine are beautiful, but much too dear. If rather ordinary printed kiss, commonly large quantities are in the market: ordinary printed plates, fugitive colors, will, I trust, go off by the Guayaquil. I was busy till 11 P.M. writing.

Wednesday 12 May. Garland has been writing till 3 in the morning, & neither the whole night through. The Ecuador left for the South, the Chili for Panama. In the morning the days are always cloudy; towards 10 or 11 the sun comes out.

Thursday 13 May. At 12, dined in my room on Steaks 70 F. 17 N. In the evening I paid a visit with Maing's Irrigueta, whom I fetched from Doña Dandida La Torre, in the Cavallos: she is a large family singing & playing. There was Dn Ramona, the mother, an elderly lady, always very friendly, her daughter Rosita who has passed the years of her first youth, she has a great name in Lima as an excellent piano player, she sang a duo with Enriqueta, which I did not like at all. her rough voice completely overpowers a small voice of Enriquetas sweet tone. — Further two young girls, orphans, Dolita and Margarita Egenziga, children of Rosita's eldest sister, the latter, who took a chair between Mary & myself, pleased me much: she is very pale, but pretty, and in conversation very agreeable. I talked a good deal with her. — Then there were: Mercedes Cartavida, the wife of Emeterio Villamil, a ruined man, she was once considered a beauty, she has preserved her fine voice and sings prettily, her sister Mathilda is not worth mentioning. — We remained rather long, and at home we found Romero, old Centeno, old Villamil & Arenales, from Tala, who has married Paula, the sister of the Talaras: he is a good friend of Mary's. — Talk unfortunately extremely superficial. It was a quarter past three o'Clock before I was able to sleep.

Friday 15 May. I cannot get rid of the Monsieurs de Lima, they are much too dear. they ask 2 Thr, ~~expect~~ duty on them is Rial, and Richarte the Negro has offer, which I have had in 2 m sp. which upon nearly 3000 yards would have a loss of 1/2 rial p yard or nearly 200 Rl. — That is a sad thing which a servant the errand was on unpleasant answers from the Soldiers, for which he says, that in Cerro he does not recognize el derecho representando, nor de la prudencia. From Calle 4 of Calf. I received a letter & consignment of 240 manikins, at the recommendation of C. W. Schmidt & Co. — I fear I shall not be able to do much good with them.

Percy Gayano Cashkeeper, the other Luiz Teixeira, the Brazilian consul general at Lisbon, d'oncyer de Estado. I do not which — As qu' Clerk I went to the Reading Room. I commenced reading the Atlas, but did not find any particular news, only those which p. 266 Inspired former ch. Commerce more in detail. The house of Commons have voted their thanks to the army which gained the victory in the last Indian against the forces of Ashore — After Hayne came in, he asked me to play a rubber at whist, which I did, he, I, Pessoa and Almeida Lopes, a Brazilian, one of the two Editors of the "Correio"; Abercrombie, bookkeeper at Bergmann's cation. I went out afterwards Pessoa and I in, I played three rubbers & lost them, with one rest for playing. at home Maria had gained 5 at vingt-un & Monte, won old Villaverde, Nemesio, Garland & Jan Melchior — In the reading room Jackson played at chess with Bracero a german Clerk at Rodewald's — and others played Billiards — I wondered at the liberty, which Abercrombie took, calling Hayne, my dear fellow. Pessoa invited me to dine with him to-morrow, which I refused.

Sunday 17 May, a fine day with sun shine. At 12 Th. to R= 17 C. After having written the foregoing, I read Torrens's history of the Peninsular war, which which, more interesting than amusing I am whiling away my leisure moments, that which I have but too many (wishing to clear my diary of last year and prepare myself for my Latin lesson) always hinders a good deal of my time. At 1/4 to Maria's: Living & Dinner. I walked to Mr Moore's, but were not received, under pretence, that they were not at home to Nicarchus, who were in Charneiba & then to Carvalhaes. Mrs Carvalhaes, Inesa, a daughter of old Tobias Daliga, who died during my absence, is an insignificant, but otherwise pleasant woman. Maria then drove home. I paid a visit to Schmidgen, who were not visible, I left my Card. — then to Manuela Molina wife of Domingo Tristan, the known "amiga" of Mac Call whose conversation is very agreeable. twenty years ago she was stout, majestic and perhaps the handsomest woman in Lima — now she has become thin, but is still good looking. Her daughter Mercedes was unwell & not visible, — her little daughter Rosario was. — D. Diego, a very old ugly man, came in. — I also went to D. Augustina Tristan, who is now old & ugly. her daughter who has lately married Laforence, was with her. she is shockingly plain. her son Florentino, "ayudante del Gobierno", a military man with a black beard, looks like a cut throat. several old gentlemen were present, — I knew only Escalon, who has made his fortune by Gambling — Juan drove to Chorrillos. — Carlotti & Reinicke dined with us. — there was a bull-fight. Mary & daughter drove. I walked with Reinicke to the Alameda, which was crowded with people — The evening quietly at home. Old Villamil & Don Agustin Tordoya

Monday 18 May. Th. at 9 a.m. 68 F = 16 R.

Tuesday 19 May. Th. at 5 p.m. 70½ F = 17 R. In the evening I went to the reading-rooms, where I lost 2 games chess to Jackson and gained two rubbers whist which I played the end with Cheeseman, Bergmann's bookkeeper, the others with Naylor Jackson Clark against Hayne and Alexandrowitz, one of the Comercio's Editors —

Wednesday 20 May. To my surprise I received a letter from Don Clemente, a brewer of Vals, who at the recommendation of Schnell consigned me 240 bottles, which however I received still-Thursday 21 May, ascension day. During the morning I remained quietly at home in my room, reading, writing and particularly answering letters with the german poetry accompanying pretty engravings, which Schnelling had made me a present of Christmas 1842 — Juan rode to Chorrillos — Reinicke & Carland dined with us, after dinner I answered letters with Chopin — and Pissano came to take to with us. He remained till 9h, when all left. — Last night Capt. Bell of the Pinnace was with us — Marig. It is quite clear, is determined not to go with me to Europe. — and I see the other hand are as resolved not to leave here my whole life time. — What will be the Result. I cannot say. I cannot guess —

Friday 22 May. Nothing worth mentioning.

Saturday 23 May. In the morning early Barron called upon me; at a late hour I went to M. Meyne's, to whom we went to consult about the Government's answers to our Notes (see 18 May) M. Meyne was of opinion, that all the letters Pay Soldan is correct & that Consul General have in reality no diplomatical Character, then it was determined, that we should merely acknowledge receipt of the last Note — In the Peruano of Wednesday a decree is published, which amongst the military men has caused general discontent, the following is the paragraph, which displeases: 4° "A todos los militares á quienes se deba cantidades por ajustes y habiamos servido en los titulados Directorio, Regeneracion ó Confederacion, se les rebajará el tiempo de otro servicio, como si no hubiesen pertenecido al ejercito. lo que entonces y por esa epoca hubiesen percibido se les cargará á la parte de tiempo en que legalmente hayan ganado sueldo" — Marig's brother, D. Mariano, the General, Sierra with whom we are on bad Terms, not because we dislike him, but because Mar. will have no acquaintance with her wife Juana Navajas, a woman in former years of doubtful reputation, and because M. D. Mariano says, that he cannot like any person, who dislikes his wife, — I say, D. Mariano has been gradually getting blind, owing to a kind of skin growing over the eyeball, — yesterday an operation has been performed, which has turned out well. — Late in the evening I went to the Reading Room, after having read a little

Hayne came & with him, Almonacagier & Jackson I played Whist till nearly 11. this is a pleasant way, to spend an hour or two.

Sunday 24 May. In the morning I went over to Nimatz, who was not well. On Thursday night at 11 o Clock he has had an attack, which I consider to have been dangerous, to me it seems to have been a mild fit of apoplexy. he had giddiness, an oppression upon his chest, an attempt to prevent his speaking, & besides, he said he felt clearly & distinctly how the blood rushed up & down thro' his whole body. Salam. his physician prescribed hot foot baths, which cured him. however last night he had another attack, tho' less strong. and this morning he looked still very poorly, tho' he said, that he felt quite well. I fear very much, that Hermanos Pinelos will not live long. Maria tells me, that he has had such attacks as this more than once. Afterwards I paid visit. my first was to Dominga Elias. I did not find him at home, but some disagreable females. not his wife, who is in Chili. with whom I conversed a few words, thence I went to Mrs Hayne, with whom I remained a considerable while and spent the time pleasantly enough. I like her, tho' I know, that generally speaking she has but few, if any, friends. Old Villamil & old Mercedes Castanedas, the father-in-law of Prudencio Villamil called. My next visit was to the Cavallos. D. Benita was playing on the piano admired by a number of gentlemen most French, who were sitting round. two of the younger girls came in, but as I had taken my seat upon the sopha near old D. Ramona, my conversation was limited to her. my last visit was to Godinidos. I remained a pretty long time, conversing with Mrs G. an agreable woman. also the daughters, Julia & Mathilda, tho' not pretty, very entertaining pale pleased me. – various gentlemen were there to wish me. – At home only Melchior Delaforce Garland dined with us. – also Jean, he for a wonder not having gone to Chantilly, to spend the day with Beguinamps – After dinner I took a walk with Garland to the Alameda, whither Mary & Anne with Lucy & Conrad in the Calèche, as she is in the habit of doing. – At home I finished Delaware's Earl Clifford for the second time, and all went up stairs to take tea. We played a rubber at whist for love & spent a dull evening –

Monday 7th May. The cloudy weather has decidedly set in. Rod 10 a.m. by Fisher R. – The Semaine of last Saturday, in the editorial article, treats on what Consuls are allowed to do & not to do. says that the Consuls of Sardinia, Great Britain and Denmark have gone out of their sphere in protesting against the Government's declarations, to which I refer on 30 April, see also 15th & 23d May – their articles goes well further & maintains, that it is in their power, to allow Consuls to hoist their flag and to place their arms over their door. – Barratta came to me in the evening, quite excited on account of the spread rumours, which, he says, are being heaped upon us, and he thinks of inserting Remitidos answering in the sense in answer to the government declarations. – I there again told me that I thought of remaining quiet and of not saying a word. – with my flag & arms I like them, I would not make any alteration. – if the government were to take them down by force, they may do so, because I cannot resist. – but by my own accord I shall not take them down – Another and perhaps the principal object of his Barratta's visit was to endeavour to induce me to enter into a speculation of his various articles from Genoa, of which he showed me the rude drawn out by him. The amount would be about 4000 ℔, and he only wishes one to secure him the remainder of the gain after I myself have made 30 or 40 ℔. Nos – He is convinced, that such a speculation would have more than 100 ℔. – I myself believe, he may be right, if the goods received be sold by retail, but by wholesale, I have not such an opinion of it, because, as there are but few persons here, whose trade lies in that line, they can easily combine & make their own terms which for want of competition the importer will ultimately be obliged to accept – Moreover I have no money besides the 3200 ℔ at 60 ℔, at my disposal, & them I do not wish to risk them –

Pinedo, who is poorly, dined with us, he ate mealy rice pudd. which Mary had made for him. In the evening, visited at sea, old Mr Teresa Bidaga, wife of Evaristo, called: she is very affable & the pink of politeness: – nothing pleasant – with her came a pretty young girl, Rosarita Tarde, born in Madrid: she may be about 15 or 17 years of age: she is rather dark, but her dark eyes, mouth, lips, teeth are beautiful: only her nose is much much too large –

Wednesday 3d May. Th. at noon 71 F = 17 R. I have again a stiff neck & pain in the same, as I had in February – In Saturday's Gaceta is an excellent article against the convention mentioned Guizot's declaration in the diplomatic agents of 17 April – The Steamer Ecuador arrived in Valparaiso on 6 May – This evening we had a visit from D. Teresa Castañeda with her little son Daniel: she is young but neither very pretty, nor particularly agreeable: the boy the brought me only two Letters, has both very friendly, the one from J. J. Mayer jr. of St Gall, the other from L. Alexander of Glasgow. In last night's Conversie is a Reminder from General Medina, in which he speaks, that he had nothing to do with the Voyage of Magnin & Mayor. Saturday evening I went to the Reading Rooms and lost three games of chess against Jackson. I cannot possibly play against him.

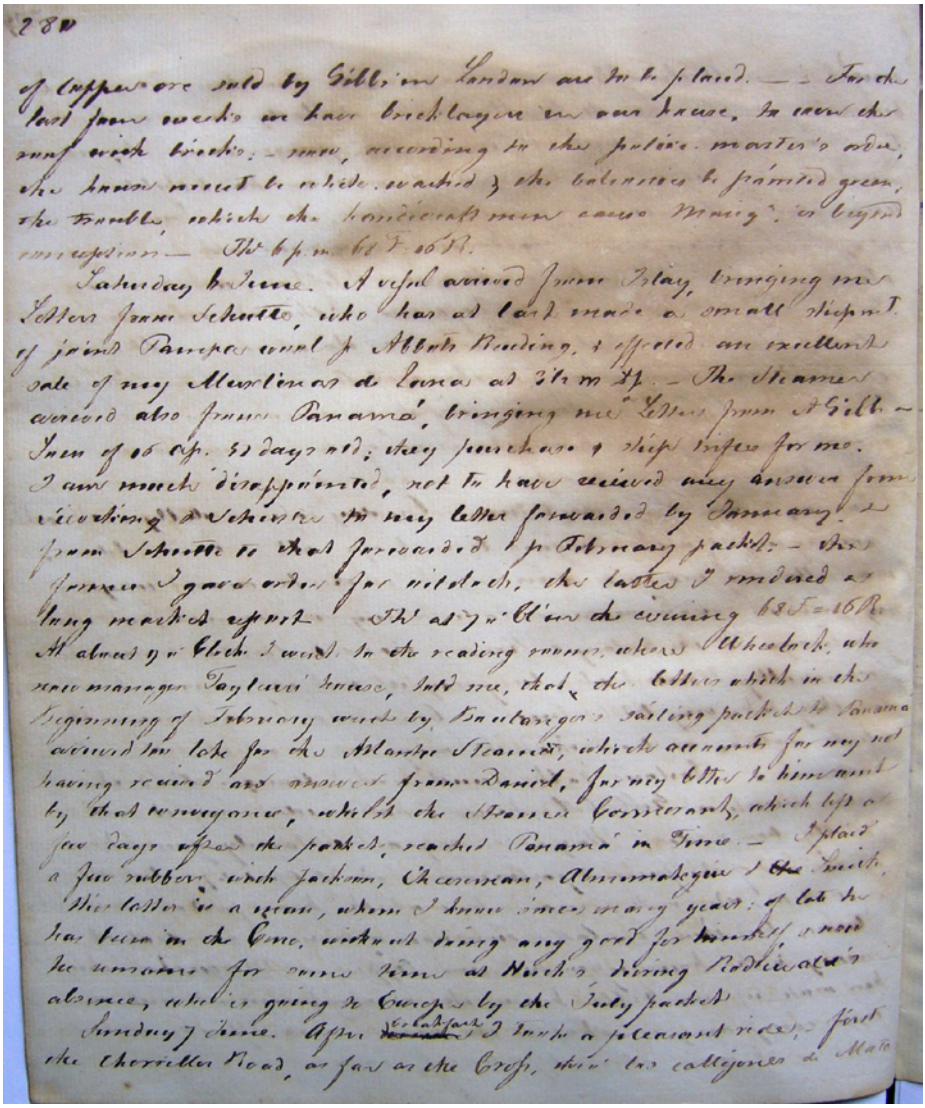
Sunday 31 May. The winter has set in decidedly, that is frequently rains in the morning and at night. Today a Tailor's Mate, J. J. Zimmer from Zürich, applied to me for assistance & I have made myself responsible to D'Gallagher, to admit him into the hospital at Valparaiso for 25 $. N. B. St 6 J. 1851. I occupied myself with arranging the wines bought from David Vanasen & received pr Alfred. after which I paid several visits, to Ch. Hellmann who has returned from his trip to Valparaiso & Santiago, I found inside Henry Meyer, Mercedes Garlando, - to Corvalans, - to the Delanos and to Dr Balbo Rosenbuschs, - to day for the first time I saw her sisters, Emmy, - oh, how ugly! - Riemsdyk, Garland dined with us especially. - There was bull fights. I however did not go out, but remained quietly at home, afternoon & evening - Garland showed me Punch's Almanach. The print that the moon is a female in, & she then inquires about what and day more than Sterling!" - "A servant in a slave owned inside ends"



Monday 1 June. Whit monday. Cramsforad Stagshund. After breakfast I rode out upon Carriquada de Joaras. Sadrizzling rain fell the whole time. I rode past the Callao gate on Jac on the trees stand. - and then to the two alamedas the Acho and de las tres pilas. - After having come I dressed and paid visits, to Mr Smith, the N. A. Chargé. - his wife was not visible, being unwell. - but there was her little daughter, and Wednesday Prevost on a visit - from him I learnt that Comercio the plazuela de la Merced. the old lady is not visible - but I saw & conversed with Mariquita, the youngest daughter, who is much handsomer than Rafaelita. she is married and has 4 children. with Blas de Fuente I remained not long: his wife Francisca, did' not appear - this again I staid some time with old D. Ignacio Palacios. - as Mariano Alejo Alvarez & I left my card - and at Pinar with D. Francisco & Rafaelita I chatted some time - Garland & Reinoso we had at dinner - in the afternoon Mr Passe called - in the evening we had the deaf Miranda from Lima Last night Mariano Rivera, justice of Junin, with Jose Calderon and remained about 2 hours. he is one of the few superior men. - he has been educated in Europe.

Tuesday 2 June to Friday 5 June. One day passes as dully as the other.
I occupy myself much studying Italian (as all I do not believe that Zylla my master is very clever in other languages) copying my previous rough memoranda into my red Journals, and writing for Irrigoyen the history of Rome & that of England in Spanish. - occasionally I must also busy myself with my mercantile affairs, but they take very little time - Bernardina I teach now & then a little English, at least that she may not forget the little she knows. Garland talks much with Manig.a about the arrangements in Gibbs Crl.s house. & has no idea, how it will finally be settled. - Hayes & Bary are certainly going home at the end of the present partnership. viz 30 Sep. 1826. but it is uncertain, who is to remain here at the head, perhaps Garland's brother, but then the latter owes now an enormous deal of money to the house upon his mine Copper in Mercedes. they have made up in Gibbs' house the accounts current with this copper company or what is the same with Fletcher & he owes us 30 Sept about 190 mm ps against which some N.S.

of Copper ore sold by Gibbins London are to be placed. — For the last four weeks we have bricklayers in our house, to cover the roof with bricks; — now, according to the police master's order, the houses must be white washed & the balconies be painted green, the Bamble, which the handicraft men cause Manig. a lengthy conversation — Th 6 p.m. 68 F. 16 R.

Saturday 5 June. A vessel arrived from Islay, bringing me letters from Schutte, who has at last made a small shipment of grind Pampas wool f Abbott Reading, & effected an excellent sale of my Alexiana de Lanas ad 21½ m ℔. — The Steamer arrived also from Panamá, bringing me Letters from A Gibbins of 16 Apr. 52 days old; they purchase f ships papers for me. I am much disappointed, not to have received any answer from Heinrich Schuster to my letter forwarded by January — from Schutte to that forwarded p February packet — the former I gave order for wildbath, the latter I rendered as long marked report — Th at 9 p.m. Clear the evening 68 F = 16 R. At about 9 o'Clock I went to the reading room, where Wheelock, who now manages Taylors house, told me, that the letter which in the beginning of February went by Panatanga's sailing packet to Panama arrived too late for the Atlantic Steamer, which accounts for my not having received an answer from Daniel, for my letter to him sent by that conveyance, which the Steamer Connecticut, which left a few days after the packet, reached Panamá in Time. — I played a few rubber with Jackson, Cheeseman, Abercrombie & the Smith. The latter is a man, whom I know since many years: of late he has been in the Cove, without doing any good for himself, & now he remains for some time as Hirsch's during Radicati's absence, who is going to Europe by the July packet.

Sunday 6 June. After breakfast I took a pleasant ride, first the Cherrillos Road, as far as the Cross, then the callejones de Matta madinga, then back as far as the hacienda of Santa Beatriz, where I turned to the left, reached the village of Magdalena & there horses — My cards knocked themselves to a long call upon Inguiva, Revn. Clerk & agent here. He is suffering from dysentery. When I came home, Villanueva and the two young Frenchmen, who work in Mr Ainsa's office, Gazette and another, whose name I do not know, were with Maria Francisca Xavier also called Pancha dined at Embeke's, the postboy having brought them three guests, with a Garland, who is now also employed with the correspondence for the Steamer, & Dr Melchior Velarde — After dinner Maria, Perigenia, Conradina and the two little daughters of Felipe Parrodi. Took their usual drive to the Alameda whilst I remained at home, studying latin. I am now reading Horace & Satyrs, which are difficult — At Tea we had only the odious Anselmo Centeno, employé de Estado. — Juan was as usually gone to Chevallier, where he spends the Sun = & feast days at Bergmann's —

Monday 8 June. I was busy the whole day writing for the Steamer, amongst others I wrote a letter to James Clark, requesting him to write me something certain in pursuance of the conversation about a joint establishment here, which we had together on 2 June ult. p. 161 — In the Peninsula the most interesting news are those from the East Indies, where the English have gained two more terrible battles against the Sikhs, the first near a small village called Aliwal on 28 January, the second on 10 February, of Sobraon near the ~~river~~ bridge Hurrichee against 30000 men, who had fortified themselves [illegible] in a formidable manner, their artillery consisted of 68 guns, & their head engineer was a Spaniard Narbon de Alcantara. The battle lasted from 9 in the morning till 11 o Clock at night, the English lost 200 killed & wounded 2 Generals officers & 200 rank & files, the conquering all their artillery ammunition, flags &c. In consequence the English had passed the Sutledge & on 20 February they were expected to enter the capital of the Settlers. Besides Sir Henry Hardenge, Sir Hugh Gough, & Sir Henry Smith are distinguishing themselves — The Corn Bill is slowly making its way thro' the House of Commons, the pertinacity disputing each inch of ground — With this all the Colonial questions is in statu quo. Some look rather warlike preparations are being made. The English are building formidable men of war steamers, three new ones are ready at Spithead: The Terrible, Retribution & Emerge. The Terrible carries 24 guns & mortars, of which the smallest 32 pounders the two largest mortars throw bombs which weigh 98 pounds & power 200 pounds, the machinery inside is between large & strong coal stores, so that the hostile balls cannot pass The Revolution in Poland was not yet completely suppressed — Here in Lima, the Executive power, or rather Mr. G. Tag Seoane, has had a dispute of importance with "la corte suprema", the latter complaining, that the former was interfering with the judicial power: the affair was brought before the Consejo de Estado, all the members of which, — Mariano Blas le Fuente, one of them, having made out the report — gave their opinions against Mr. Seoane, with the exception of Francisco Quiroz — On Saturday Seoane, Tag Seoane has since published in the editorial article a long attack against le Fuente, which finishes with the words, that he hopes that el Consejo de Estado will reconsider their opinion & alter its declaration — Another Cause has been brought before el Consejo, that of Iguaín who complains bitterly of the Executive: here the Consejo has given no opinion: "que dada que Iguaín es disputado" —

Tuesday 4 June. At 11 a.m. Th. 67½ F. 15½ R.

Wednesday 10. Yesterday & to-day I was occupied with my tiring correspondence for the two Steamers and with bringing up my Diary to 31 May. All the houses, and particularly as far as I know

Thursday 11 June — Last night Juan worked till 2. young Olivier, the nephew of Charles, did not go to bed the whole night — To day the Equator France sails for Panama, the Chili Frames for the South. — To day is Corpus Christi Solemnity. — Corpus Christy day — Fete Dieu — Festa da Corpus Domini — Corpus Christi — Ao 2 Pr. 67 F. 168. The procession passed near house, it came from the large square (la plaza) I went up stairs to the balcony to have a look at it. the great many people which preceded & followed it gave it something like a grand appearance. On each side of the street, soldiers forming a line, were kneeling & presenting arms — First walked from each Church, from the Cathedral, San Augustin, San Francisco &c. those men carrying the crosses belonging to each Church, on each side of the street walked a long row first, on one side the pupils of the military college, on the other side those of the college of San Carlos, next the friars of the different communities, of San Augustin in black, of Santo Domingo white with black, of la Merced, white, of San Francisco blue, of la Merced grey — every one carrying a candle — then in the middle of the street part of the canons (canonigos) boys & lay brothers from the Cathedral swinging incensory — a few canons of a higher rank in front with robes, there with gold embroidered cappelleo — next and then in the grand thing — a gold embroidered canopy carried by canons, canons or whosoever wishes to have this honor — under the same walks the archbishop carrying the host in the Tabernacle (la Hostia en la custodia) — the canopy is followed by a few people of the lower classes squeezing & pushing each other to be as near the same as possible — after which the president Bustillo in his full uniform with his ministers, Mayorna General de la corte suprema, General Raigada and some members of the supreme court of justice — a few companies as it is the custom here, Mary invited relations of her acquaintances to come to see. Las Cadenas, las Torres, las Palacios, the wife of Pomares (the youngest of the Palacios) sister with, is not come. At 12 M'Cuell, the U.S. Chargé, called, a little after at their visit, he does not speak any Spanish yet. Gradually the following made their appearance: Zylla, who has much improved in Spanish, young Charles Henry Pfeiffer of Hamburg, son of Henry Pfeiffer, — Edmann the head of Pfeiffer's house in Montevideo, General Wright, Pfeiffers & their children — the two little girls Dona Carida & Mariquita, Commandeur Fernandez, Arrada, deaf like post.

Jose Tuna, a stupid fellow, with his little son; — Jose Pallares — Cafeyac, Sergeant, the two young Bergmanns, friends particular friends, Reuter, Hagen (Endlessly's agents), Mariano Moreira, a pleasant young man, Francisco Santisteban, Liberato Pelaez, Cheeman partners of Ahrens, young Oppelaer, — of ladies only

Thursday 7 June. Today being Granadina's birth day (she was 8 years old) Garland, Reineke & Arevalo dined with us. At 6 p.m. Th. 15½ R-by-F. In the afternoon D. Rafaelita Correa, now Mrs Quiros, my old flame from the years 1827 & 1829 with her nice young daughter Rosita called upon Mary; whilst they were up stairs, a parcel in paper was brought by a mulatto; it was directed to Conrad: I was curious to see a present from her parents from Arequipa: but on opening it, there was paper on paper in which was wrapt up a nail, a cigar, one real, a fillet, a piece of soap, a small pencil and some pretty note-paper: on the wall a bear from Tacna — Mary & I were still up when Steam communicated part 10; I received him with a very angry face & words, for today at dinner his companion had been beyond measure surly & disagreable: he excused himself & thereby led to a drawn and recriminations & voluntary explanations all round. Reineke, Garland &c. &c. the Result was past Oblivion & a recon-ciliation, embraces & tears on the part of mother & son — Friday 8 June. Th. at 10½ a.m. R. 15½ F. I have commenced copying in clear & in Spanish my diary kept during my residence in Rome. Last before dinner, a Captain Brown called upon me together with a young man, whose name is Low, manager of Lang's house; the latter resembles Garland much; the former has been some out as captain of the Steamer Ecuador and he is now going to reside for some years in Callao, employed in some capacity or other in the Pacific Steam Navigation Company. his wife, to whom he has not been married long, is the niece of Samuel Lang, and in consequence they have brought out to Mary & myself a letter of introduction from Lang. to do not please me particularly, tho I cannot say either, that he displeased me: he is somewhat superior to the generality of captains, but not much.
Saturday 9th June. In the evening Mr Rocafuerte, a lively 287

Valkarius, well intended means, called which prevented my giving to the Lima or reading rooms, as I have made a habit of doing every Saturday.

Sunday 21 June. Rain in the morning & evening a drizzling rain fall and disagreeable weather. The consequence of this wretched weather i. e. chalcos, fells in the neighbourhood of Lima, which in the summer season are completely dried up & arid, are now covered with verdure and grass, which are called Amancaes with a yellow flower of the same name. Weather it is now the custom to ride and so I did this morning after breakfast, first I rode down to the alameda del Acho or Jardin de la "piedra lisa". To the right you have the river Rimac, which at the present season of the year is low of water, & the town of Lima. In the left lower of hills, amongst which San Cristoval almost 1000 ft above the level of the sea, distinguishes itself, upon the sandy beach a cross, at the foot of the same are the warm baths, which Pissis has erected. I rode back thro' el paseo de Aguas where about a century ago one of the Viceroys intended making a beautiful building, waterfalls & splendid public promenade, only one facade has been finished with various archways, which is gradually falling into decay, and where the walk was to have been, heaps of sweepings from the mount are lying about. This paseo de aguas leads me to the alameda de los tres pilas bearing this name because there are three fountains, generally dry, only on particular occasions the water flows up. At the end of the avenue is a convento, la Recoleta, of the barefooted friars, belonging to the order of San Francisco de Assis, dressed in grey. To the right of this convento is an ascent to the cerro de San Cristoval, to the left the carriage road leads towards Amancaes, on both sides of the road are various

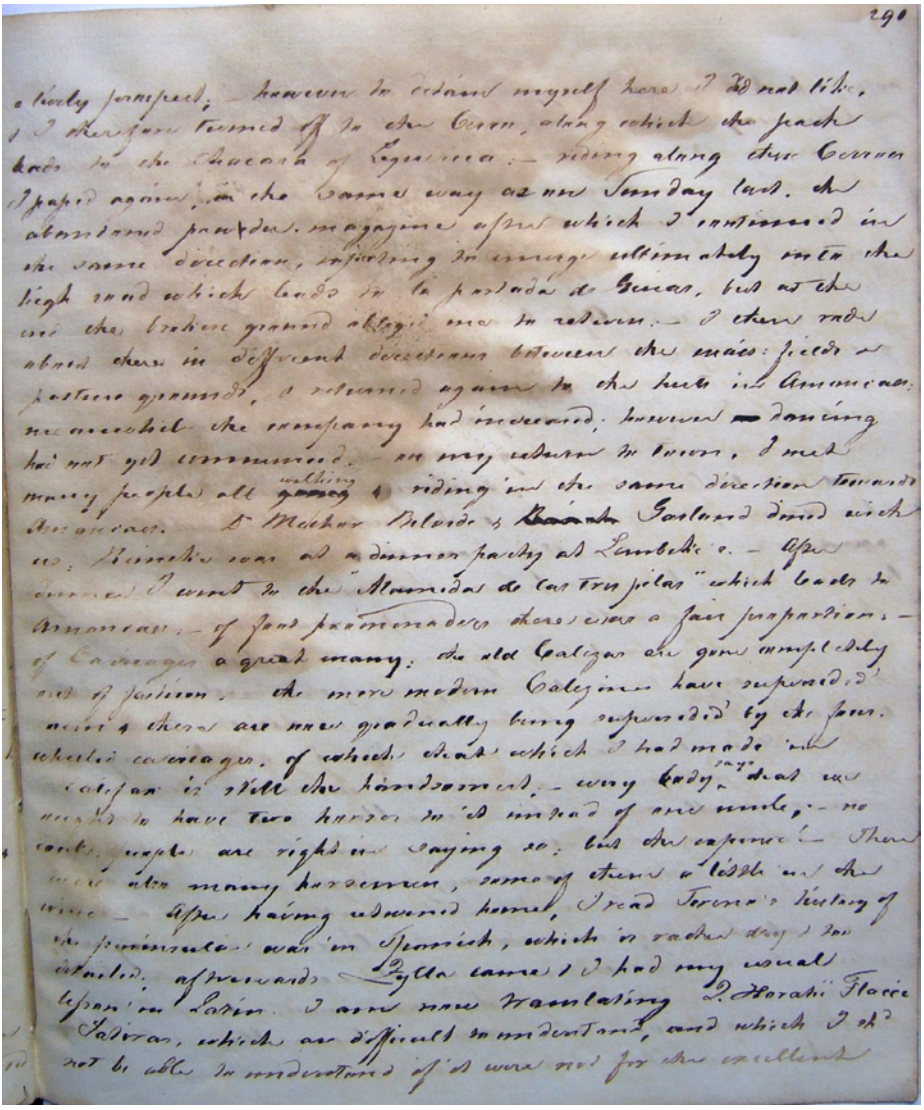
I could not distinguish D. but now I see that she is not at all pretty. Jane with a large mouth, - and tall. - Finally I called upon Regnaresses, where I answered nearly very well, conversed with the two daughters Sofia & Charlotta, whom I like very well. there was many visitors Hellmann, Rodewald, the two Amers, Barte, young Mercier, young Brauns, Lederers young german, clerk at Hellmann's & general Wright - At dinner we had at home D. Melchor Delarde, Lanuchi & Garland, after dinner I played chess against the two former, & as usually badly did I play, - had I lost against Ronicker & one against Melchor was drawn. - afterwards I indeed later in my room, drank a glass of tea & remained up stairs - Since the little set in with Juan on Thursday evening, he has become extremely amiable

Monday 22 June. In the evening we had a visit of Rosita Escallon, with her two nieces Adela & Margarita Zuzuriaga. Rosita, a lady of about 30 should think, sang very prettily & on did Quriguela



Tuesday 23 June. At about 6 o Clock in the evening Mary & I went out in the Calesin to pay visits, first to the N. S. minister, Curt, who is abominably stiff & formal, and does not speak a single word of Spanish. - His wife was unwell & not visible. the daughter, Isabel, is a nice little girl of about 12, & speaks Spanish very fairly. Thence to Lang's house, to visit Mrs Brown, in the sitting room were Mr or Captain Brown, Mr Lang the head of Lang's house & one Clerk, Jordan, a nephew of Lang's, all other somewhat vulgar or at least unpolished. Brown speaks no Spanish at all, Lang very little & Jordan fairly. After a few minutes Mr Brown came in, she is tall & plain with a tremendous mouth & unpleasant what a difference between her & Mrs Bradbury & Mrs Mellish of London for instance. - she has picked up a little Spanish & could converse a few words with Mary. The third visit, which we paid, was to Mr Taylor the wife of D. Zavallos. she is the daughter of the marquis de Torre Tagle, who a traitor to the patriot Cause, fled to Callao during the siege, in 1826, when Rodil commanded there. the house, wherein he lives, was built by his grandfather, and is really a palace: "la verdadera grandeza" as the Spaniards say. the gate way, the stair case, the halls or gallaries every thing is grand & magnificent. the audiencia is a long saloon, carpeted & lighted up with several lamps, at the end of this saloon another room, also carpeted & prettily furnished, where, after we had waited a few minutes, Mrs Zavallos came to receive us. — she, as I said already last Sunday, is a pretty insignificant woman, who appear to me as but in three rooms apartments. the husband, the brother, was sleeping [illegible], until ha. noon, as she told us, — in order to — as we believe — be keep awake when gambling during the night. — Mainly I then returned home, where we found our regular visitors, Garland & Kinsley, to take tea with us. Later I went to the reading room & played three rubbers at whist with Almonacegui, Jackson & Chamberlain —

Wednesday 24 June, mid summer day San Juan, where every body visits Amancaes; I also rode out after breakfast say at about half past ten; — there were a great many gentlemen on horseback foreigners & natives, they all halted at one of the principal provisional "Ramadas"; ladies I saw one or two, who had come out in their carriages; of the lower classes, Negros, Mulattoes & Cholos a good many, some on horseback, others on foot, some finally of the same color — these wandered & rode about, adorned with the yellow amancaes flowers; — here & there parties had sat down upon stones, which serve as pens for sheep, taking refreshments. — I rode further up, whereby the whole plain filled with groups of people & the steeples of Lima, behind which San Cristoval & the sea towards a body prospect; — however to console myself here I did not like, I therefore turned off to the Town, along which the path leads to the Quinta of Equinoa. — riding along this Town I passed again in the same way as on Sunday last. the abundant parades, magazines of which I mentioned in the same direction, ending in many ultimately in the high road which leads to la parada de Bucas, but as the one the broken ground obliged me to return. — I then rode about there in different directions between the mães: fields & pasture grounds, & returned again to the huts in Americas, we meanwhile the company had increased, however — dancing had not yet commenced. — on my return to town, I met many people all walking riding in the same direction towards Americas. — D. Mathew Pilcher & Garland dined with us; Pinches was at a dinner party at Lambelle's. — After dinner I went to the "Alamedas de las tres palas" which leads to Americas. — of foot promenaders there was a fair proportion. — of Carriages a great many: the old Calezas are gone completely out of fashion: the more modern Calezines have superseded them & these are now gradually being superseded by the four wheeled carriages, of which those which I had made in Calcutta is still the handsomest. — every body says that we ought to have two horses instead of one mule, — no doubt, maybe are right in saying so: but the expence! — There were also many horsemen, some of them a little in the wine — After having returned home, I read Torens's history of the peninsular war in Spanish, which is rather dry & too detailed; afterwards Lydia came & I had my usual lesson in Latin. I am now translating D. Horatii Flacci Satiras, which are difficult to understand, and which I shd not be able to understand if it were not for the excellent rides, which I have in my Doctor's, division.—

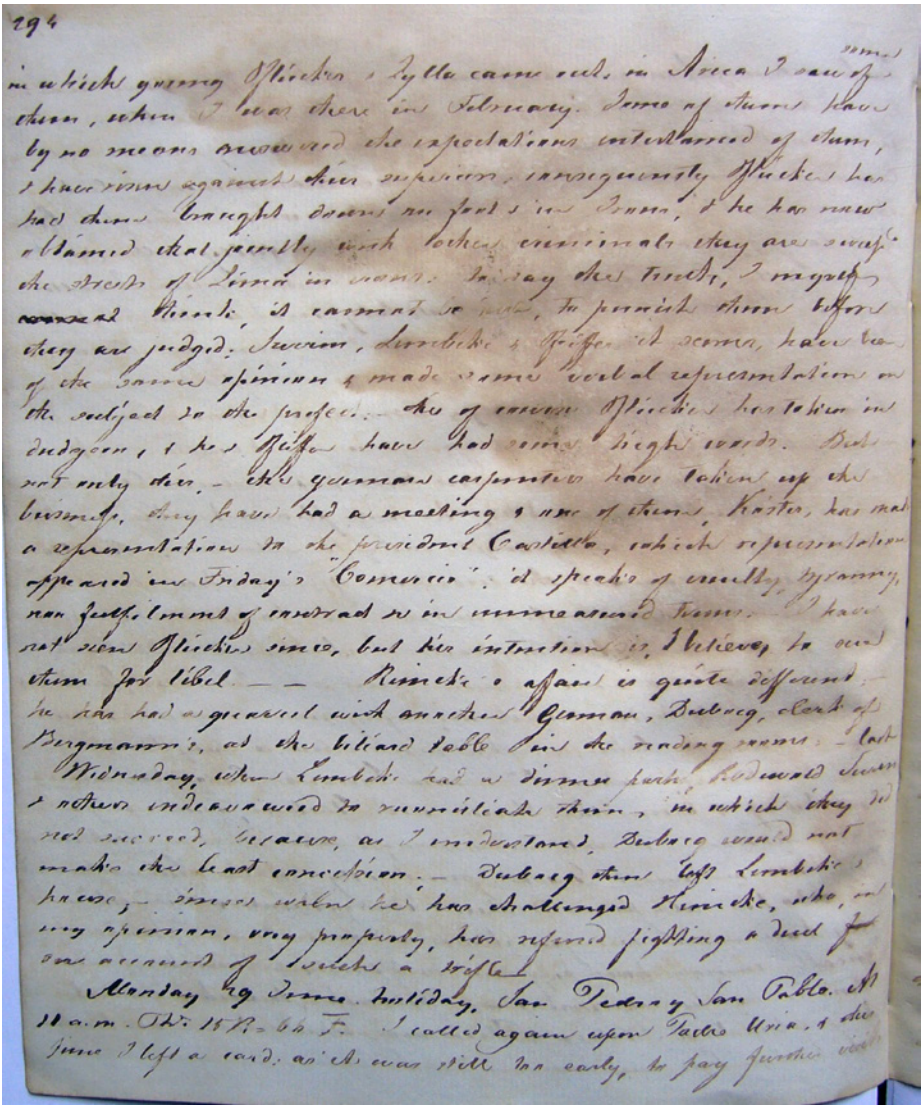
Thursday 25 June. W. at 2 p.m. 15 R = 66 F.

Saturday 27 " " " 2 " " 15 = 66. In the morning we had a visit of Doctor Izquierdo, who is by no means disagreeable, and part 9 o' Clock I went to the reading rooms, where I found Mister Forbes of Hull's, Jackson of Naylor's, Cheeseman's of Trigg's arms and Juan.



Sunday 28 June. After breakfast I took a ride, but in a direction quite different from my usual rides. I rode eastward, in which direction the town extends a considerable distance, I passed thro' the Barbacoa Gate, the country is sandy as in general all round Lima, & the road runs frequently between low mud walls, the fields are little cultivated: to the right I had a view over rather low ground, to the left is a short ridge of low hills, which separates [illegible] road & valley from that of Maranillas, which lies more to the left and nearer the river, — at the extremity of the said ridge of hills, where it slopes down to the level ground, I turned to the left & passing a Chacara called Puente I came into the Maranillas Road, passed the Cementerio & church yard, a fine handsome building & entered thro' the Maranillas gate. Upon the Barbacoa Road I met a great many negroes upon their jackasses, bringing to town immense baskets made of canes of all sizes, I also saw a Black dressed for morning from one negro to the other with a saint's image, which they kissed — for which they had to pay, perhaps a medio or a real.

Before emerging into the Maranillas road, I made a round about way, & came to another Chacara, to ask my way, which two Negro women, one elderly & one young girl showed me with much willingness: they were singularly spotted, for in their faces upon their shining brown black color, they had rather darker spots, of a very dark greenish shade — I said in which young Fliecher & Zylla came out in Arica I saw some of them, when I was there in February. Some of them have by no means answered the expectations entertained of them, & have since against their superiors, consequently Fliecher has had them brought down as prisoners in Iquique, & he has now complained that, jointly with others criminals they are swarming the streets of Lima in irons. In any case, I regret Fliecher is censured so soon, to punish them before they are judged. Iquique, Lembeke & Pfeiffer at Lima, have been of the same opinion & made some verbal representations on the subject to the prefect. The of course Fliecher has taken in dudgeon, & he & Pfeiffer have had some high words. But not only this. The German carpenters have taken up the business, they have had a meeting & one of them, Kaster, has made a representation to the president Castilla, which representation appeared in Friday's "Comercio". It speaks of cruelty, tyranny, non-fulfilment of contract &c in the most unmeasured terms. I have not seen Fliecher since, but his intention is, I believe, to sue them for libel. — — Reineke's affair is quite different — he has had a quarrel with another German, Dubarg, clerk of Bergmann's, at the billiard table in the reading room. — Last Wednesday, when Lembeke had a dinner party, Rodewald & others endeavoured to reconcile them, in which they did not succeed, because, as I understand, Dubarg would not make the least concession. — Dubarg then left Lembeke's house, since when he has challenged Reineke, who, on my opinion, very properly, has refused fighting a duel for one accused of [illegible]

Monday 19 June. Holiday. San Pedro y San Pablo. At 10 a.m. Obs. 18° 7′ 6″ S. I called again upon Padre Una, & this time I left a card, as it was still too early to pay further visits

I took a long walk out of the Calle de gales until the end of the Alameda & back again. tho' the day was cloudy, the weather was agreeable, & by walking at a regular pace, not too fast. I was entertained passing by the Calle Real, not far from the Street, where D.ª Teresa Bodega: I saw her now in mourning. & she looked at her old woman, which she really is. but there again she appeared Cheerfully, than she usually does. I next called again at the two Coldermans from Guayaquil, the elder Mrs. Cruickshanks wife, the younger D.ª Carmen, no children either; with them I also remained a considerable while, talking about Riverds, de Rivadeneyra Mayguid &c. — With D.ª Rosa, the Coldermans from Cambaygues, wife to natural daughter of Melchor Seilla, I said less time, she is very significant, about a fortnight ago she had last her son, a boy of two & about two years of age, which contributed to make her melancholy. there to Thomas Conroy, in order to congratulate her wife. it being her saint's day. she was unwell & not visible. Conroy who is rather crowded & overbearing is not very agreeable. & Miss Slater, the governess of his children, who was sitting in her nothing than, in callico & plain and neat Fashion. — Finally I went to D.ª Carmen Carasco, with the third lady, I am on excellent terms & I am always well pleased with my visits to her. — When I came home, I was astonished, to find with a grand circle assembled, as Sir Tristan, Ruperto Echenique (his son in law & minister of war, as many, who please me much) Lorenzo Rivadeneyra, other son in law, a poor wretch) Diamond of Alcaldes Secretary, who in a few days is leaving for Tacna. to establish himself there — besides Ramirez & Garland: afterwards General Wright & Liberals Agua, the latter, a very pleasant young fellow, Whicker, who gave me a detailed account of the row with his nurse: — also Melchor Seilla & Amalia: these two ladies dined with us as well as D. V. After dinner Mary.ª Remy.ª drove to the Alameda, whilst I gained while took my usual lesson Schon from Zylla Sunday 30 June. Miss Fleming brought me a letter from Alexander with a small parcel of Cotton cloths for Mary Rufold from Glasgow. It was 11 a.m. 84 R. 65 F. he the afternoon I fetched Mary from the Palacio and at a still later hour I sold my Cloths to Mad. Mago at 2½ m 3p the Count is minister de guerre. — Lopez Ballesteros Estado Pinto — Chiniguy de guerra — Mendizabal, de hacienda.

Wednesday 1 July. I had a long visit from Pfleiderer, who is of course annoyed with Pfeiffer & Tembleque, about their interference in his business, & will accuse the rebellious miners, placed at liberty by Castillo's especial command, under the guarantee of the confirmed Pinto, before me now in Pfeiffer's mill — I brought up my books & drew my Trial Balance — Last month I have hardly done any business at all — Thursday 2 July. Rowe called upon me in the morning 84 at 7 p.m. 84 R. 64 F.
Friday 3 July, nothing. Saturday 4 July. Pfleiderer's miners are again taken hold of and send up to the mines, to be tried there. Pfleiderer & Pfeiffer & Tembleque have engaged a procurador for them, who has commenced a lawsuit against Pfleiderer, making him responsible for damages & prejudices — The Rima arrived from Play with a Letter of Schuster, in which he recommends a number of articles and sends a very advantageous a/c. of the Cocoa Monsieur de Laire, or Callao, which I imagined to have arrived & went as usually to the reading room, where I plaid at Mall with Abercrombie, Cheeseman, Robertson, (the son of old W.

Lord Robertson & partner of Melady & Castanida) and a young very tall Englishman, Hard of Bath. —

Sunday 5 July. After breakfast I went to Manuel Espindra de los Torre, from whom I bought a Car of the called Mauvaises de Laine, paid him & he passed upon the piece, which he had paid Gibbs 676. — I then returned home, mounted my or rather Enriqueta's horse (of which Garland has made her a present) and rode out to Aranconas, where review was to be held of the troops. Five battalions & some 1200 artillery. The small pampas or plain between the hills presented quite a picturesque appearance. The soldiers were sitting ~~here~~ ~~there~~ in groups, accompanied here & there by their sweethearts (rabonas) in their glaring colors for there are generally ~~dressed~~ more themselves with scarlet Baize shawls bury with cord & the market was filled together — some civilians rode about. — Also of the lower ~~of~~ classes there was a few walking about — the president Castelli, accompanied by his staff, followed by his lady guard, en règle, rode up & down. They stopped at a ranch & as the carriage of Mr Bertin Zwallow, the Tagle, with the two young daughters of Eguzquiza & others were formerly came driving up, they made the ladies a present & the president offered Mr Zwallow his arm, & together they marched a little higher up — I met St Manel Cuidor de la Torre, & after riding about a little, we found were station upon a neighbouring hill, which commanded the plains & whence we had a pretty view of the evolutions of the troops. — We remained there more than a hour, by which time we felt cold. — we rode down again & then the troops, with them

Fires towards the hills, as well as the artillery, continued firing. this lasted about one hour & as the echo rolled thro' the hills, there was an incessant roaring, which I should think, gives some faint idea of a battle in aprnan. Past 2 o Clock Mr Le Tonnelier & I rode home; we overtook Malo going with his wife, with whom we conversed. — she is not young, but not badly looking. — she has been the widow of Baker & the little I saw & heard of her, did by no means capivate me. — In the Alameda Marq.e Conig.a & Gonrad.a were holding in the Calezin: — We had at dinner Reineke, Garland & Melchor Delaide, as usually; after dinner I played at chess with the two latter & then studied my Latin for Tyllo: my task was the 2nd Aeneides & went to bed at 11. —

Monday 6 July. I went out to make some purchases for Augusta, but could not find any thing which I wanted — At 4 p.m. H R 624

Tuesday 7 July. I bought some Maandenes de Laine, & hand from Lynch, & was busy packing them up the whole morning. Young Mr Adrian Ward, son of Isaac Ward of Islay, arrived: he is a good looking quiet lad of about 18 years of age; he dined with us in the evening I took him to Monsieur Orange's college — The Steamer from the North arrived. From Siemthing I had no letter from J. Schuette one of 30 May, in which he tells me, that if I do not send a Credit for him in London & allow him to act for me, (I shackled,) it will not be worth his while, to look out for any consignm.ts for me — I answer him, that nothing of a Credit in London is mentioned in our agreem.t, — that I strictly act up to it, & that I am sorry, that I have taken the trouble of writing and a report for him & also that I troubled him with sending it to him — If he takes it amiss I cannot help it & must do without his consignm.ts: it does and one to open a Credit for him in England. — James Jack writes me a friendly letter, but says he cannot yet determine any thing about forming an Establishment in Lima — Gibbs' letter is inexplicable, for my order letter of 28 Feb? had not yet reached them — The United States & Mexico are at war — The new Constitution brought into by Sir Robert has passed the house of Commons with a majority of nearly 90 voices —

Wednesday 7 July. Rose breakfast I went to Cumnell Rd & bought 1 C. with 80 Musicians super added Turned at 4 P.M. the drop of 11 again? they are very pretty. At part 5 P.M. I went with Fearon to dine at Bergmann's, after having removed a little, we sat down in the following order, in the middle of the Table. Mr Bergmann, on his right Hillmann, Wheelwright, Gemmel, Wright, round the Table: Archibald (a clerk of Bergmann's) & Frederick B.F. the opp. Gent Wright & Barlow (Engl. Consul general) Isabel B. (Baptista, who is always suffering of Asthma, had not appeared) Frederick, Mr Bergmann opp his lady, Mr Murdock, a grand Lunk Scotch Lady (an Ecambela) Wasser, Zubrey (a clerk of B's) again round the Table, Charles B & his sister Augusta, then Fearon, Murdock, F. Rowe & again Mr B. — The dinner was splendid, I may say, almost too much — The first time the Table was completely covered — next time, again covered, but Desserts which don't get up & with draw to make drawing room which by the by is but poorly furnished, I remained a little with Dr Bermudez & Mr Murdock, the former is very fully stuck & at present far from handsome — the greater number of the gentlemen remained outside) smoking — We returned again to the dinner table, now the table was cover'd with Desserts of — and fruit & ices stood upon the polished mahogany Table, the dessert knives & forks were very pretty, — mother of pearl handles & silver blades, upon silver prettily worked ornaments. The ladies soon retired, after which Officers & Gentlemen commenced singing German songs, when the stupid: Englishmen Bombastes &c. Herbert &c. — We then also followed the ladies to the drawing-room: at dinner I conversed agreeably with Murdoch & Rowe, both pleasant men. I drank wine with every one, except with Officers, Mr Murdoch & the two Clerks — After dinner we had coffee. I conversed here & there, Augusta danced by herself the Cracovienne, then Jane with her the Italian air in costume the Italian air in costume & Isabel sang. Dalee, came in who accompanied her on the piano, also Sophie, who as usual, made her appearance & pretty enough, was well pleased, considering the nature of the party. I went home at nearly 10 h. The party was given in honor of Redwald & Rowe, the former being for Europe, the latter returning to Valparaiso & Talca Carolina Officers wish him, to go there to school. Women were very indifferent, Champaigne actually bad. — Isabel did not please me so well as she has done on other occasions —

Thursday 9 July. All in a sudden Mr Finch made his appearance, he comes from the Ocean in Tamar he has been lying dangerously ill — After he had gone away, he came back to shew me a letter from his brother Ferdinand of La Paz, who by the bye is on the point of marrying there, who wishes some of the moonmoor riches of silver, which are being found there. The burning Tear's mine has made, where the copper on has changed into rich silver ore and Finch has mines equally rich. Eldest mariner Alexander's daughter, married in Glasgow, & Boulanger has married in Paita —, a niece of Lamas, the first man in that neighbourhood. I saw also many others days with my correspondence for the Steamers to Sweet & March –

Friday 11 July. I received 200 numbers from Andres Tamaira & Schmitt & in the Contaduria de Valores I had registered a number of Billetes sultanes by Schmitt – Zyllas did not come in the evening: he was busy as well as I. – I went out in the morning to call upon Rudewald, whom I did not find at home, but he came to us, in his usual good bye – also upon Mr Thurnes, brother of him, who is married to Miss Dean, a relations of the Higginsons & who is established in Valparaiso & Guayaquil. – Other Gentlemen from Sweden in Paita. & Byrne from Panama joined the Company

Saturday 12 July. I finished my long letter to Mr Schmitt &c. Not against my inclination I lent Finch $1000 – against his pagare payable in 2 months. We dined with us, also Rinecke. Amongst the 200 numbers yesterday received from Tamaira is no Salvo, or at least no which is much in light. Juan has tried to pass it, but has not succeeded. At 6 p.m. Mr Mr Rinecke &c &c – In the evening we had a visit from old Cardero, also again from Finch, who at Maig[s] told us afterwards treasons. I read my evangel & went in the reading Rooms, where I played chess with Allen & Rogers, Smith from Hook's, Cheeseman & Jackson, who is the brother of the handsome Mr Kendall, who was with here some years ago – I saw in the papers, that Louis Philippe again has been shot upon by a young Keeper, who had been turned out of his royal service, & who had done the deed merely out of private revenge: the gun was two barrelled, & the fires of both barrels, but neither the King nor any one in the carriages was hurt –

Sunday 13 July. After breakfast I rode down to Callao, to take my letters direction, a stock parcel for Schmitt. – At Bryon's I met also Higginsons & Mayer & Godfroy's supercargo. I walked along the mole, from the fort, which projects into the sea, surrounded by an iron balcades until the extremity, where it ceases near the castle; iron rails are laid, to secure the guns, which are lodged in the Chambers in the Castle — Near one gate of the castle is an excavation for Calaboza, Chains in them Ranches, Irons here, belonging to the soldiers, who form the garrison. — I then rode back to Lima & after had changed my dress, paid only visits to Melchor Delarde, where in morning Dr. Ind. in la Jondes de Capela —, the room, which he inhabits, is a miserable dirty place — and then to Officers where as usually only Dr Pancke (Gertrude's mother) and Dr Salom were visible; general Wright, the old Lemberg, as Officers call him, was the only visitor. At dinner we had Pinches & Garland; they left early in the evening. — Consumed myself with reading a novel of James, the Smuggler, which pleases me much.

Monday 12 July, quiet Day. I read James's smuggler till 2 in the morning

Tuesday 13. Juan succeeded in passing the bad notes, which I had received on Saturday from Zamora — Yesterday Gallagher returned 2 646 to my account the Balance of 120000 ℔ which they had lent to him at 1%. Interest amounted to more than 1000 ℔. now I have 121000 ℔ in Gibbs's hands & no employ for them. At 5%. p. m. 14 M - 65 ½ S. — In the evening I went to Gibbs Counter & house, where jointly with Officers I looked over some accounts of the late Henry Rivers of Guayaquil. On my Return I found at home Mrs Wheelwright taking tea with her, she in rather good humour and amicable. At 9 o'Clock I accompanied her home & stayed up for a few moments; in the same room which Read used to inhabit, once Wheelwright was sitting, reading the Comercio. — This House of Gamboa belonged to the father of the present Mrs Wheelwright & of the rents she receives 50 ℔ monthly them determined not to go, but she wished & certainly expected Irmgarda to go with me, but who could have thought it, Irmgarda would not, when we urged her: she began to cry, both Maria & I got angry with her, & she was told her straight forward, that she did not like to go, merely because Heinrich did not go, however she would not confess it, but I am sure, this is the case — Irmgarda expressly declined to go under the pretence, that her garment dance, because some drops back he lifted up ma[y] made many, which has spoiled his gaiters, this passed him still I permits his dancing — now with him the real Cause is in my opinion, because Bergmann will not go & because that family is beside in bad credit, also is also, there one doubt of it, a despicable character — Towards 9 o Clock I went thither, a good many people were assembled and by & bye a few more came: — the two sitting rooms, prettily carpeted, were well lighted up, the furniture, the cushions of the sophas as well as the sophas was covered with red velvet with yellow designs, a piano in each room, & the full sized pictures of Endemann his wife & the two daughters, Julia & Matilda at the wall. As far as I remember the following was there: Various officers of a french man of war, who had dined there, — the two Clerks of La Marie, Cazelle & N. N. d'Jarnac, — Emil Mira, who has shortly returned from Europe & who is about opening a house here for Meyer & Thomas Seguiria, Richard from Alsop, Laurie from Gibb, Brauns from Huth, Endemann came with his three daughters, who were as white as a sheet of paper, also Irmgarda very sallow stout, — Dorothea Clausen with whom I had a long talk & her sister in law Clarke, Big Soldan for a short time, Garcia del Rio — Fraund & her wife, one or two of his sisters in law, the Moreiras, young Moreira — Dona Carvallos, with her two sisters Zulia &

Margarita, the latter in my opinion, the nicest girl present – a young Miss Harmon cousin and very pretty. – Mrs. McAlroy & her daughter Caroline, also a pretty girl, with Eliza Higginson, who stays with them & who did not at all please me. I of course addressed her, she has the color of my own eyes with which, – a Miss Bustamante, Manuel Salazar & his wife Mariq. Mendiberu, a pretty little woman, – I think, most of these were about all. – of course, when I first came I marched up to Mrs Cadena, made my courtesy for Mariq & Luisq & then left myself in the crowd. – Jose Soler played, & Ricardo Cevallos & Julia Cadena sang a duo very prettily, then dancing commenced, some one or other of the ladies playing the piano. quadrilles, waltzes, polkas & Spanish country dances were danced. – I waltzed once with Mariq Antonia once with Ricardo Cevallos, one or two times round with Margarita Zuzuaga, once with the Bustamante by mistake, thinking it was the Cadena & a country dance with young Mr Salazar. – I tried conversing with Ricardo Cevallos, but did not get on well. I think it was her fault as much as mine upon the whole, unless dancing was going on, there was little hilarity & hardly any conversation. – At about 9 tea was handed round, afterwards ices & in the neighbouring room a large table was set out with all sorts of refreshments, every thing very nice & in abundance – I cannot say I was very well amused, but neither was I displeased. I left just when there was a general move to the refreshment room & walking alone, wrapt up in my big Cloak, down the dark Streets of Lima I came home safely when it struck midnight – I gave Mariq an account of the party & went to Bed.

Friday 17 July. The Temperature feels very cool. At 2 pm Th. 14 R = 63½ F.

Saturday 18 July. In the evening, say at about 9 o' Clock, I went, as I am in the habit of doing on Saturdays, to the exchange or reading room, where during there were a good many Officers, who dashed as fast & hard as a hog, S. Gallagher, Smith, Captains of the Steamers Chile, Edward Smith of Huth's house, Dundas the English vice consul, Collao, Bastos, as present British Consul general in Lima, young Robertson partner of Melendez & Castaneda, Jackson of Naylor's house, and Hayne. - I gained only one rubber, and as I play a good many, my winnings came up to about 10 ff, rather too much for one sitting -

Sunday 19 July. Some after breakfast I rode out towards Aranjuez, on the road I overtook Carrasco & Pacheco on a most fiery Arabian, as he is generally very vicious and on the notorious bit "mucrepide", nevertheless we entered into conversations & rode back together to town - His very welcome I despise, Mary & Theresa are in her college, & Hayne came to pay his visit. - I should not wonder, that he came, exactly because he had seen Mary &c, - he was highly delighted & pleased with our drawingroom & furniture. - he said, that of all the houses, just like ours was not in Lima - On my observing to him, that whilst visiting Lima, he might easily purchase various things similar to mine, he said, that he saw no chance of his visiting the continent, because Mr Gibbs had already chalked out for him a good deal of business for which he would have to attend to immediately on his arrival - I showed him my engravings, pictures, bookcase &c. - After he had left, I also went out & took to Aldridges, where I had to remain a long time before Miss Eliza Higginsons made her appearance. I thought her now much better looking than I had done on Wednesday last - still I can not complexion is very dark, but shows she has particularly pretty teeth & altogether her features are more handsome than otherwise, since I went to the Judge Mariano Alejo Alvarez, a very dear & great friend of ours, there was Lastra with him, the "administrador de la aduana de Lima" Alvarez got me ale, beer and, which I myself had made him a present of, & readers drank half a bottle, but much. At dinner we had as usually Garland & Hamilton & saw the other play chess, read the Smuggler, lay down on the Sopha and fell quite dispatched with my idle life until I went below & passed an hour, preparing my Letters for Lydia — In the afternoon Mrs Castellon, born Canseco of Arequipa, the wife of the president, called upon Mariq.ª, she came accompanied by Cipriano Delgado, a brother of Dª Mariq.ª Indalecia, who is living and a debtor to Gibbs Crawley & Jn nearly $2500 — our interview time, he is now a kind of "educand de Gobierno" & meets Mrs Castellon every where. — Mrs C. appears to be a pleasant, good-natured woman — When all were gone, I had a conversation with Mariq.ª, who told me, that, as far as she understand from Garland, the affair of the mine of Ulloa in's matter went the her mourning in the house of Gibbs somewhat doubtful. — I myself do not believe, that he will be turned out. — however Garland has already gone so far as to tell Mariq.ª, that in such a case Nelson from Chile might be called hither to attend to the Sale — I am anxious to see, what arrangements will finally be made in the house of Gibbs. — also Hayes is determined to attend this favorite business, & I should therefore not be surprised if he had made some arrangement with Dagueine, which would account for his not ordering again upon me. — went to bed rather in the horizontal —

Monday 20 July. Geoffroy's Alfred has arrived from Osaca in 30 days. Shortly for Hamburg. I went down to the General Zollhammer & also to the Society for Storehouses Emigrantes, in which I sent a small box with two old Indian clay idols. From Senator I got the details of a few articles, which he recommended to me & for which he I gave an order to Sievek & Schroeder — Mrs in her shop,

Manuel Ollague came in & asked me for a letter of introduction for Hamburg, which I of course promised to give him – He says, that by the February Steamer he will go over to Europe – his sons are there & he will put them in school in Hamburg & then remain two or three years in Europe: He proposed to me to go with him & to make purchases jointly – Now, I think, in the course of this year it will be decided, whether I do something with Jack – or against with Gibbs, for a few days ago Haynes told me, that probably in the course of next month he could make me some proposal – or I go home to make purchases or let them be made thro' the influence of some one else

Tuesday 20 July. Ollague has taken some of enemy at Interest at Naylor's & M'Lean Rate 1 a 1 ½ %. I have now nearly have ½ with Gibbs & partly in my own hands: pay annoying! – I finished my letter to J. & J. At 6 p.m. TW. 14 R = 72 F. Yesterday our little dog, Marie, bring'g a Camadina Jacket fell from above into the yard, pain: if covers he had hurt himself: but nothing seems to be broken –

Wednesday 22 July. The Highlanders arrived, bringing me Exp.t Black Martins. – Duguerre came to me on account of my proposals regarding joint French business. – Thursday 23 July, nothing

Friday 24 July. The Antonia arrived bringing me 958 ℔ dry pressed Cochineal Hh.ds – The Alfred was to sail to day to Hamburg, words by her to Commerz Collegium, to Society for Northern Antiquities both in Copenhg, to the latter I send various Peruvian & some Bolivian birds for a Copenhg museum. Further I wrote to J. & J. with various orders to Alex Smith Vincennes with 2 small China Crape Shawls for her two daughters, & to Charles Ropes with a long description of my voyage from Arica to Callao Gibb Crawley & Co are drawing as present heavily upon England, & are again purchasing bar. silver at a speculation of Brockblank & Co Old Brockblank bank is dead— Lambert is carrying on the war of the gunmaker against Gillies with astonishing activity. In the evening I went to Gibb' Connel's house, where I consulted Gillies against Degueine's proposals, which did not appear to him to be much out of the way.

Saturday 25 July. A. 9 am. Th. 14½–13½ F. Cowdam had invited us to spend the day in Monserrat, to celebrate the birthday of the old gentleman. D. Santiago, a very excellent old man, who is a retired judge under a junior, was vocal jubilado. In the morning I made out an rough a letter to Degueine's & almost & Mairs. Long & Conrad & Co. I rode out before one of the ranches there, of many the best of them, but still a miserable [illegible] building, sitting upon bricken & clay a pretty large party was assembled, many of them I am not acquainted with. I will just draw them, whom I know. Garland, Wagner & his wife, old Mrs Palacios with her three daughters, the youngest, or rather the least old, Mrs Pineda with her husband, General Baggada, the wife of Manuel Rojo Alvarez, the niece of Mrs Cowdam, a Mrs Calzagoya from Montevideo, her sister, Evaristo, Mrs Cowdam's brother, and at least with 20 persons more, also Pinaire, a French shopkeeper. All [illegible] was rather cold & windy, by & by however the weather improved, the sun did not appear — The manner, in which the day was spent, was about the following: Now & then we walked about, I twice with Mrs Wagner, with whom by the by I am always on intelligent terms, through Mrs Cowdam is not one with [illegible] & Felipsita, one of Mrs Cowdam's nieces, a very nice, rather good looking, well brought up young girl. — and the third time with Mrs Olabegoya, who has been very good and who still is good looking. in her compartment she is also pleased there were two Spanish men, who, accompanying them, also with the harp sang most miserably songs of the country. – we had also midday music and some dancing upon the uneven round ground before the ranche. there were many lady dancers, but the gentlemen were also – gaudy dressed. – I danced a country dance with the Olab. – goya, and a waltz with Mrs Fonseca. At about 2 we had a most abundant lunch, consisting of Jarabe & turkeys and hams & fowls & pickles and cakes and wines &c. in one house ahead all. I had Mrs Hayne to my right & a young man embarrassing me to my left – and with the former I conversed very pleasantly. she spoke in high terms of her sister Laura, who she said, had received a first rate education & who she added was absolutely a charming young one of Gibbs' establishment? – Between Lunch & dinner, which was put on the table at about 5, diversions were the same as before, with the addition that Mr Fonseca had a "Monde" Table put up, in which also Mary & Laura, & my interpreter occasionally kept at a distance. I climbed up one of the hills which surround the plain of Arrancaes, whence I had a beautiful view of Lima. I had nearly forgotten to mention, that we had some Panaccucai but upon the whole dancing went on very badly, my spirits – I have also what they call in Quichua "Pachamanca" (Olla de tierra. Earthen pot), which means that the people of the country, Chola or Campesina whenever they may be, make a provisional oven of fire, which they heat, which being done, they take out the fire and put into the oven potatoes, chicken

Claims, which the Government or Contractors may have against Peach & Irvine are settled & yesterday against Taylor & Irvine the Engineers are carrying on the investigations & actively looking on & examining all their old papers — The Sun had risen red & I came home somewhat bound I now merely dressed & called upon Mr Corvalan and Dog-marro: at the latter's I met two gentlemen, whom I did not know, but in the course of conversation I found out that the one was General La Fuente, who pleased me — the other his son-in-law, a Chilean Lawyer, married to his daughter Narcisa, whom I did not admire — Soon joined at Dogmaros: Garland & Rivadavia with us — after dinner I slept an hour, then went with Maiz: Emig: & Rivadavia to see Melcher Belaude, who is all since three weeks in the Jurado of Copala — On our return I went to my room, preparing my Latin Lesson for Zylla. & at 9 went up Main again — besides Rivadavia & Garland there was Belaude, Emig: & Emig: Manuel Lorenzo de Castaneda — In the course of the day I had received an invitation from the Government to dine in the palace on 28, the anniversary of the peruvian independence, and Maiz & Emig: to a ball on 29 — Later received a letter from B. Schultz & Co of Callao: coming me some shares & showing inclination to do some business with me it contained a friendly private letter from York Monday 27 July. Busy writing running and, receiving & paying money &c. At 2 Oz 14 R. be F. Today was the eve of the anniversary of the independence of Peru, consequently we had fireworks on the playa, which however owing to the wet state of the weather went off very poorly, as I was told — I heard the noise, which they made, but saw nothing of them — Fran:

as all. I was engaged to Mlle Alvine & to Marguerite Eggerz for waltzes, but both left, before the dances came on. Amongst the young girls I ought also to mention Emmanuela Althaus, who belongs to the number of the prettiest. Madame Le Maire sang once. Raoul Cavallier accompanying her, which was done very prettily. Afterwards the Knuller sang. I liked it very well, tho' the connaisseurs said, that it could not in the slightest degree be compared to the sing of Madame Le Maire. At about 1 it began to grow on the table. I was told to take Mlle Manuela Astley, which I did of course, tho' à contre cœur. Lauffonen, Dr Frey was with Mlle Mariq. There were two tables, one headed by Castella, the other by Mr Castella, we were at the latter: at the head: Mr Castella, to her left: Schenique's wife, also a lately married daughter of Mr Treillon: to her right: Emmeline Sandoz Ehrmann (a not very pretty, but stupid Indian) Mariq, & Mr Rossel, Mr Allemand &c. Gradually a good many left, so that at about 2 o'c, when we went to supper, I suppose, there was only about half the number of those who had been there in the beginning. I was between Manuelita Althaus, - her pressed, Ferdinand, Jenny, both Mariq. - Jenny sat about 2 or 3 persons to the left of Castella, then Manuelita, & Mariq, Ferdinand, Emiq, Eugène & the other end of Le Maire's. The supper was very good indeed, but attendance bad, - spoon scarce - wine scarce & bad with the exception of the champagne. Dancing recommenced after supper, & I suppose it was near 6 when Manuelita Althaus & Emmanuela, Mariq, Emiq & I left. - I saw them all four into their carriage & then went home on foot - Schenique & Eug. Saldern were very polite towards me. - also Ed. Ehrmann noted me more than ever. Costello, who has been very attentive towards Mary & Mrs Stevens did not speak a word to me — We early home a quarter of an hour, when it was quite day light. All of us, as least Mary, Eliza & I have been well pleased. — Susan left, very naturally, because the Dragomans, that is to say, Babel, was not there —

Thursday 26 July. I went to bed at about 6h, when Conrad had to row, to go to school. I slept till about 8, & then took a ride down the valley of Lauterbrunnen & back again, until our dinner hour — After dinner I went to my office for a short time — but was so sleepy, that I came lay down upon my bed & slept till 8, our tea time. Mrs. Garland & Reinecke were with us; our conversation turned most on the ball & before 10 we went to Bed —

Friday 27 July. Writing, paying money, arranging the samples of Schmidt & Co. afterwards occupied my whole morning until noon 1h, when the Stt in my room is 63½ R. 11 F. — Probably the differences between Ostindien & Lombeck about the german mines will be amicably arranged. There has been a meeting in which after Pfeffer, between Pfeffer, who is drawing on the horses & is horribly abandoning Lombeck & side, Hagen & Imade, who are acting as mediators, Pfeffer, who will be obliged to give in, and Lombeck, whose object in taking such an interest with the miners is making himself in every conspicuous, is to obtain the Consulship for the whole German confederation, including those of Hamburg, and others. It turns out now Hillmann. At least this both Pfeffer & Hagen say, and I believe, they know it from Germany — The remainder of the day nothing particular, only Serrade came in the evening to my office to look over the Samples from Schmidt & Co and found on chapel – the Time passed away pleasantly enough till 10 o' Clock, when we sat down to a superabundant déjeuner à la fourchette, I soon after Retired, & I rode back to Town. Del Chamara has from 30 to 40 slaves, men, women & children, which is quite a sufficient number, to produce maize, yuca, camote, alfalfa and particularly with, abundant vegetables, but much for Mr Lavine's own use – After my return, I dressed and paid several visits, to enquire, how the ladies passed themselves after the fatigues of Wednesday's ball, first to Mr Hayne, where I met Le Moine Gazette & paid others & left, Consul Lafuente & Senorita, his son in law, husband of his daughter Narcisa, came in – then to the Escallera, D. Ramona & Tulita Zuzuriaga were only present, D. Rosita & Margarita had just returned from a ride, I conversed with Tulita; – thence to Le Moines, – Madame Le Moine & Mlle Dorsch were in the same, for in the first time I have seen the latter; she had been near her on the Isthmus and conversed most with her in English. Madame Le Moine is always very friendly, Lecharnieu was there, Hellmanns came in and with him I left, to pay our visit to the president, – and not finding him at home, we left our Cards. Next I went to Barbosa's, where I only saw D. Teresa, & I closed my round with calling upon D. Sandra Rocafuerte & Dolores Alzuru, – the former seemed to be in bad humour. Neither D. Carlos, nor D. Gertrudis was visible – Perin, formerly Consul d'Hiver in Lima, then French Consul in Otahiti, has just arrived & is going as Consul to Puerto Rico; Hellmann & I left our cards with him. Dined with the Duponnets at Hellmann's. – with us Bonnecke & Parland – I am now reading Goethe's Benvenuto Cellini, in which I find much Interest – Francisco Zuviria, his wife, Rosalia & daughter Rosita, also José Pina & the Balcinas, Santa Cruz & nephew, took tea with us, – and then

Monday 3 August — In the morning I went to Wagner, whom I found at home. I wish to take a Share in our Speculation in Lands grants. he however refused upon the ground, that his doing so would be against the principles of the house. I remained with him a long while & conversed on many things — The suits between Pitcher & Lambert are now about being settled, the former yielding in in every respect — he is however very busy writing a detailed explanation of their affair, which is to be published & which, as he says, will lay open to the public Lambert's villainy. — I wrote up my books for July — After dinner we had a procession passing over Broadway, namely the image of St Dominick carried upon a bier preceded by other members of the convent & followed by military music, to meet the images of St Francis in the plaza just before the gate of the Cathedral, when they made three bows to each other & St Francis accompanied St Dominick home to his convent. now the friars of St Francis preceded St Dominick & those of St Dominick preceded St Dominick, by reason to show the good harmony which exists between the two Convents — After eight days, I believe, St Dominick accompanies St Francis home — Afterwards I went to Duquesne to tell him the result of my conversation with Wagner & on my return I found a message to attend to a meeting of Long Pitcher & Creditors; I did not go myself but gave my written power to Pitcher — Their affairs they say, do not look very bad; however with the very little business which I have hitherto been busy, it is however very annoying that I should already be embarrassed in a stoppage to the extent of $972.7 the only Sale made by me to Pitch. & Mac Clure till 1 Sept — In the evening I took as usually my latin Lesson from Zylla

Tuesday 4 August. The weather continues very damp & foggy. At 10 a.m. Ther. 63 F. 13½ R. In the morning Duquesne came home, to tell me that Provost was willing to enter with Jenny into the Smith business between him, Duquesne & myself. Pérou, several years ago would élève, when Saillard was first Chargé, called here on a Sunday about 8 o'Clock in the evening, when I was quietly studying my Latin. Somebody knocked at the window. I put on my spectacles & opened the door, when I found a girl, who enquired for Mr Carrigue, whom I said it was I, she said, she wanted another, a Mulattress, whom she was to visit – of course she was a public girl & I regret I did not turn her off as decidedly as I should have done. – I became so agitated, that half an hour elapsed before my trembling ceased. Wednesday 5 August. Ther. at 2 p.m. 64 F. 18 R. The whole day busy one way or other, most however with my Journals, copying in clean that of Rome, and reading that of 1824, in order to make an Index. – At 9 o'Clock the Girl of last night knocked again at my window, but I shut the Door & did not even see her.

Thursday 6 August. Ther. at 9 a.m. 63 F. 17½ R. Provost came. I had a long conversation with him; after him came Duquesne, again with him I had to talk; and we have now almost arranged our business, that there is still a little difference regarding the expenses – In the afternoon with the arrival I received the letters by the packet from Panama, two from the Commercy Collegium, which confirm nothing particular, – a very kind letter from Sievrking of 29 May with that of 12 June, in which he already acknowledges receipt of my letter of 10 Sep. Since I have answer for Altona in 118 days. Another from Gibbs a usual letter of 16 June, & for Stockholm a pleasant letter of 11 & 12 June with which he incloses a plan I should order him to charter a vessel & to remit him 200000 ℔, in which case he thinks, that he should be able, to establish a business, which speaks of.

I am quite doubtful, what I shall do, not for want of confidence in him, but because I am afraid of German goods in general — From the Commerce of Trade & Coast the Oregon question between England & the U. S. is likely to be arranged amicably, the 49° degree N. Latitude is to be the limit. — to the N. to belong to Engl. & to the S. to the U. S. South — that the navigation upon the Columbia river is to be permitted to both nations for the next 10 years, when the Hudsons Bay Company's Contract expires. — General Taylor has beaten the Mexicans for the 3 times, Great Britain has opened her negotiations, & the war between U. S. & Mexico may be considered as at an end — The Pope Gregory XVI died in Rome on 1 June between 9 & 10 am. In Fine the evening Mario & Grisi paid their visit to Offenbach, who obliged them to accompany them to the theater — Augusta Arenales, Tina & Heinrich took tea with D. Bonne. Comd. & myself — D. Dolla Rocafuerte & her sister Carmen came to bid good bye, as they are going to leave for Guayaquil, — but as Mario was not in. I received them below & squeezing the hand to d. Carmen & being squeezed by her in return, I felt nearly in the same state as on 4th in the evening — ; she certainly she is neither a beauty nor young —

Friday 7 Aug. At 10 h. a. m. Th. Feb. = 23d. R. The Steamer arrived from the South & Colonel Schaelle arrived on her & came to our house. I of course ceding him my bedroom. He is always the same, as usually sanguine & rather extravagant. His object in coming here is a proposal to the government to bring the water to Tokay in iron tubes and to repair the Tokay mole — We have had some conversation together, but nothing. I continued my usual occupations; I sold d. Schaelle the Chairs 32 for 4 more Bonney to Vienna at 22 fl the dz. in Bond. perhaps too cheap; — called upon Prevost after dinner & found him Epistles, which are not so very easy – Ah ca va – had all (entire) Garland of roses left early, being busy for the Steamer.

Monday 10 Aug. I finished my report & wrote a long private letter to Scherzer. At 7½ p.m. Th 63½ F 14½ R. The Steamer from Panamá brought the advice, that a son of the late George Henry Gibbs, nephew of William, got drowned at Capaya. Pflücker has finished his manifest against Lembeke. Zylla is busy with translating it for Summary, when Comadina comes at 10 in the morning each forenoon to lesson & also my Latin lesson we put off till to-morrow.

Tuesday 11 Aug. The Steamer sailed for the North. Pflücker's manifest, a small pamphlet, was published. I read it through attentively. It is written in a very decent and moderate style – and after having finished reading it, the impression, which remained upon my mind is, that he Pflücker, convicted himself vanquished. – The last sentence against Lembeke is very strong – Zylla, who had been my lately employed translating, was too tired, to be able to give me his Latin Opon – . . . There seems to be some probability, that Scherzer obtains the contract with Govt which has been the object of his visit – Tax Soldan at least appears to be in his favor – Scherzer has taken possession of my room, & sleeps therefore with Maiq[ue] as long as he is here – she told me, that she has an angry conversations with Scherzer about Comadina. – instead of thanking us for the trouble & expence, which the little girl occasioned us, he thinks, that he is doing us a great favor in leaving her with us, and always speaks of taking her to Arequipa. – Both Maiq[ue] & I would be very sorry for it, but to Comadina herself it would almost be death itself – Scherzer a man, whom I do not like, he is succeeded, only what he does, what he thinks, is well done and well thought.

Wednesday 11 Aug. Schnitler made in the morning (comedian) a present of an empty box, with flourish & ostentation; then, instead of taking a seat in a Coach, which would have cost him 12 m, when I could have accompanied him on horseback, he ordered a Coach, and as there was sufficient room, Mariq.s Conrad & I accompanied him in the same. the motion of the coach made them both feel sick, so that when we arrived at Aigde Wiggenson's, they were far from well. Schnitler & I accompanied by Wiggenson, walked about a little & then with Mariq.s Conrad. on board the mole, where we saw Schnitler embark. - after which we walked about the mole. to these Conrad. the repels, boats, &c, the only thing which the little girl enjoyed, and paid them as finely long exist to Mr Bonsen, she who has recommended to us by Lang. - she lives with Mrs Robinett, the daughter of Julian Garcia, and whilst Mariq.s conversed with Mrs Robinett I talked with Mr Bonsen. She is talkative but not interesting. the conversation, starts unsubject after another, but apparently without taking any interest in it, only in order to say something, and then to any thing, I said, her usual answer was: indeed. - We had to wait several hours at Wiggenson's before the Coach was ready & it was nearly 6 o'clock when we were back in Rome. - We then dined, I finished copying my correspondence with the Board of Trade in Copenhagen, written while I was travelling about on the continent. - Zylla gave me the Lesson before going to bed. I read then Demidoff's two first Comercio a Amerique Meridionale, the first by the Editor thereof, whom in my opinion has attached without any cause in his pamphlet for having admitted in the columns of their papers some remarks against them. they defend themselves, saying, that their paper is open for every body who made remarks to them signed by them, he being a responsible person; - the second by Pfeffer, who states made his ignorance & weak witness, that something relative to him in the pamphlet, is stating incorrectly - and the third signed by all of the german ministers, who say, that the pamphlet is full of "embuster y mentiras" & that they will follow up their cause against Pfeiffer judiciously, & as strongly as possible.

Thursday 17 Dec. - At 10 a.m. B F & W. Reinke came to me, to tell me, that the night before he had had a tremendous quarrel with Lembke, who had attacked him, accusing him of having acted offensively against him in the affair of Pfeiffer's minister, and had added, that in his opinion it would be better for both to separate at the end of the year; moreover he had said, that Reinke take no interest in the Business. - then of course one word gave another, & the result was, that Reinke got very angry; he had one of his moods, in my opinion rather dangerous attacks - all the blood rushes towards the head - he became so agitated, that so to say, the night before, that he could not speak. - and even this morning, when he gave me an account of all this, he was very nervous, and he was actually crying. - this however is nothing particular, for all the Reinkes, commencing with the old gentleman, have the Tears sitting very loose. - I asked him now, what was his intention, - to which he replied, to separate, to go home & to endeavour to set cafe for himself. I made him very prudent reflections. I told him, that he should not come to any precipitate determination, that he should consider, that now with Lambeke, he was doing pretty well, that by himself it would be difficult for him to get on so r. - I do not think, that it made him alter his mind - but at all events he will now first go for a few days to Chevrillon. To get a new shirt healed, which is just now my worry. - and if after all he decides upon separating from Lambeke, I have some idea to arrange something with him in common with Schmitz's proposal. see at foot of p. 327. - The Comercio of this evening contains an article de "un amigo comun" endeavouring to arrange the little "Etiquetta" between the Editors & Officiers, written, as it is said, by the lawyer Tirado, and rather leaning to the latter's side, to which a in my opinion too barefaced a manner, they now lift up Juan & Officers to the very stars. - beside there is a Remitido by Klee, the administrador de la renta del Morocucha", we must be "christian", but not much to my liking.

Saturday 15 May. La comision de una Senora - Soon after breakfast I took a long ride, down the valley of Lurigancho, as far as it is cultivated. - if I am not mistaken, the last "hacienda" is called Casa Cara, behind which there is nothing but sand, & the road continues along the hills - I returned my usual way, along these hills, enjoying them, when they are burnt, emerged behind the Alameda & then to Amancaes, the hills round which plains small are all covered with grass - I met here various equestrians & rode home with Dean, Diamond & Alsop's. & Felipe of Dickson's house. - I did not pay visits, but remained at home, finishing Pickt's life of Bonaparte which is papably interesting - Mary had several visiting cards sent her & also various persons called, believing it may be her name's day. Only Garland dined with us. - in the afternoon Doctor Ingwiza "el feroal" called & remained with us a long time. – I left home taking tea, where at 8 h ½ Block I went to Bartmann's, who had invited several gentlemen to play whist at his house. – of course I entered the room, where Mrs Bartmann was serving tea, she was a Miss Mase & is not good looking particularly, she is often so pale. I believe. I'd on the first time in my life. I spoke with her, I cannot say, that her way of speaking is much to my liking. Mr Degenmann was present, but did not play. At new table: Hayne, Hellemann, Jackson & Captain Worch of the English Navy were playing. at the other Bartmann, Smith & Worch's, myself and first French, afterwards Davies of Higman's house, who seems to be a pleasant man. – Sandwiches, biscuits, wine & brandy were placed on a side table. – we played till past 11. I then amused myself till supper.

Sunday 8th Aug. I rose very late, – since breakfast till now, past 11, I have written the preceding. – Yesterday the sun was red, to-day it is again cloudy. – Th. 64 F. 14 ½ R. I had hardly written the foregoing and was just taking up my Horace, when Pflücker called. he is now in good spirits and considers himself as by victorious in the cause and Lumbeck & the German minors. – he told us, that Hayne & Pfeffer have quarrelled on the subject (this I have no doubt, that this will again be made up) and that Mr Pfeffer has come to Mr Hayne, requesting he to beg Pflücker by every thing which to holds most sacred in the world, not to commence with what Pfl. alluded to in his last remarks. viz. some of Pfeffer's debts against his new partnership, yesterday. Maieg & Klein have run from our house, that Lumbeck, Pfeffer & Lumbeck and another man, whom we believe to be a certain Pfeffer, formerly man of the

I went there ad 2 o'Clock. but just as that moment a "recueil" or circular was presented Pfleiderer by a notary. signed by Pfeffer as holding Juelch power of all the miners demanding a cancelment of their contracts and adding in direct contradiction to what these miners had yesterday promised Pfeffer: consequently I did not expect, that they would sign the document, which Pfleiderer had drawn out — and so it happened —. Pfleiderer was sitting at the head of the table, besides him, there were Pfeffer, young, my Julio. Pfleiderer, Klee, Zylla. Seeburn, Rimsche. the taylor Horn and myself. Three miners were called in, one after another, but they not only Pfleiderer, but also myself & some of the others tried all in our power. to persuade them to sign their recantation & to return to their duty. its was in vain, — they would not do any thing, without the promise of their appointment they wanted first to consider it. & so they went away — At 4 o'Clock the fruitless telling was over & I went home to dinner — This evening I spent in the usual manner, writing, reading & taking my latin Lesson from Zylla.

Tuesday 18 Aug. At 11 a.m. The Rabbi blew. I was busy with my Pensum learning with Horace's ars poetica — In the Evening appeared a Legend of Lambeck's, accusing Pfleiderer of many grievous errors, and so say falsehoods, contained in his manifest. also another article signed by some amigo communes written against Pfleiderer, probably by Lambeck's lawyer Carrera, in the same manner as that by the amigo commun: see p 329. was written by Pfleiderer's lawyer, Tirado — I myself am left about upon a sea of uncertainties & want of determination with regard to my future plans, particularly as to Rimsche's Daniel Schmidt's proposal see p. 323

Wednesday 19 aug. At 11 a.m. Th 632 F 54 R. This evening before Zylla came to give me his latin Lesson, Rimsche came the way rose, the upper one, keeping its equilibrium upon the summit. The third & last division consisted of phantasmagorical sights or "umara theatre" upon a large scale, the whole house was darkened, and across the stage a sheet was drawn, upon which the figures appeared, seemed to advance & retire. Three Comedies came to me, afraid when enormous ugly faces seemed to approach — but upon the whole owing to want of light, the colours were very dull, not so vivid as they should have been — The Theatre is of a regular size, extremely large, about the Italian Altona: it is broad, but not deep: there are two rows of boxes & the gallery; — but it is very pretty & looks roomy —

Friday 28 Aug. The whole morning I was busy with my Roman diary. At 3 p.m. The Bp. of Fulham & Mr. Sharp came to dine at Mr. Le Mayne's, a good many gentlemen were assembled. I however directly engaged at once to Mr. Le Mayne, the only lady servant, with whom I entered in a pretty long conversation, tho' not particularly interesting in French, as I could — when a gentleman enters, Mrs. Le Mayne gets up from her chair and shakes hand with him, who of course walks up to her: Mrs. Brock came about twenty later, she shook hand with a few, amongst whom I of course. We then went to dinner, Mrs. Seldom, the minister, giving her arm to Mrs. Le Mayne, Le M. to Mrs. Brock: every one found his name, where he was to sit, and we sat as Pollexfen: In the middle of the Table, Mrs. Le Mayne, to her left a French named officer, then Hellemans, Mr. Le Maynes clerk, & Nabon, an unlucky Dane at the bottom of the table, a French officer, Pasteur, Mrs. Brock, Le Mayne ?, Bruhl, Allier, Engelen at the head of the Table, Thomas, a French officer, Mrs. Seldom and again Mrs. Le Mayne — The Table was prettily covered with a branch candlestick, the candles lighted, bronze gilt, vases with flowers, and many dishes: — every thing was very nice — we had claret, excellent port, which Lt. M. had brought from Linea, when he left, I believe there was Some of Madeira and I drank excellent Champaign — Mr. Heinrich says, I amused myself pretty well. having no lady near me, yet I conversed sufficiently with my neighbours — When the dessert was placed on the table, two children were led in, a lively little boy, Jacinto, & a sweet little girl Augusta — for was not brought in time, we therefore waited longer at table, than otherwise we should have done, and we all ran together in a hurry to the other room — the greater part went to the ball, to smoke & play Billiards — I hardly observed them leaving, but remained, conversing chiefly with little Jacinto & talking a little bad not much to the Ladies. When I went to the Billiard Room, the gentlemen were just on the point of coming back to the drawing room — Mrs L Magno sang two pretty songs & we left at about 10 h. — I very well pleased — I should have said, that whilst at ~~Dinner~~ Table, coffee was handed round without milk, in the drawing room liqueurs were offered — no Tea, — but instead of it ices, which might to have made its appearance at dinner — A card Table was then formed to play Ecarté at, but no body sat down to it. I went home with Hellmann, who is much interested against Lombello.

Saturday 22 Aug — Winter is gradually drawing to a close we have left rain, & the sun peeps out occasionally. Th. at 12 a m. 63½ F = 14 R. The whole morning I was occupied with my previous Journals, commencing with No 1. & indexing it. I have hitherto omitted to state, that almost regularly every day Enriqueta comes down to my room. Office. in reading (now or as you like to call it, enjoying in) clean the history of England, which I also read with some trouble out of

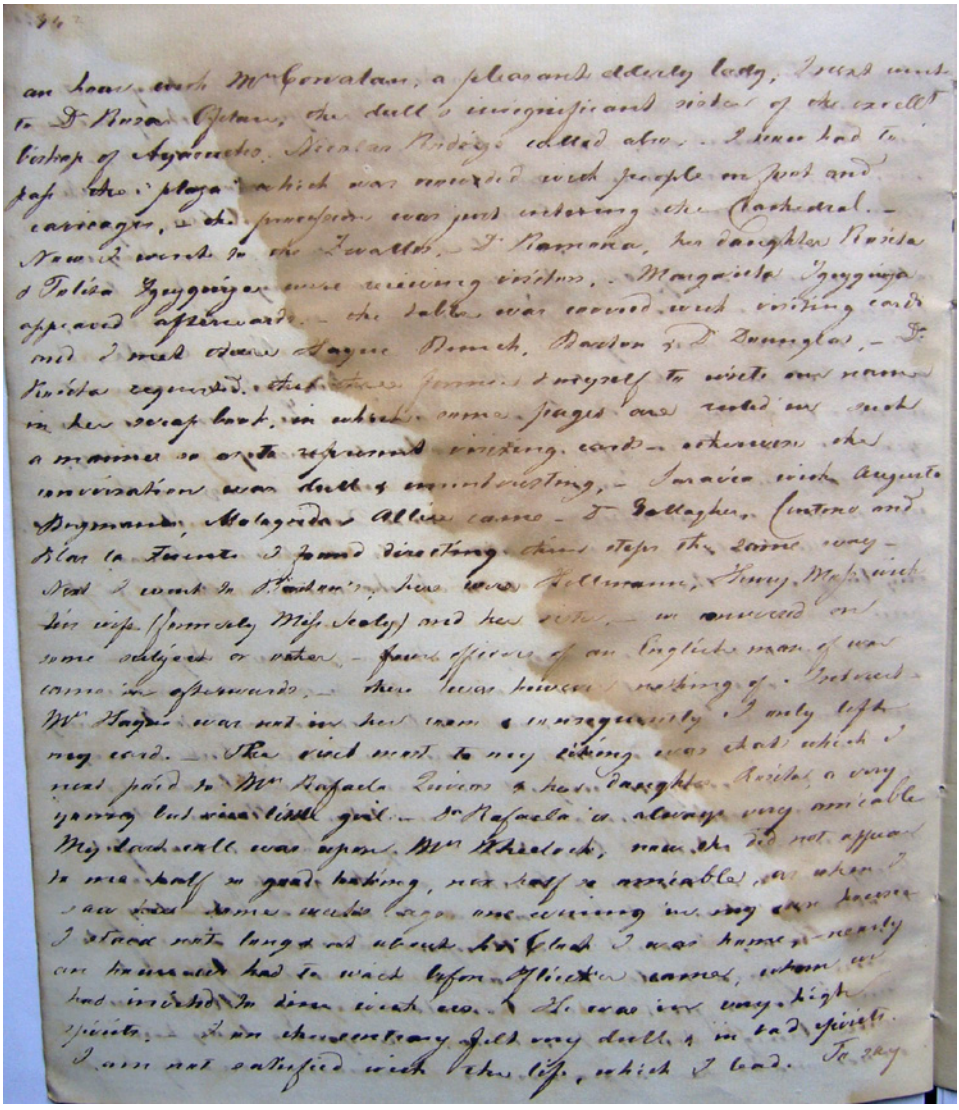
From 5 to 7. Sig. Biondi, an Italian, a shopkeeper, who has not the very best name, but who is clever & sharp, was with me, giving me some idea of the goods, which I might recommend to Daniel, - at 8 o' Clock I went up stairs to take tea and then to Hayden's, where a good many gentlemen were assembled, of ladies there were only Mrs Gallagher, Mrs Pfeffer & Mrs Barton, - I conversed a little with Mrs Gallagher, - and then went to the other large room, to play at whist - I played till 11 o'Clock with Fletcher, Hillmann & Gallagher, whom I considered myself the best players. We then left off & I intended to go, - but whilst I was looking for my hat, Hayden asked me to sit down again & now I played, rather against my inclination, because it lasted too long, till past 2 o. Clock. - were Mac Coll. Barton & Lachmann were my partners & I was by far the worst player, the consequence was also, that I lost money, & had all (all rolled me successively - Bingmann, Pfeffer, Daiber, young Robertson, Stringer & Forster & was also there - On the tables in the middle of the room Sandwiches cakes & all classes of wine were placed -

Thursday 27 Aug. At noon Th. W. & R. - & R. nothing worth mentioning as well as



Friday 28 Aug. except my having to make a large allowance of 5% p day on some Rebelle Post N° Chairs sold to Alveda, for which I got a certificat signed by Sherwin & Dimon, Saturday 29 Aug. At 2 p.m. Dr. H. & R. nearly 6 F. Mendelsohn has resigned the ministery of finances on account of bad health I forgot to say, that yesterday at noon Maria & I accompanied our servants Luis Cruz and Angela Segarra, who want to get married & who have our consent, to an ecclesiastical notary in a dirty room in the interior of the palace of the archbishop (a by no means particularly handsome & large building as the corner of plaza in the same row with the Cathedral here the secretary wrote out a petition in the name of the two, for which purpose they had to give their names, age, native place &c. which I have signed. — we then went with them & two other couples, who were in the same predicament, to the clergyman or Cannon Orbea, el provisor, as they call them here, who lives next to us. here they were called in separately, & singly, to say what they came to be married, "para dar el consentimiento" which being done, three witnesses were required to attest to their being single. I got two clerks of the notary Mr. Kennedy, who however were not required, as one of them had put his name their own short one year, so that Orbea refused taking his testimony. — To day, Saturday, the Fes of Santa Rosa, the wooden image of this Saint was carried in procession from Santo Domingo to the cathedral. three little Chola or rather Indian girls in all their finery, were very busy with their censers, to make the incense rise up to the Saint's nostrils. —

Sunday 30 Aug. Felix Biondi, an Italian, a clever sculptor at the corner of the portal has promised me to come this morning to give me some details of what is to be recommended to Germany, he however sent word, that he could not come, which annoyed me; I then occupied myself the time between breakfast & the visit in finishing off looking over the sketches of Roman statues and paintings, which I brought in Italy, & reading a beautiful description & criticism of Lessing's on the group of Laocoon. At about 10 o'clock I started and as to day was the day of Santa Rosa, I went to call upon various Ladies of this name, para darles los dias as it is said in Spanish. — Then I went first to the Covadonas, one of Mr. Cornicer's nieces being Rosita Montano; the young lady however did not make her appearance. I remained nearly half an hour with Mrs Gonsalvo, a pleasant elderly lady, I next went to D. Rosa Ostos, the dull & insignificant sister of the excellent bishop of Asyuncion. Nicolas Ridgely called also. I then had to pass the "plaza" which was crowded with people on foot and carriages, as the procession was just entering the Cathedral. — Nanni went to the Zavalla's. D. Ramona, her daughter Nicita & Tolita Izquierdo were receiving visitors. — Margarita Izquierdo appeared afterwards. — the table was covered with visiting cards and I read there Magne Bonich, Benton & D. Douglas, — D. Nicita requested that I would favour her & myself to write our names in her scrap book, in which some pages are ruled in such a manner as to look like visiting cards — otherwise the conversation was dull & uninteresting. — Saravia with Augusto Bryan, Malagarriga & Allen came. — D. Gallagher, Cintora and Blas de Zavala I found dining there when I left the same way — Next I went to Bedoya's, here were Bellocq, Henry Mapple with his wife (formerly Miss Healy) and her sister, — we succeed in some odd jobs or other. — Several officers of an English man of war came in afterwards, — there was however nothing of interest. — Mr Hagen was not in her room & unfortunately I only left my card. — The visit next to my liking was that which I next paid to Mrs Rafaela Zuviria & her daughter Anita, a very young but nice little girl. — D. Rafaela is always very amiable. My landwall was upon Mrs Wheelock, now she did not appear to me half so good looking, nor half so amiable, as when I saw her some months ago. one evening in my own house I stood not long at the Club I was home nearly an hour and had to wait before Felicita came, whom we had invited to dine with us. I. was in very high spirits. — Mrs Chamberlain & Gil very dull & in bad spirits. I am not satisfied with this life, which I lead. To day de travail. I have been so just in Lenox Gibbs Office house — if I had been wise I should have done like Eck, who is now abroad nearly as long as I have been, who continues having an Entrée all the while, he in abroad, and then on his return, take his old situation again; — but who could have thought, that such liberty would have been granted by the house? I at least never dreamt of it being possible — What I feel, the reason why I am dispirited with myself is because it appears to me I lead a useless life — the business is little, so little, that I am ashamed of it, that I do not like to speak of it — and even of the trees. I endeavour myself principally with my Roman diary, with my latin lessons — however these occupations do not satisfy myself. I require more, something more — Also my monetary matters do not go altogether to my liking — I have too much money idle, I owe money, which I have had out at Interest. I generally running in restaurant my savings for publicity of placing it again to the same advantage. — and when the life of Eck would come, I see many people would shake head. I am therefore it is in safety very ungrateful towards providence — that I should feel despond — Fletcher remained till tea, past 8 o'Clock, when he left, with his two boys Carlos & Federico — Dine only Garland remained who played Chess with Maria. I read, de Vere & Maria went to bed early — Dream not at home, which he never is on evening —

Monday 31 Aug. San Ramon, — the president name being San Ramon, — military music, marches & singing of boys awake me early in the morning — All the shops are closed as if it were a holiday — At 11½ a.m. Th. 82 F. 27½ R. At 1 o'Clock Hellmann called upon me and with him I went to the palace, to congratulate the president — He was sitting on the middle of the room near a round table, in uniform, with military boots and two orders hanging from his breast. Hellmann & I, dressed in black, walked up & shook hands with them, he then told us to take a seat, along the wall, where a number of soldiers, the one still aglow from the victory, were sitting on a row. Castilla, interrupted every moment by new comers, talked about peace, finances, himself, nobody giving the slightest reply. - it was a very stupid scene - More & more visitors, among them a military man, entered - then a remarkable light, arranged where Hellmann & I, hardly ever shaking again & then Hermann was also. I forgot to say, that we had hardly sat down, when Castilla inquired after Mary's health - I answered myself to day, with copying in my journal. Not a map of years ago Evers & I were now also reading again Le Blanc's 10 years from 1734-1744 in French - At about 7 o'clock in the evening Ofliches sent word, begging Mary to come to him, he being very unwell & in bed. Mary told him, he should take something in order to perspire. Arnao was also sitting at his bed's side - afterwards D. Jesus Arnao came, with whom Mary is no bad terms since many years - Then Ofliches held a long speech, saying, that as he was dying, he was making his Testament, & consequently he left half the two, which his comrade Arnao bears him, to Mary, & vice versa; - the ladies had then to shake hands & to embrace, & I am sure, neither of the two did it willingly. Ofliches has Champaign & coffee placed on the Table, of which we partook. - Hermann drank a glass of Champaign & which made us think, that all his illness was nothing but shame, wished to had only feigned it in order to bring about a reconciliation, - was remained still a difficulty, viz: who should pay the first visit, or settle the

& her daughter Caroline made their appearance: they have never been before in our house. & Mary is by no means partial to them. Mrs C. sat down between Mary & myself, Caroline her daughter at the bottom of the table & Winter made a great deal of fuss with her. — By & bye we after the others left, but Ingleman & Garland remained till past 11. — Manuel Velarde also came in —

Saturday 12 Sept — I rose at 7 o'Clock, went to my office to close my letters for the South-Steamer — I went to Hayne, who was in bed with a tremendous cold, to shew him the Bark Samples, of which he thought very highly. — after which, I had with much difficulty my baggages, enjoying the contrast more with Villamil & Mrs Pope away until it was time to ride down to Callao. — Schultz, Macdonell & Villamil came soon after in a coach, I accompanied them to the pier, — the former & latter leave for Peru & Africa respectively. — Macdonell leaves for Europe by the next Colao steamer. Cora went yesterday as peruvian minister to the U.S. Sunday Felipe Pardo in the same capacity to Chili; also yesterday Pelhamus to Guayaquil, & to-day Coleman for Guayaq.[1] to Valp.[o]; this latter, Coleman, extremely small, is partner of Huelin & Valp.[o]: & wife of Coleman, who is established in London, partner of Stubbs & Co in Lima — Jn Nunez, a daughter of General Lafuente, married to a certain Samaniego of Caxpar; returns also to-day in Steamer to Chile. — I rode back & was in time for dinner. after dinner I have now been arranging my papers & been writing the preceding — Th. at 6 h. p.m. 14 1/2 R = 64 1/2 F. This Journal has just lasted a year. — On turning back, I see that this day year, — accord.[g] to the day, not date — I dined at De la Fuente's in Croydon with the Granttoffs. — I recollect, the weather was pleasant & the party agreeable enough
