Foreword

With this volume, we are pleased to be launching a new, fully open access, Indological monograph series at the University of Naples L'Orientale, Dipartimento Asia, Africa e Mediterraneo. This series was primarily conceived to publish the results of two research projects hosted at our university and financed by the European Research Council: the SHIVADHARMA project (Translocal Identities. The Śivadharma and the Making of Regional Religious Traditions in Premodern South Asia, GA no. 803624); and the DHARMA project (The Domestication of Hindu Asceticism and the Religious Making of South and South-East Asia, GA no. 809994). At the same time, and as this first volume perfectly exemplifies, we would like this series to present publications from our wider research network, thus being an instrument to disseminate knowledge, as well as to strengthen and create connections among scholars.

On this occasion, I would like to personally thank all the scholars who decided to join the board of the series, along with the local staff who helped us typeset and revise this first volume. I also wish to express my gratitude to the three authors of A Śaiva Utopia for their willingness to publish with us and for the patience required to be the first. I hope the final result meets their expectations, as well as those of the readers. More volumes are planned for the near future, and we look forward to seeing all of them printed, and many more.

Panthānah santu nah śivāh!

Preface

This book has multiple origins just as it has multiple authors, including the anonymous composers, teachers and scribes of the past.

Tim Lubin first presented his views on the Śivadharma's revision of varņāśramadharma in 2010, in a talk given at the University of Texas, Austin. Independently, in the same year, Peter Bisschop gave a presentation on the Śivadharma at Hamburg University, at the Third International Workshop on Early Tantra. In 2016 our paths converged, when Bisschop was able to organise a workshop dedicated to the Śivadharma at Leiden University, to which Lubin was invited as well. Nirajan Kafle, meanwhile, had been appointed as a postdoctoral researcher at Leiden University to work on the Śivadharmaśāstra. On learning that Lubin had already prepared a working translation of the Śivāśramādhyāya, of which Kafle had started preparing a critical edition, we decided to join forces. The present publication is the outcome.

Earlier versions of all the various parts of the introduction were presented by Lubin in talks given at the University of Texas, Austin (2010), Cambridge University (2012), and Leiden University (2016), as well as in several conference papers, most recently in panels organised for the American Oriental Society (2017), the Deutscher Orientalistentag held in Jena (2017), and the World Sanskrit Conference held in Vancouver (2018), benefitting from the comments of various colleagues, especially Donald Davis, Florinda De Simini, Dominic Goodall, Nina Mirnig, Patrick Olivelle, Marion Rastelli, and Yuko Yokochi. He gratefully acknowledges the American Philosophical Society, the National Endowment for the Humanities, the U.S. Department of Education (through the Fulbright-Hays program), and the Lenfest Foundation for grants that supported the research and writing at various stages. His final revisions were made as a collaborator on the DHARMA project, ERC no. 809994.

The critical edition was prepared by Kafle as researcher in the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO) project 360-63-110 ('From Universe of Viṣṇu to Universe of Śiva'), headed by Bisschop. The draft edition was read and discussed in reading sessions with the latter at Leiden University. Along the way, Bisschop revised the translation and expanded the accompanying notes in accordance with our growing understanding of the text. The edition and translation were shared with Lubin for feedback and further revision. The Leiden readings were occasionally joined by others as well. We would like to thank in particular Elizabeth Cecil, Sanne Mersch, and Somdev Vasudeva in this regard.

Kafle furthermore prepared an edition of the commentary on Śivadharmaśāstra 11, to which Lubin added a running translation. Photographs of selected folios of this commentary, preserved in a unique manuscript in Trivandrum, were kindly shared by S.A.S. Sarma (Pondicherry).

The appendix, which addresses the intriguing parallel and revision in the Bhavişyapurāna, was prepared by Bisschop, who has also been responsible for putting the various sections of the book together and streamlining the whole.

We thank Florinda De Simini for accepting and overseeing the publication in the series Studies on the History of Śaivism of the Università degli Studi di Napoli L'Orientale, and we acknowledge the support of her ERC starting grant project 'Translocal Identities: The Śivadharma and the Making of Religious Traditions in Premodern South Asia' (shivadharma; project no. 803624) for publishing and distributing the book. We are also very grateful to the two (initially anonymous) reviewers, Judit Törzsök (École Pratique des Hautes Études) and Yuko Yokochi (Kyoto University). Both have provided us with many valuable suggestions for improvement.

Finally, why 'Śaiva Utopia'? As discussed in the introduction, in its eleventh chapter the Śivadharmaśāstra promotes a radical model of institutionalization of lay religion in society. Its vision is manifestly utopian, providing a blueprint of a society bound by nothing but Śiva-devotion and adherence to Śiva's laws, the Śivadharma.

The Śivadharma's Revision of Brahmanical Varņāśramadharma

1. The Literature and Religion of the Śivadharma

The Śivadharmaśāstra ('Treatise on the Religion of Śiva') is the oldest example of a work addressing a lay audience oriented to the worship of Siva as supreme deity and venerating ascetics of the Pasupata order as his earthly embodiments. This anonymous Sanskrit work, composed in anustubh verse, presents itself as instruction in the religion of Siva, uttered by Nandikeśvara, Śiva's favorite acolyte, to Sanatkumāra at his request. This religion involves worship of the deity in two central modes: in rites involving a linga (the phalloid symbol of Siva's manifest presence and power) or an anthropomorphic image; and through the veneration and ceremonial feeding of those deemed 'devotees of Siva' (sivabhakta) in whom Siva is also said to be present. The latter category includes ascetics but is more encompassing and was intended mainly as an ideal of lay piety available to any or all who were attracted to the worship of Siva. Unlike the older Pāśupata sources, which addressed the deity by his older names Rudra and Pasupati, the Sivadharmasāstra, and the doctrine taught in it, favored the auspicious epithet 'Siva' (meaning, in fact, 'auspicious' or 'gentle') as a euphemism for the deity known for his often austere and even frightful aspect. And the doctrine presents itself here for the first time as 'dharma,' that is, a religion of the disciplined householder who is equal in merit and spiritual attainment to the ascetic-a concept introduced in the Brahmanical Dharmaśāstra literature. The Śivadharmaśāstra prescribes a number of virtues and practices conducive to Siva-devotion, some of them adapted from or modeled on those of Pasupata ascetics: using Siva's sacred ash to 'bathe' and mark the body, the use of rudrākṣa rosaries, various ritual observances (vrata), and a 'Great Observance' (mahāvrata) that is the cultivation of eight moral virtues. In this way, the life of a layperson can come to constitute a religious discipline comparable in sanctity and spiritual potential to that of the professional ascetic. In order to delineate this discipline, the author(s) appealed explicitly to the concept of 'householder-discipline' (grhastha-āśrama) as it had earlier been formulated in the early Dharmaśāstra. This is the particular focus of the eleventh chapter, the Śivāśramādhyāya.

Within the following century, this text was given a sequel, the Śivadharmottara ('Supplement on the Religion of Śiva'). In Nepal, where the oldest manuscripts survive, twenty old palm-leaf manuscripts (ninth to fourteenth centuries) as well as younger paper manuscripts transmit a corpus of eight texts,<sup>1</sup> including:

- 1. Śivadharmaśāstra ('Treatise on the Religion of Śiva')
- 2. Śivadharmottara ('Supplement on the Religion of Śiva')
- 3. Śivadharmasamgraha ('Compendium on the Religion of Śiva')
- 4. Umāmaheśvarasamvāda ('Dialogue Between Umā and Maheśvara')
- 5. Uttarottaramahāsamvāda ('Great Dialogue of Questions and Answers')
- 6. Śivopaniṣad ('Mystery of Śiva')
- 7. Vṛṣasārasaṃgraha ('Compendium on the Essence of the Bull [of Dharma]')
- 8. Dharmaputrikā ('Daughter of Dharma')<sup>2</sup>

All but the first two are found only in Nepalese manuscripts and reflect elements of the Tantric theology and ritual which became the norm in Śaivism in the last centuries of the first millennium.<sup>3</sup> The first two texts, however, circulated widely in the Indian subcontinent, as attested by the survival of a large number of manuscripts from Nepal and Kashmir in the north, Bengal in the east, and across the peninsular south, totaling more than eighty containing the Śivadharmaśāstra. This, together with references to the text and its recitation in inscriptions even in Southeast Asia,<sup>4</sup> show that the work was very popular and important in the early development of Śaivism. So it is surprising that it is only in recent years<sup>5</sup> that this important work has attracted sustained attention and that critical editions of its chapters (and of other texts in the corpus) have begun to be prepared.<sup>6</sup>

2. The Śivadharmaśāstra's Conception of Dharma and Its Antecedents

It has been shown that the Śivadharmaśāstra was likely composed in north India toward the end of the sixth or early seventh century CE, reflecting three aspects of religious life at the time.<sup>7</sup> First, during the preceding centuries, Brahmanical dharma ideals expounded in the early Dharmaśāstras came to be regularly invoked in wider literature and in inscriptions, with Brahmins and Brahmanical institutions winning a larger and larger share of public patronage. Second, from around the beginning of the Common Era, bhakti devotion to a single personal god had been presented as a model of religious life 'in the world,' in contrast with the world-renunciation advocated by the ascetic and monastic orders. Third, material evidence shows that lay Siva worship had already been widely practiced since early in the Common Era by at least the second century CE, and Saiva asceticism of the sort that would later be classed as the Atimārga (the 'Outer Way') had emerged; from the fourth century at least, 'members of some Saiva ascetic groups that were originally at the margins of society had started to increasingly appear in public and institutionalised religious life as temple priests and recipients of religious donations in epigraphical records.'8

The Śivadharmaśāstra reflects probably the earliest systematic effort to canonise a form of Śaiva religion for laypeople as opposed to ascetics, and it does so pointedly in response to Dharmaśāstra. This is evident from the very decision to characterise the precepts as dharmas, and the doctrine as a whole as dharma (in the singular), and the work itself as a Śivadharmaśāstra. By contrast, neither the Pāśupatasūtra nor Kauņdinya's commentary, which prescribe the modes of discipline for ascetics, uses the term dharma in this way.<sup>9</sup> An examination of the Śiva- edition of the Śivadharmaśāstra based on a single manuscript in the Adyar Library was published in Jugnu & Sharma 2014. A printed version of the full Sivadharma corpus appeared in Naraharinath 1998.

<sup>6</sup> Bisschop 2018b, a critical edition and translation of the sixth chapter of the Śivadharmaśāstra (the Śāntyadhyāya) and De Simini 2013, a critical edition and translation of the second chapter of the Śivadharmottara, are the first fruits of this new text-critical work.

 $^7$  For the most recent discussion of this dating, see Bisschop 2018b, 10–27, and Mirnig 2019, 471–472.

<sup>9</sup> The Pāśupatasūtra employs forms of the term in two other senses: 'characteristic, property' (in the suffixed form dharmitva, '[having] characteristics' [1.26] and dharmaśāstra, and especially of its eleventh chapter, shows how its author or authors framed 'Šivadharma' in contrast to corresponding aspects of Smārta Brahmanical dharma—i.e., that described in the Smṛtis (the Dharmasūtras and versified Dharmaśāstras)—adapting and redefining key aspects of the earlier formulation of Dharmaśāstra itself.

Since the early history of that tradition is at present coming into sharper focus,<sup>10</sup> it will be worthwhile to recapitulate that formulation before returning to the Śivadharma. Dharmaśāstra, 'teaching on what is right' as expounded in Sanskrit treatises (sūtras and sāstras) and commentaries of the Smarta tradition, established rules defining Brahminhood as a religious and social status, along with rules for other groups defined in relation to Brahmins and Brahmanical norms, all under the rubric of an overarching ideal of dharma. The oldest and probably original work in this new genre, the Apastambadharmasūtra, seems to have been composed to present a Veda-based discipline that could compete with alternate forms of dharma taught by the śramana movements, Buddhist, Jaina, and Ajīvika, by articulating a distinctively Brahmanical conception of dharma. In fact, Asoka's edicts (presumably taking their cue from contemporary Buddhist or broader śramana discourse) may represent our oldest surviving examples of the word dharma used to denote a comprehensive religio-ethical doctrine and a corresponding code of conduct—a usage that seems unprecedented in the older texts of the Veda.<sup>11</sup>

Dharmaśāstra claimed a general applicability, at least within the ideally conceived 'territory of the Āryas' (āryāvarta). Although composed by Brahmins to record Brahmanical norms, Dharmaśāstra works prescribed rules applicable to other strata of society as well, including Śūdras and other groups, whose social and religious roles were circumscribed in various ways. This was a period of great innovation in Brahmanical religiosity as well, including the first tentative steps toward accommodating ascetical professions under a Vedic umbrella that otherwise favored a home-based religious order. The older social model of four classes (varnas) with complementary functions, defined by birth, in the compounds godharma and mrgadharma [5.18]), and 'virtue' (in dharmātman [5.31]). Kauņḍinya employs the term dharma in the same two senses. In the latter sense, it figures as a universal moral standard or ideal, including in the form of a 'set of four' goals, a concept otherwise attested in late additions to the Mahābhārata and in Mānavadharmaśāstra. Neither use it to denote either the system as a whole, or the particular precepts that compose it, which are typical of the Dharmaśāstra usage, or in the plural usage, of the Vedic ritual codes that were precursors of Dharmaśāstra.

was paired with a classification of four religious disciplines, which included three that rejected worldly, home-based piety. The term  $\bar{a}$ sírama ('discipline'), originally associated with ascetical endeavors denoting a place<sup>12</sup> set aside for ascetical practice (sírama), is adopted in the Dharmasūtras as a rubric for a range of possible religious vocations, one of which could be undertaken at the end of one's Vedic studies. At first, the Dharmasūtras clearly assumed that this was a matter of choosing once and for all; the authorities differed only on which vocations were approved or favored. The Mānavadharmasāstra made the further innovation of structuring the theoretically ideal religious career as a sequence of  $\bar{a}$ síramas. In this new sequential model, the older  $\bar{a}$ sírama of permanent (naisthika) brahmacarya was elided and replaced by the period of brahmacarya observed in youth (yauvana) as the first  $\bar{a}$ sírama in the sequence, though the latter had not earlier been counted as one of the  $\bar{a}$ síramas.

To this picture we can now add another crucial clue first noticed by Stephanie Jamison and elaborated by Patrick Olivelle: Aśoka's juxtaposition of grhastha and pravrajita as subclassifications of pāṣaṇḍa ('sect' in a neutral sense: group of religious professionals) around 255 BCE in Rock Edicts twelve and thirteen, and fourteen years later in Pillar Edict seven.<sup>13</sup> This suggests that he regarded groups adhering to a distinctive dharma as potentially being subdivided into practitioners 'who stay at home' and those 'who have gone forth' into a homeless life. If the Dharmasūtras' gradual incorporation of ascetic āśramas as legitimate alternatives to traditional Vedic piety took place in the context of the rise of the śramaņa movements and the patronage they received from Aśoka and later rulers, the representation of the Vaidika home-based religious life as a 'grhastha āśrama' had the aim of elevating that religious practice as equal if not indeed superior to the more austere discipline of ascetics.

Other innovations of this period<sup>14</sup> contributed to this project: initiation (upanayana) and Veda study were for the first time stipulated as a formal requirement of the three upper varnas and could thus serve as a criterion for Ārya social status, as well as a prerequisite for choice of  $\bar{a}$ sírama (or, in Manu's model, for progressing to the next  $\bar{a}$ sírama). This shift is reflected in the appearance of the term dvija or dvijāti as a social label applicable in theory to members of those classes (although in practice it seems to have meant only Brahmins).<sup>15</sup> Beyond brahmacarya and the complex requirements of daily ritual, an ever-expanding repertoire of disciplinary regimens (vratas), both expiatory and supererogatory, served to constitute householder piety within the Brahmin enclave as a religious profession worthy of royal patronage on a par with monastics. The last few centuries BCE also appear to be the period when the feeding of Brahmins became routinised as a merit-making duty for householders, again, setting ritually observant Brahmins, including grhasthas, on a par with mendicants.<sup>16</sup>

In many ways, the formulation of Śivadharma parallels that of Dharmaśāstra's grhasthadharma. In the Śivadharmaśāstra, Nandikeśvara 'who knows all dharma(s)' (sarvadharmajña) expounds a teaching (śāsana) establishing a 'supreme dharma' (param dharmam) that integrates aspects of Pāśupata asceticism into a householder ideal adapted from an early form of varņāśramadharma. This Śivadharma is dharma primarily in the sense of ācāra, virtuous conduct as a model for general practice: an 'unexcelled worldly dharma for the sake of the four varņas' (caturvarṇahitārthāya lokadharmam anuttamam, 1.8ab, in several early Nepalese manuscripts). The juridical and political aspects of classical dharmaśāstra—vyavahāra (legal procedure) and daṇḍanīti (governance)—are not addressed at all.

'Devotion to Śiva' (śivabhakti), the central ideal around which this dharma is oriented, incorporates many elements of the doctrine and discipline of Pasupata asceticism. Rudra, the most common name for the deity in the Pasupata system, is here most often referred to by the auspicious epithet Śiva, 'the kindly one' which is also applied adjectivally with double meaning to many things and states deemed 'holy' or 'blessed'; the titles Mahādeva ('great god') and Bhagavat ('bestower of blessings') are also used. The less commonly occurring titles Pasupati (6.177, 10.24), its synonym Paśubhartr (5.212), Lakuliśvara (12.119, alluding to the legendary incarnation and founder of the Pāśupatas), and Pasupāsārnavātīta ('he who is beyond the sea of bonds that bind the soul, '3.85) explicitly signal the connection with Pāśupata doctrines. Chapter eleven includes a long section praising the practice of bathing in ashes, a hallmark of Pāśupata practice.<sup>17</sup> Two stanzas in chapter ten allude to duhkhānta and yoga, the dual goals of Pāśupata discipline. For example, in explaining the reward for an act of piety, the compound

 $j\tilde{n}\bar{a}nayoga$  occurs (10.45). Lest we mistake it for the first type of yoga defined by Kṛṣṇa in the Bhagavadgītā, our text explains it in the very next stanza (10.46), invoking the categories of Pāśupata theology:

trisaptakulajaiḥ sārdhaṃ bhogān bhuktvā yathepsitān | jñānayogaṃ samāsādya sa tatraiva vimucyate || 10.45 || yogād duhkhāntam āpnoti jñānād yogah pravartate |

śivadharmād bhavej jñānam śivadharmah śivārcanāt || 10.46 ||

ity eşa vah samākhyātah saṃsārārṇavavartinām | śivamokṣakramopāyaḥ śivāśramaniṣevinām || 10.47 ||

10.45 Having enjoyed enjoyable things as he pleases [in Śiva's paradise] with twenty-one [generations of] kin, he attains the union [that comes from] knowledge ( $j\bar{n}\bar{a}nayoga$ ), and gets liberated then and there.<sup>18</sup>

10.46 From union (yoga) one attains the end of suffering (duḥkhānta); yoga proceeds from knowledge (jñānāt); knowledge arises from [observing] Śivadharma; and Śivadharma [comes] from praising Śiva (śivārcanāt).

10.47 Thus has been declared to you who are roiling in the sea of saṃsāra a progressive means of attaining Śiva's liberation for those who practice Śiva's discipline (śivāśrama).

The progression (krama) mentioned in 10.47 is not the sequence of Dharmaśāstric āśramas, for in the Śivadharma version of the system they are evidently not considered to be sequential. Rather, it refers to a salvific progression suggested in verse 10.46: śivārcana > śivadharma > jñāna > yoga > duḥkhānta.

The first step is ritual veneration of Śiva, presumably through *linga*worship, which is the central topic of the work; śivadharma is a comprehensive mode of life premised on that veneration. Such a mode of life yields insight, which in turn makes possible yoga, i.e., union with Śiva. The definition of yoga offered in Kaundinya's Pañcārthabhāsya on the Pāśupatasūtra applies here as well: atrātmeśvarasamyogo yogaḥ ('Here, yoga is the conjunction of the soul and the Lord,' ad 1.1.43; cf. rudrasāyujyam: sāksād rudreṇa saha saṃyogah sāyujyam, ad 5.32.3). Duḥkhānta, the transcendence of suffering, is unmistakably the end goal of the Pāśupata path.

Another passage, in the long description of the umāmaheśvaravrata (a vow prescribed for women to win a lordly husband), concludes with a similar progression whereby a woman, after enjoying the rewards of her piety for many lifetimes, will eventually conceive a disgust for worldly aims and attain the same liberating knowledge:

evam sā sarvalokeşu bhogān bhuktvā yathepsitān | kramād āgatya loke 'smin rājānam patim āpnuyāt || 10.109 || yuvānam rūpasampannam asesaprthivīpatim | dharmārthakāmamokṣajñam ittham āsādya modate || 10.110 || tato dharmāvaseṣeṇa bhavatīsvarabhāvitā | svakarmāvāsanāyogāt punaḥ prārabhate subham || 10.111 || subhāc ca punar apy evam yonim yāti sahasrasaḥ | yāvan nāpnoti nirvāṇam tāvad bhramati karmaṇā || 10.112 || tannirvedāc ca vairāgyam vairāgyāj jñānasambhavaḥ |

jñānāt pravartate yogo yogād duḥkhāntam āpnuyāt || 10.113 || 10.109 Thus, having enjoyed whatever enjoyments she wished in all worlds, she will return accordingly to this world and obtain a king as her husband. 10.110 She will rejoice when in this way she has obtained a young, handsome lord of the whole earth who knows virtue, material gain, sensual gratification, and liberation.

10.111 Then, with the rest of her dharma, she becomes devoted to the Lord; by reason of the traces of her past karman, she will undertake what is good.

10.112 And due to that good work, she will again enter the womb a thousand times. So long as she does not obtain nirvāņa, she will wander by [the force of] karman.

10.113 From disgust for [all] that comes dispassion, from dispassion knowledge arises, from knowledge proceeds union, from union she attains the end of suffering.

Hence, in this version: tannirveda (disgust for samsāra) > vairāgya >  $j\tilde{n}ana$  > yoga > duḥkhānta. We may have here two alternate routes to sivajñāna: in the first, it is cultivated through ritual observances directed toward Śiva; in the second it arises as a consequence of an inward disaffection for worldly rewards.<sup>19</sup>

3. The Great Observance (Mahāvrata) of Śivadharma

The latter half of the eleventh chapter (11.46–118) defines the general principles of Śivadharma, the features common to all the śivāśra-

<sup>19</sup> Note that both routes involve five items, which may point to a connection to the term Pañcārtha. See Bisschop 2014 for an early conception of Pañcārtha that is different from the one advocated by Kauṇḍinya and involving a five-fold path as well.

*ma*s, as a 'great observance' (mahāvrata)—one that differs from the mahāvrata of the Lākulīša Pāśupata system.<sup>20</sup> This mahāvrata consists of adhering to eight principles: 1. bhakti, 2. kṣānti, 3. ahiṃsā, 4. śama, 5. samtosa, 6. satya, 7. asteya, 8. brahmacarya:

mahāvratāstakam dhāryam īsenoktam sivārthibhiḥ | sarvavratānām paramam asmin dharmaḥ samāpyate || 11.46 || sive bhaktiḥ sadā kṣāntir ahiṃsā sarvadā samaḥ | samtosah satyam asteyam brahmacaryam tathāstamam || 11.47 ||

11.46 The great eightfold observance, spoken by the Lord, the best of all observances, should be practised by those aiming for Śiva. The law is accomplished in it.

11.47 Devotion to Śiva, constant forbearance, non-harm, calmness at all times, contentedness, truthfulness, not stealing, and chastity as the eighth.

Devotion (bhakti) heads the list as the hallmark of householder piety. Here this eightfold observance is declared to be the fulfilment of śivadharma; earlier, in the first chapter, it is said to constitute the very definition of śivabhakti:

nārudrah saṃsmared rudraṃ nārudro rudram arcayet | nārudrah kīrtayed rudraṃ nārudro rudram āpnuyāt || 1.24 || śivadharmasya sāro 'yaṃ śive bhaktih suniścalā | sā cāṣṭāngī śivenoktā kāryā nityaṃ prayatnataḥ || 1.25 ||

1.24 One who is not Rudra cannot call Rudra to mind; one who is not Rudra cannot worship Rudra; one who is not Rudra cannot praise Rudra; one who is not Rudra cannot attain Rudra.

1.25 This is the essence of sivadharma: unwavering devotion to Śiva. And this eight-limbed [bhakti], taught by Śiva, should be performed constantly with all one's might.

The first of these stanzas is the earliest version of what becomes a common maxim of Śaiva religion: that one must become Śiva to worship Śiva (śivo bhūtvā śivaṃ yajet).<sup>21</sup>

Similar lists of observances are propounded in other Indian traditions. The third and the last four items in the list in 11.47 correspond to the Jaina mahāvrata and the yamas of Patañjali's Yogasūtra (2.30, 32)

<sup>21</sup> See Bisschop 2018, 8 and Mirnig 2019. Utpaladeva explains that maxim as a reference to becoming a sivabhakta: sivo bhūtva yajeteti bhakto bhūtveti kathyate (Śivastotrāvalī 1.14). Furthermore, Judit Törzsök points out that 1.25b reappears in the form rudre bhaktiļ: suniscalā as first sign (pratyaya) of possession by Rudraśakti (rudraśaktisamāveśa) in the Mālinīvijayottara (2.14b) and the Siddhayogeśvarīmata (2.6b), indicating another point of continuity between lay and Tantric Śaivism.

if we understand samtoşa as expressing a householder's milder version of aparigraha ('being free of possessions'). The other four are also part of the Buddhist 'five precepts.' Patañjali's further set of five niyamas includes samtoşa, along with tapas ('ascetic practice') and īsvarapranidhāna ('contemplation on the lord'), which might be paralleled by bhakti in the Śivadharma's list. Kṣānti ('forbearance'), though not figuring in these other lists, is in any case a highly regarded Buddhist virtue or perfection.

Just as with the progression to duhkhānta, the discussion of the umāmaheśvaravrata proposes its own list of general features of the vrata (SiDhŚ 10.137–138), where rather than describing them as constituting 'the best of all observances' (sarvavratānām paramam) they are said to make up 'the ten-part rule common to all observances':

kṣamā satyam dayā dānam śaucam indriyanigrahah | śivapūjāgnihavanam samtoso 'steyabhāvanā || 10.137 || sarvavratesv ayam dharmah sāmānyo daśadhā sthitaḥ | viśesam api vaksyāmi pratimāsam vratam prati || 10.138 ||

10.137 Forbearance, truthfulness, compassion, generosity, purity, restraint of the senses, Śiva-worship, offering in [Śiva's] fire, contentment, and not [even] thinking of stealing:

10.138 This is the ten-part rule common to all observances (vrata). [Next] I will explain also the special [rule; sc. dharmam] relating to the observance of each month.

The two lists overlap to a great extent, although the order and wording differ, reflecting the different aims of the presumed practitioners (and perhaps metrical limitations).

Worship of Śiva is itself also praised as the best form of dharma: 'Here in the three worlds, there is no dharma to match Śiva-worship.'<sup>22</sup> In Smārta contexts, too, despite the emphasis placed on diverse norms for different statuses, one can find claims for dharmas that apply to all in common, regardless of status. For example, Mānavadharmaśāstra 10.63 proclaims:

ahimsā satyam akrodhaḥ śaucam indriyanigrahaḥ | etaṃ sāmāsikaṃ dharmaṃ caturvarṇye 'bravīn manuḥ || 10.63 ||

10.63 Abstention from injuring, truthfulness, refraining from anger, purification, and mastering the organs—this, Manu has declared, is the gist of the Law for the four classes.<sup>23</sup>

A tenfold version was proposed at the end of Manu's sixth chapter (MDh 6.91–93), immediately after completing the rules for the fourth and final āśrama, that of the yati, the wandering ascetic. The message here is not that this is a universal ethic (in the sense of being applicable to all four classes, as in Mānavadharmaśāstra 10.63)—in fact, verse 93 speaks only of Brahmins (vipra) observing it<sup>24</sup>—but the ten ideals do apply to all four disciplines (āśramas):

caturbhir api caivaitair nityam āsramibhir dvijaih | dašalakṣaṇako dharmaḥ sevitavyaḥ prayatnataḥ || 6.91 || dhrtih ksamā damo 'steyam śaucam indriyanigrahah |

dhīr vidyā satyam akrodho daśakam dharmalakṣaṇam || 6.92 ||

daśa lakṣaṇāni dharmasya ye viprāh samadhīyate | adhītya cānuvartante te yānti paramām gatim || 6.93 ||

6.91 Twice-born men belonging to all these four orders must always observe the ten-point Law diligently.

6.92 Resolve, forbearance, self-control, refraining from theft, performing purifications, mastering the organs, understanding, learning, truthfulness, and suppressing anger: these are the ten points of the Law.

6.93 Those Brahmins who learn the ten points of the Law and, after learning, follow them, attain the highest state.<sup>25</sup>

And a very similar verse in the Yājñavalkyadharmaśāstra (1.121) lists nine items: the five from MDh 10.63 plus dama, kṣamā, ārjava, and <sup>24</sup> The term dvija in MDh 6.91 probably likewise was understood to imply Brahmins.

<sup>25</sup> Appended to these stanzas are three more (MDh 6.94-96, also the 'transition verse' 6.86) introducing another of Manu's innovations: a fifth status of samnyāsa ('retirement,' in Olivelle's translation), which is something distinct from any of the āśramas and not yet understood as an alternate name for the discipline of a yati (Olivelle 2005, 243, 292). The concept of samnyāsa there is akin to the concept put forward in the Bhagavadgītā (5.1-6; 6.1-3); in both works, a 'casting off' of ritual performance of fire offerings is meant (samnyāsa sarvakarmāņi, MDh 6.95–96; sarvāņi karmāņi samnyasya, BhG 3.3, 6.27, samnyāsam karmanām, 5.2, etc.), although the Gītā extends karmāni to include all kinds of worldly actions, considered metaphorically as offerings. That this was Manu's adaptation of the Bhagavadgītā's concept is reflected in its association with karmayoga (the yoga theme being the central metaphor of that work) in MDh 6.86, which introduces the concept of the householder who has retired from ritual practice without becoming a forest hermit or homeless ascetic. Though both works validate a form of householder asceticism, they differ in that the Gītā distinguishes karmayoga (i.e., mentally renouncing the fruits of action) as a superior refinement of karmasamnyāsa (BhG 2.2), i.e., the mere rejection of performing the rites or actions themselves, whereas for Manu the cessation of ritual performance (after fulfilling one's spiritual debts) is itself karmayoga.

 $d\bar{a}na$ , affirming that these constitute 'the means for all to attain dha-rma' (sarveṣāṃ dharmasādhanam).<sup>26</sup>

Hence, Dharmaśāstra had already introduced the idea that there is a higher dharma comprising a set (larger or smaller) of general precepts (sāmānya or *sādhāraṇa dharma*s) applicable to all, distinct from the particular rules (*viśeṣa dharma*s) specific to each class or discipline. These lists have many parallels, and the Śivadharmaśāstra propounds its own version of them as well, though the only distinctively Śaiva element in its two lists is devotion to Śiva.

There is also a parallel in the Pāśupata ascetic tradition of which the Śivadharma may be said to provide the householder version. Kauṇḍinya in his comments on Pāśupatasūtra 1.9 quotes two stanzas containing a list of ten divided into two sets of five *yama*s and *niyama*s (as in the Yogasūtra):<sup>27</sup>

ahiṃsā brahmacaryaṃ ca satyāsaṃvyavahārakau | asteyam iti pañcaite yamā vai saṃprakīrtitāḥ || akrodho guruśuśrūṣā śaucam āhāralāghavam | apramādaś ca pañcaite niyamāh samprakīrtitāḥ ||

Not causing injury, chastity, truthfulness, not engaging in business, and refraining from theft—these are praised as the five yamas.

Refraining from anger, obeying one's teacher, purification, eating lightly, and vigilance—these are praised as the five *niyama*s.

Kauṇḍinya goes on to explain each one, rejecting the binary distinction, since he views all ten observances as mandatory to practice until death, whereas in the Pāśupata system the term niyama designates special fixed-term ( $k\bar{a}l\bar{a}ntarita$ ) practices, like the special vratas.<sup>28</sup>

<sup>26</sup> 'Not causing harm, etc., constitute universal dharma. The universal dharma "one should not seek to harm any creature" applies even to the Caṇḍāla' (sādhāraṇadharmo 'hiṇssādiḥ; na hiṃsyāt sarvā bhūtāni ity ācaṇḍālaṃ sādhāraṇo dharmaḥ, ad Yājñavalkya-dharmaśāstra 1.1).

<sup>28</sup> Virtually the same stanzas appear in Sānkhyavrtti 23, p. 36, and in the Vratisāsana and the Vrhaspatitattva from ancient Java (cf. Nihom 1995): ahimsā brahmacaryah ca satyam avyavahārikam | astainyam iti pañcaite yamā rudreņa bhāsitāħ || akrodho gurususrūsā saucam āhāralāghavam | apramādas ca pañcaite niyamāħ parikārtitāħ || Vratisāsana 29, 31 = Vrhaspatitattva 60–61). The Javanese commentators of both texts call the full set the dasasīla, 'ten forms of virtuous conduct' and both gloss susrūsā as bhakti. In these verses, avyavahārika stands parallel to aparigraha in the Yogasūtra's yamas. The Javanese paraphrases offer renderings of the term avyavahārika based on the range of meanings of Sanskrit vyavahāra. Vrhaspatitattva: 'avyavahārika means not engaging in (legal) disputes, (or) not selling and buying, (or) not making judgments of right and wrong' (avyavahārika naranya tan avivāda,

Further on in the Śivāśramādhyāya, ahimsā is singled out as 'the supreme dharma for those capable of it':

ahimsaikā paro dharmaḥ śaktānāṃ parikīrtitam | aśaktānām ayaṃ dharmo dānayajñādipūrvakaḥ || 11.92 || nātaḥ paraṃ prapaśyāmaḥ kvacid apy āgame vayam | yasmād abhayadānena dānam adbhutam uttamam || 11.93 ||

11.92 Non-harm alone is taught as the supreme law for those who are capable of it; for those who are incapable this law gives priority to giving, sacrifices, and so on.

11.93 We can see nothing higher than this, in the entire tradition, since the gift of safety is the highest, wonderful gift.

tan adolavəlya, tan paguṇadoṣa; the Vratisāsana omits the first gloss). These interpretations are quite in keeping with Kaundinya's explanation of asamvyavahāra: 'Business is of two kinds: the business of buying and selling, and the business of court. Now one who engages in either of these cannot avoid injuring either himself or others' (saṃvyavahāras ca punar dvividhaḥ | tad yathā krayavikrayasaṃvyavahāro rājakulasaṃvyavahāras ceti | ata ekatareṇāpy atrādhikrtasyātmapīdā parapīdā cāvarjanīye bhavataḥ | (PBh ad PS 1.9, p. 22; translation Hara 1966, 199). Compare also the parallels in Vāyupurāna 16.17–19, Lingapurāṇa 1.89.24–25, and Viṣṇudharma 100.2–3.

<sup>29</sup> The row of Mānavadharmašāstra 10.63 gives two alternative versions indicated by '[var.].' Olivelle's edition accepts ahimsā satyam akrodhah, but a very large number of manuscripts read ahimsā satyam asteyam. The latter is also what Yājňavalkyadharmašāstra 1.121ab has. In the row of Yogasūtra 2.30, 32, 'y' refers to yama and 'n' to niyama. Ahimsā (the commitment not to cause harm), when fully realised, is the defining virtue of the śivayogin; other śivāśramins who cannot give the 'gift of safety' (abhayadāna) compensate by making other acts of piety. This is just another way in which the Śivadharmaśāstra strives to fashion a dilute form of Pāśupata asceticism that is within reach of laypeople—laypeople who are subject to other rules and observances ('giving, sacrifices, and the like') that substitute for the gift of safety, and compensate for the harm unavoidable in worldly domestic life. Non-harm remains the ultimate ideal, but other more accessible virtues take priority for those observing Śiva's dharma at home.

The close association of dharma and bhakti in the Śivadharmaśā-stra may in part have been influenced by that of the Bhagavadgītā. In the Gītā, most mentions of dharma refer to status-specific dharmas: those of caste and family (BhG 1.40–44, 4.1–13), or one's own dharma in contrast with that of another (BhG 2.30–33, 3.35, 18.47, 18.66).<sup>30</sup> But where bhakti is presented as a substitute for the discipline of the yogin, thanks to Kṛṣṇa's signature precept of renouncing the fruits of action, the dharma is one involving ascetic virtues like those of the Śivadharma mahāvrata (e.g., BhG 12.13–20),<sup>31</sup> which are said to arise merely from the 'yoga of devotion' (bhaktiyoga, BhG 14.26). And just as in the Śivadharmaśāstra, this dharma is explicitly made available to women and Śūdras, at least in one passage:<sup>32</sup>

api cet sudurācāro bhajate mām ananyabhāk | sādhur eva sa mantavyaḥ saṃyag vyavasito hi saḥ || 9.30 || kṣipraṃ bhavati dharmātmā śaśvacchāntiṃ nigacchati | kaunteya pratijānīhi na me bhaktaḥ praṇaśyati || 9.31 || māṃ hi pārtha vyapāśritya ye 'pi syuḥ pāpayonayaḥ | striyo vaśyās tathā śūdrās te 'pi yānti parāṃ gatim || 9.32 ||

9.30 If a man of even very bad conduct is devoted to me and to no other, he should be deemed good, for he has made the right resolve.

9.31 He quickly becomes dharma-minded (dharmātman), and attains perpetual peace. Know, O son of Kuntī, that one who is devoted to me does not perish.

9.32 For when they rely on me, O Pārtha, even those of evil birth, women, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras reach the Ultimate Goal.

Hence, both the Bhagavadgītā and the Śivadharmaśāstra employ the concept of bhakti to provide non-renunciates access to what is otherwise the otherworldly dharma of the yogin.

4. The Śivadharma's Version of the 'Laws on Class and Discipline' (Varnāśramadharma)

It is precisely the desire to define a discipline of Śiva-devotion that can be practiced at home that led the author(s) to attempt a systematic superimposition of Śaiva principles over the Dharmaśāstra framework of varņa and āśrama, to generate a new template for Māheśvaras. It has been observed that other, later Śaiva works aimed at lay devotees tend to affirm the socio-ritual precepts of Smārta Brahmanism in some form:

So he should not transgress (na langhayet) the practices of his casteclass and discipline (varņāsramācārān) even in thought (manasāpi). He should remain (tiṣṭhet) in the discipline (āśrame) in which he was when he was initiated into the Śaiva religion (dīkṣitaḥ śivaśāsane) and [at the same time] maintain the ordinances of Śiva (śivadharmaṃ ca pālayet).<sup>33</sup>

By contrast, the Śivadharmaśāstra invokes the central categories of the Dharmaśāstra social model—the social classes (varņa) and disciplines  $(\bar{a}srama)$ —only to superimpose over them a set of Śiva-oriented principles and observances that neutralise the distinctions between them, dissolving them in an overarching sivāsrama open to all, allowing religious agency to Śūdras and other groups normally classified outside the pale of the 'twice- born' society, as well as to women.

The eleventh chapter, titled Śivāśramādhyāya ('chapter on Śiva's discipline') or Śivāśramacāravidhi ('rule of conduct in Śiva's discipline') in the manuscripts, is where the Śivadharmaśāstra sounds most like a Dharmaśāstra in the Smārta sense. It lays out a set of śivāśramas parallel to the āśramas of classical Dharmaśāstra, but here redefined through the prescription of such acts as tending the fire used in Śiva-worship (sivārcāgni) or bathing in ash, the most distinctive feature of Pāśupata practice. The four varṇa classes of the Smārta social model are mentioned, suggesting that the author expected his audience to view society through that lens, but the Śivadharma model undercuts the exclusionary implications of the hierarchy by making Śaiva piety available to all on the same terms, including to Śūdras and to women (and in one verse, even to foreigners, ŚiDhŚ 1.28) through devotional observances, and through the generalization of acts of generosity and hospitality which, though prescribed in Dharmaśāstra only for high-status recipients, are here directed to Śiva-devotees of any status, an act which is equated with serving Śiva himself.

4.1 The Four Āśramas in the Dharmasūtras and in the Mahābhārata

The very notion of speaking of a grhasthāśrama as religious vocation<sup>34</sup> was a bold conceptual gambit: it asserted that the domestic setting could serve as a context for holy discipline equally as well as lifelong service under a preceptor, life in a wilderness hermitage, or the itinerant existence of a mendicant. It was the Āpastambadharmasūtra, the very first work composed to preach a Brahmanical conception of dharma, that introduced the idea that the household could be a place of religious vocation, on a par with modes of celibate, ascetical discipline that were attracting attention (and patronage) in that period. Āpastamba, followed by the later Vasisthadharmasūtra, presents the grhasthāśrama as equal in dignity to the celibate *āśrama*s of lifelong student, hermit, and wandering mendicant. The code of Gautama and the older code of Baudhāyana treat Āpastamba's model as a view to be refuted (a pūrvapakṣa), and reject the celibate vocations.

As Patrick Olivelle has lately pointed out, the term grhastha was not in the first place simply a synonym for 'head-of-household'; it was a designation for a formal religious status on a par with ascetic *śramaņa*s, attested already in this sense in Aśoka's twelfth and tirtheenth Rock Edicts (ca. 255 BCE), and in the seventh Pillar Edict (ca. 241 BCE).<sup>35</sup> The grhastha was being presented as a particular sort of religious sectarian (pāsanda, in a neutral sense)—one who, unlike a śramana, does not have to leave home. In this early phase of the doctrine, the grhastha was not just presented as an equal to the more explicitly ascetic professionals; he was eulogised as the root or basis of all the other *āśrama*s, because he helps to sustain them with food and other gifts.

In the Mahābhārata, the word āśrama most often denotes a place, a physical residence, set aside for ascetic discipline and pious ritual observance. Outside of the didactic material in Mahābhārata 12–14, nearly all the mentions of āśrama in the Mahābhārata as a religious profession (as opposed to a place) occur in interpolated verses. The didactic sections do refer to the āśrama-system, but sometimes it is the old, non-sequential āśrama model taught in the Āpastambadharmasūtra,<sup>36</sup> including the grhastha-first order of presentation, and even when the sequential model is explicitly presented (12.233–237 and 12.313.10–19), it is still with the grhastha-best ranking.

A line from the  $N\bar{a}r\bar{a}yan\bar{v}ya$  section (MBh 12.321.25ab) asserts that 'all four  $\bar{a}sramas$  have  $g\bar{a}rhasthya$  as their root' (catvāro hy āsramā deva sarve gārhasthyamūlakāh); it recurs in almost the same words in the  $\bar{A}svamedhikaparvan$  (MBh 14.45.13), preceded by a list of the four  $\bar{a}sramas$  that places the grhastha first:

grhastho brahmacārī ca vānaprastho 'tha bhikṣukaḥ | catvāra āśramāḥ proktāḥ sarve gārhasthyamūlakāḥ || 14.45.13 ||

The four disciplines (*āśrama*s) are called 'householder,' 'celibate student,' 'hermit,' and 'mendicant'; they all have the householder state as their basis. (cf. MBh 12.321.25ab)

The greater value of the householder-state is expressed with another metaphor early in the Śāntiparvan:

āśramāms tulayā sarvān dhṛtān āhur manīṣiṇah | ekatas te trayo rājan gṛhasthāśrama ekatah || 12.12.11 ||

Wise men say that when all āśramas are placed in the balance, the householder āśrama is on one side, and the (other) three on the other.

Further on (MBh 12.65), Bhīṣma teaches Yudhiṣṭhira that proper kingly discipline is equivalent to fulfilling all sorts of *āśrama*s, with the gṛhastha-āśrama at the pinnacle. What is very interesting here is that more than three other *āśrama*s are mentioned, and they have names not seen elsewhere: bhaikṣa-, kṣema-, dīkṣā-, vanya-, and brahma-āśramas. This list culminates in a series of verses praising various royal policies as fulfilling 'all the āśramas' or gārhasthya—the two options appear virtually equivalent. In any case, there is no indication here of a temporal progression of *āśrama*s. Hence, the Mahābhārata sometimes seems to preserve an older, pre-Manu attitude toward the *āśrama*s.

4.2 The Four Āśramas According to the Śivadharmaśāstra

In the Śivāśramādhyāya, however, the term āśrama is deployed in its technical Dharmaśāstric sense to name four modes of life structured by such discipline, and 'śivāśrama' thus becomes a general label for a Śaiva adaptation of those modes. This śivāśrama, a condition open to all varņas and both sexes, is the focus of the opening section of  $\overline{A}dhy$ āya eleven:

sarveşām eva varņānām śivāśramanisevinām | śivadharmāh śivenoktā dharmakāmārthamuktaye || 11.1 || brāhmaṇaḥ kṣatriyo vaiśyaḥ strī śūdro vā śivāśramī<sup>37</sup> | vānaprastho gṛhastho vā yaś cānyaḥ syāc chivāśramī || 11.2 || svāśramād uttare kuryāt þuṣpārāmam suśobhanam | agnyāgārasamāyuktam aiśānyām īśvarālayam || 11.3 ||

Nandikeśvara spoke:

11.1 Śiva has declared the Laws of Śiva (śivadharma), so that those of all classes (varņa) who adhere to Śiva's discipline (śivāśrama) may attain virtue, material gain, sensual gratification, and liberation.

11.2 A Brahmin, a Kṣatriya, a Vaiśya, a woman, or a Śūdra who observes Śiva's discipline (śivāśramin), a forest-dweller or a householder, and whoever else might observe Śiva's discipline (śivāśramin), 11.3 should make, to the north of his residence (svāśrama), a beautiful flower garden, furnished with a fire-shed [in the southeast and] a temple of Īśvara in the northeast.

That the Dharmasastric sense of 'religious discipline' is present can be seen in the fact that Manu also uses the verb nişev- with āśrama in this sense (MDh 6.87–88), just as in verse 1 here:

brahmacārī grhasthaś ca vānaprastho yatis tathā | ete grhasthaprabhavāś catvāraḥ pṛthagāśramāḥ || 6.87 || sarve 'pi kramaśas tv ete yathāśāstraṃ niṣevitāḥ | yathoktakāriṇaṃ vipram nayanti paramāṃ gatim || 6.88 ||

<sup>37</sup> A notable but poorly supported variant reading for the second śivāśramī is gṛhāśramī in  $N_{S_2}^{K}$  and  $N_{I_{2a}}^{K}$ , which might have meant '…or [any] other who has a holy residence at his house.' As noted in the translation (fn. 3), this variant may have originated in an effort to avoid repeating the word śivāśramī or in anticipation of the end of v. 10; or it may have been intended to exclude the śivayogin, who would not have had the house or fire-shed mentioned in the next stanza. 6.87 Student, householder, forest hermit, and ascetic: these four distinct orders ( $\bar{a}$ *śramā*h) have their origin in the householder.

6.88 All of these, when they are undertaken (*nisevitā*h) in their proper sequence as spelled out in the sacred texts, lead a Brahmin who acts in the prescribed manner to the highest state.

The śivāśrama order encompasses all four of the Dharmaśāstric āśramas, Śaiva versions of which are briefly described. Śivadharmaśāstra 11.10–14 mentions first<sup>38</sup> the śivagṛhāśramin, corresponding to Dharmaśāstric gṛhastha. Although engaged in worldly affairs, his discipline takes the form of observing particular restrictions:

sivārcāgniparo nityam tadbhaktānām ca pūjakah | parvamaithunavarjī syāc chrīmām sivagrhāsramī || 11.10 || devāgnyatithibhaikṣārtham pacen naivātmakāramāt | ātmārtham yah pacen mohān narakārtham sa jīvati || 11.11 || devārtham pacanam yeṣām santānārtham ca maithunam | svargārtham jīvitam teṣām narakārtham viparyaye || 11.12 || vittatrītīyabhāgena prakurvīta sivārcanam | kurvīta vā tadardhena yato 'nityam hi jīvitam || 11.13 || nyāyopārjitavittah syād anyāyam ca vivarjayet | anyāyopārjitair vittair narakārtham sa jīvati || 11.14 ||

11.10 Constantly devoted to worship of Śiva (śivārcā) and the fire, and honouring His devotees, the illustrious Śiva-householder (śivagṛhāśramin) should refrain from having sex at the days of the moon's changes.

11.11 He should cook for the gods, Agni, guests, and food for alms, but never for his own sake. He who out of delusion cooks for his own sake, lives destined for hell.

11.12 Those who cook for the sake of the gods, and have sex for the sake of children, their life is destined for heaven, but if they do otherwise, they are destined for hell.

11.13 With a third of his wealth, he should perform worship of Śiva, or he may do so with half of that [i.e., a sixth], for life is impermanent.

11.14 He shall acquire wealth with lawful means, but unlawful means he should avoid. With riches acquired by unlawful means he is destined for hell.

These broad observances allow the householder to fulfill the vratas of brahmacarya, asteya, saṃtoṣa, sivapūjā, agnihavana, and dāna. Acquiring wealth only honestly (nyāyena) and never dishonestly (anyāyam) and giving up a third (or a sixth) of his wealth for worship demonstrate his lack of undue attachment to worldly wealth. Sexual self-control is exercised by maintaining chastity (brahmacarya) at changes of the moon, and at other times engaging in sexual activity only for the purpose of procreation—a conception of householder chastity that is further explained in 11.111–115, but expressed already by Manu (MDh 4.128). All his food should be prepared first for making offerings and ritual feeding of holy men, and never just for his own sake, an idea traceable to early Dharmaśāstra, as will be shown below.

The sivabrahmacārin comes next (11.15). This would seem to be out of order according to the sequence established by Manu, but this sivabrahmacārin is not conceived of as observing the period of studentship in youth, preliminary to marriage. Indeed, no mention is made of Veda-study, its raison-d'être in the Smārta system. Rather, the term is probably used to mean nothing more than a vow to refrain from sex<sup>39</sup>—'whether permanently (naisthika) or temporarily (bhautika, i.e., for securing material prosperity [bhūti]).'<sup>40</sup> The third mentioned is the sivavaikhānasa, using a common synonym for vānaprastha hermit (11.16). The defining feature of this discipline is to be 'free from all social contact, eating bulbs, roots, and fruits,' that is, to live on edibles found in the wild.

Finally, a long passage details the practices of the 'best of Śiva-votaries' (śivavratīndra), i.e., the figure otherwise called yogin (11.23, 44, 48; 12.25, 34) or yati (11.40), 'ascetic.' Of these, the definitive one is lying and bathing in ash (bhasmasnāna), the hallmark of Pāśupata ascetics, prescribed in 11.21–34. The status itself is defined in 11.17:

nivṛttaḥ sarvasaṅgebhyaḥ śivadhyānarataḥ sadā | jñeyaḥ śivavratīndro 'yaṃ bhasmaniṣṭho jitendriyaḥ || 11.17 ||

11.17 Withdrawn from all social contact, ever inclined to meditate on Śiva, one is known as the foremost of Śiva-votaries (śivavratin), lying in ash (bhasmaniṣṭha), with his senses conquered.

The following twenty-seven stanzas seem mainly to pertain to this status, although some of them may have been meant (or later understood) to extend to *śivāśramin*s more generally.<sup>41</sup>

The cursory manner in which the śivabrahmacārin and śivavaikhānasa are presented, with just one stanza each, no doubt reflects the fact that they are included only for completeness and are irrelevant for the purposes of the chapter. The real focus is to demonstrate the complementarity and ultimate equivalence of the householder and the yogin within Śivadharma.

<sup>40</sup> The pair of terms naisthika and bhautika has been interpreted variously. See TAK III, s.v. naisthika.

 $^{\rm 41}$  Such is the case at 11.18, which the author of the commentary thinks applies to all the *śivāśramin*s.

It is interesting to observe that although four asiramas are enumerated, they are listed with the householder first, as in Apastambadharmasūtra, and with no hint that the author had Manu's sequential model in mind. Although it is perfectly possible that the Dharmasūtras' nonsequential understanding of the asiramas might have persisted for a while in some circles outside the Smārta fold, Manu's model seems elsewhere to have completely supplanted the older one in most Sanskrit discourse fairly soon after its promulgation around 200 CE, so it is a matter of surprise to find the older version reflected in a work of the sixth century, especially one that pointedly if subversively cites the orthodox Smārta categories. This leads one to wonder whether this section of the chapter, or even the chapter as a whole, might have been composed substantially earlier.<sup>42</sup>

There is one seeming parallel with Manu (MDh 6.46), a stanza also quoted by Kauṇḍinya on  $P\bar{a}$ supatasūtra 1.9:<sup>43</sup>

bhāvapūtam carec chaucam vastrapūtam jalam pibet | drstipūtam nyaset pādam satyapūtam vaco vadet || 11.38 ||

11.38 One should practice cleanliness with a purified disposition; one should drink water that has been purified by [straining through] a cloth; one should set down one's foot purified by sight; one should speak words purified by truth.

However, this need not imply direct dependence of the Śivadharmaśāstra on Manu; the order of the quarter-verses differs, and the maxim circulated widely.<sup>44</sup>

<sup>42</sup> Bisschop (2018b, 21) notes that v. 11.24 appears almost verbatim in Kauṇḍinya's commentary (fourth or fifth century) on the Pāśupatasūtra; this need not be a case of Kauṇḍinya quoting the Śivadharmaśāstra, since both works may quote from a common source. However, the fact that the whole āśrama discussion in our chapter reflects the Dharmasūtra model rather than the one that supplanted it does seem to raise the possibility that it was composed earlier than the sixth century.

<sup>44</sup> Hara (2002 [1974], 250) collected several other loci, including parallels in Visnusmrti 96.14–17 and three Purāņas (Vāyupurāņa 16.6cd–7ab, Lingapurāņa 1.89.7, Kūrmapurāņa 2.28.18).

In any case, Śivadharmaśāstra 11.45 states explicitly that devotion to Śiva and observance of the precepts of Śivadharma constitutes a higher āśrama that redefines and transcends all Dharmaśāstra's āśramas:

śivadhyānaparāḥ śāntāḥ śivadharmaparāyaṇāḥ | sarva evāśramā jñeyāḥ śivabhaktāḥ śivāśramāḥ || 11.45 ||

11.45 Those who are focused on meditation on Śiva, peaceful, and dedicated to Śivadharma—[practitioners of] all the disciplines, [when] devoted to Śiva—should be considered practitioners of the Śiva discipline (śivāśramāh).<sup>45</sup>

4.3 The Śūdra Śivāśramin

Another distinctive aspect of the Śivadharmaśāstra's subversion of va-rņāśramadharma is its conditional acceptance of Śūdras within the fold:

yaḥ sarvasaṃganirmuktaḥ śūdraḥ śivaparāyaṇaḥ |
yo 'pīha vapanaṃ kṛtvā yogīndrānucaro bhavet || 11.42 ||
vased āyatane nityaṃ sagaṇaḥ śivadhārmikaḥ |
puspārāmaikakarmātmā puspavāṭīkriyāparaḥ || 11.43 ||
trisnānapūjāsaṃyuktaḥ kaupīnācchāditaḥ sadā |
yogināṃ bhaktiyogena yogasthānam avāpnuyāt || 11.44 ||

11.42 Free from all social contact, devoted to Śiva, even a Śūdra, if he gets shaven, may become a servant of a great yogin here.

11.43 He should always reside in a temple, together with his attendants, following the Śivadharma, occupied with tending the flower-garden, dedicated to the rites of the flower-garden.

11.44 Engaged in the three bathings and worship, covered by a loincloth at all times, he attains the state of union by means of the yoga of devotion to yogins.

Here we meet a Śūdra who, provided he meets the moral criteria and undergoes the rite of shaving, may engage in a form of discipline alongside yogins. But his yoga appears to consist only in tending the garden and serving the yogins. Even if we were to interpret yogīndra in v. 42 as an epithet of Śiva, the fact that the Śūdra's role is described as anucāra, 'servant,' echoes his servile status in the Smārta vision of society.<sup>46</sup>

 $^{\rm 45}$   $\bar{A}{\rm \acute{s}rama}$  appears to be used in this stanza to designate by metonymy those who practice a discipline.

Elsewhere in the work it seems to be implied that the 'Śiva-consecration' (sivasaṃskāra) renders a Śūdra pure enough to partake of the milk of the brown cow—a litmus test of minimal purity by orthodox Brahmanical norms:

kapilam<sup>47</sup> yah pibec chūdrah śivasamskāravarjitah | pacyate sa mahāghore suciram narakārņave || 5.14 ||

5.14 That Śūdra who drinks [the milk of] the kapila cow without having had Śiva-purification (śivasaṃskāra) will be boiled for a very long time in a most dreadful hellish sea.

kapilam yah pibec chūdrah śivasamskāravarjitah | sa prayāti mahāghoram narakam nātra samśayah || 8.50 ||

8.50 That Śūdra who drinks [the milk of] the kapila cow without having had Śiva-purification (śivasaṃskāra) will go to a most dreadful hell, without a doubt.

It is an old Dharmaśāstric principle that Śūdras must not drink the milk of the brown cow (the best of all cows) or eat from a palāśa leaf, due to these being choice materials for use in Brahmanical worship:

kapilāksīrapānena brāhmaņīgamanena ca | vedāksaravicārena sūdras cāndālatām iyāt || Parāsarasmrti 1.67 ||

By drinking the milk of a brown cow, going [to bed] with a Brahmin woman, and inquiring into the words of the Veda, a Śūdra would acquire the status of a Caṇḍāla.<sup>48</sup>

A number of stanzas in the Śivadharmaśāstra likewise praise the brown cow (or its products) as an offering to Śiva (5.10–14, 7.28, 8.47–50, 10.38, 10.82). Śivadharmaśāstra 5.14 and 8.50 attest to the persistence of concern with Śūdra impurity even in the context of Śivadharma, but they do offer the prospect of a remedy, though it is nowhere explicitly stated what the śivasamskāra consists of.<sup>49</sup>

The qualified embrace of Śūdra participation would go on to become a feature of Śaiva Siddhānta. Sanderson (2009, 284ff) has documented how 'the Saiddhāntikas opened initiation to candidates

Kṛṣṇa Śeṣa's Śūdrācāraśi-romaņi p. 41, 44, 178, quotes this (with the variant: sūdraḥ caṇḍālatām vrajet), and similar verses from the 'Skandapurāṇa' and Padmapurāṇa (Benke 2010, 233–49 discusses the expanding scope assigned to *sacchūdra*s by Dharmaśāstrins from the fourteenth century onwards). from all four caste-classes,' including women and even persons with disabilities, excluding only those of impure habits. Several Śaiva texts endorse the principle that certain, 'pure' Śūdras may be accepted. A stanza attributed to the Parākhyatantra is quoted in the Dīkṣādarśa of Vedajñāna II (Chidambaram, d. 1564/4):

amadyapāḥ kulīnāś ca nityaṃ dharmaparāyaṇāḥ⁵º | śūdrāḥ kṣatriyavaj jñeyāś śeṣā nindyās tato bhṛśam ||

Those Śūdras who do not drink alcohol, who are of good family, and are always devoted to their religious duties should be looked upon as Kṣatriyas. All the rest are completely to be condemned.<sup>51</sup>

Another quotation of the Parākhya is found in a manuscript of the twelfth-century Prāyaścittasamuccaya:<sup>52</sup>

yad uktam śrīmatparākhye kāryā dīkṣāpi sarveṣām tacchaktividhiyoginām | trayānām api varņānām na tu śūdrāntyajātiṣu || amadyapās tu ye śūdrāḥ śaivācārakriyādarāḥ<sup>53</sup> | śivabhaktāś ca teṣām sā dīkṣā kāryānyathā na hi ||

As has been taught in the Parākhya:

Initiation should be done for all who have received the action of [the descent of] his power, for all three caste-classes but not for [ordinary] Śūdras and the lowest-born [below them].

One may initiate Śūdras, but only those who do not drink alcoholic liquor, who revere the disciplines and rites taught by Śiva, and are devoted to Śiva themselves.<sup>54</sup>

<sup>52</sup> Neither of these passages is part of the Parākhya edited by Goodall; they likely belonged to the portion of that work (chapters seven to thirteen) not transmitted in his manuscript, or they might rather belong to another work by the same name (Goodall 2004, xxxviii-xlii, lxii). The second passage, moreover, does not appear in Sathyanarayanan's 2015 edition of Trilocanaśiva's work, though (as noted in the next note) a variant of one of the hemistichs is found twice in Hr-dayaśiva's work of the same name, transcribed in the same volume.

By contrast, though, the Śivapurāṇa's Vāyavīyasaṃhitā has a chapter (2.15) explaining the śivasaṃskāra, which it equates with the  $d\bar{\imath}ks\bar{a}$  (2.15.5). This rite is allowed for widows and unmarried girls, with permission of the family, but restricted for Śūdras, especially the lowest castes, the degraded (patita), and mixed-castes, for whom cleansing of the adhvans through the  $d\bar{\imath}ks\bar{a}$  is not ordained (2.15.63–65ab). The sincerely pious among them may have their sins cleansed instead by giving foot-washing water (pādodakapradānādyaiḥ kuryuḥ pāpavisodhanam).

There is also this passage from Trilocanaśiva's Prāyaścittasamuccaya (584–85ab):<sup>55</sup>

ye ca māheśvarāh śūdrā bhasmarudrākṣadhāriṇaḥ | teṣāṃ pañcadaśāhena śuddhiḥ sūtau mṛtāv api || 584 || tathaiva rudrakanyāyāṃ pañcācārye 'pi saṃmatā |

584 As for lay-devotees of Śiva who are Śūdras and who wear ash and *rudrākṣa*s, they are purified after fifteen days, both in the case of birth and death.

585 The same is agreed upon for a rudrakanyā and for a [temple-]musician, and for those of low birth but born from an anuloma-marriage, if they wear ashes and rudrākṣa-beads.

586ab Also for those who are specialists in singing for Śiva, who follow Śiva's āśrama.<sup>56</sup>

586cd Purification is declared [to take place] after twenty days in the case of a devadāsī.

587ab So too Śūdras who are engaged in work in the temple [must be understood to obtain purification after the same period].<sup>57</sup>

Sathayanarayanan (2015, 304) seems to interpret śivāśramaniṣevinām to mean persons residing in a 'Śaiva āśrama,' but the occurrence in  $M\bar{a}navadharmas\bar{a}stra$  6.87–88 of āśrama in the sense of 'discipline' as the object of niṣev- should rule out reading it here in the sense ginām (tacchakti- corr.; tacchaktir Cod.) | trayānām api varņānām na tu sūdrāntyajātisu | amadyapās tu ye sūdrāh saivācāra\*kriyādarāh (corr.; -kriyādirāh Cod.) | sivabhaktās \*ca (corr.; cai Cod.) tesām sā dīksā \* kāryānyathā na hīti (em.; kāryannyathānuhīti Cod.).

of a residence. In any case, the other persons discussed in this passage are distinguished not by their residence but rather by their religious profession. All of them have low-status functions in the temple. Here, śivāśramanişevinām modifies śivagānavidām, just as bhasmarudrākṣadhāriņām in the preceding hemistich, which has the same structure, modifies hīnānulominām. Thus, we have a concrete example of someone who follows a śivāśrama: a temple singer. It is evident from these Śaiva Siddhānta sources that the Śaiva sphere continued to accommodate at least some Śūdras on certain conditions, but they are not able to throw light on what the Śivadharmaśāstra meant.

We may get some clues about a Śūdra as a śivagṛhāśramin from the Śivopaniṣad, a later text of the Śivadharma corpus, in the second of two stanzas that contrast the ash-bath of an ascetic and that of a holy householder:

grhasthas tryāyusomkāraih snānam kuryāt tripuņḍrakaih | yatih sārvāngikam snānam āpādatalamastakāt || 5.20 || śivabhaktas tridhā vedyām bhasmasnānaphalam labhet | hŗdi mūrdhni lalāțe ca śūdraḥ śivagṛhāśramī || 5.21 ||

5.20 A householder should perform the [ash-]bath by applying the triple lines while reciting the  $try\bar{a}yusa$  mantra and the syllable om. An ascetic [should perform] a bath of the whole body from the soles of the feet to the top of the head.

5.21 A Śūdra who is a śivagṛhāśramin, devoted to Śiva (śivabhakta), will obtain the fruit of the [full-body] ash-bath [if he marks the body with ash] thrice in the fire-altar (vedi) at the heart, on the head, and on the forehead.

The Śivopaniṣad is later than the Śivadharmaśāstra, and shows a strong Vedicising tendency, as its very name suggests. In its precepts on the ash-bath, the Śivopaniṣad has the householder recite a mantra from Āpastamba Mantrapātha 2.7.2 (trāyuṣam jamadagneḥ kaśyapasya trāyuṣam 5<sup>8</sup> yad devānām trāyuṣam tan me astu trāyuṣam, 'The threefold vitality<sup>59</sup> of [the sage] Jamadagni, that of [the sage] Kaśyapa, that which is the gods—may it be mine!'). In the Vedic domestic ritual codes, this is the mantra to be recited over the razor or over the student who is about to be shaven before bathing at the end of his studies.<sup>60</sup> In that

<sup>59</sup> Trāyuṣam is variously interpreted as 'threefold vital power' or the 'three phases of life' (childhood, youth, old age, together signifying a full lifespan).

<sup>60</sup> Hiraņyakesigrhyasūtra 1.9.6, Bhāradvājagrhyasūtra 1.28.1–2, Baudhāyanagrhyaparibhāsāsūtra 1.13.20; Baudhāyanagrhyasēşasūtra 2.11.9 uses it rather in the shaving that precedes the Vedic initiation rite (upanayana). rite, the next act is to give the razor to the barber while reciting: śivo nāmāsi svadhitis te pitā namas te astu mā mā himsīḥ (ĀpMSP 2.7.3: 'You are named "Gentle" [Śiva]. The axe is your father. Honour to you! Do not harm me!'). The mention of śiva here was likely sufficient to transfer these mantras into a Śaiva ritual context, for the similar purpose of purifying the body, thus ritually marking a new religious status.

In the Śivopanisad passage, the Vedic mantra is used to mark the body in several places: the forehead, the heart, the right and left shoulders, the back of the neck, and the head. The Śūdra (per ŚiUp 5.21) should mark himself only in three places; it is not clear whether the Vedic mantra is to be used; in Vedic rulebooks, Vedic mantras are often not permitted for Śūdras and women.<sup>61</sup>

In any case, although this Vedic mantra is not mentioned in the Śivadharmaśāstra's rules for the ash-bath, the fact that the Śivopaniṣad considered it appropriate for applying ash may indicate that for the author of the Śivadharmaśāstra the purifying ash-bath was conceived of as having the character of a samskāra, as rites for consecrating a person were called in the Smārta tradition. Given that the Śūdra is required to be shaven before engaging in the ash-bath (per ŚiDhŚ 11.42), it seems safe to conclude that the śivasaṃskāra mentioned in Śivadharmaśāstra 5.14 and 8.50 was a purificatory rite involving shaving and bathing (or anyway marking) the body in Śiva's ash. This supposition is further reinforced by a stanza coming just before those dealing with the Śūdra:

jaṭākalāpadhārī syāt pakṣād vā vapanaṃ bhavet | yad eva puṇyaṃ dīkṣāyāṃ tat puṇyaṃ vapane punaḥ || 11.39 ||

11.39 One should wear the hair-tuft in a mass, or one should shave every fortnight; whatever merit there is in the rite of initiation that same merit one obtains by shaving [every fortnight].

This stanza is in the genre of many others that promise all the fruits of various Vedic or Smārta rites to those who adhere to the Śivadharma. The  $d\bar{\imath}ks\bar{a}$  rite mentioned here is probably the Vedic  $d\bar{\imath}ks\bar{a}$  consecration prescribed for the sponsor of a Soma sacrifice. That  $d\bar{\imath}ks\bar{a}$  involves a shaving (as do the upanayana rite that commences the period of study, <sup>61</sup> In one stanza, even Manu allows for Śūdras of good conduct to pursue dharma, so long as Vedic mantras are not involved: 'Those who know the Law and yearn to follow it, however, incur no sin and receive praise when they imitate the practices of good men, without reciting any ritual formulas' (dharmepsavas tu dharmajñāḥ satāṃ vṛttam anuṣthitāḥ | mantravarjyaṃ na duṣyanti praśaṃsāṃ prāpnuvanti ca || MDh 10.127 ||). See also MDh 2.172, where an uninitiated Brahmin is prohibited from pronouncing Vedic mantras in most contexts, because 'he is equal to a Śūdra.' and the snāna bath that concludes it). By the logic of pars pro toto, the shaving recommended here is said to confer all the merit of a Vedic consecration to offer Soma. The fact that some manuscripts, including our oldest dated witness  $(N_{77}^{K_0})$ ,<sup>62</sup> read yajñānām (or a similar form) in place of  $d\bar{\imath}k\bar{\imath}a\bar{\imath}a\bar{m}$  is more evidence that the merit of offering Vedic sacrifices is what transmitters had in mind. But the word  $d\bar{\imath}k\bar{\imath}a\bar{\imath}$  is also sometimes used as a synonym of upanayana or samskāra in Vedic ritual texts.

Periodic shaving together with the marking of the body with the three lines of ash (even employing the old Vedic shaving mantra, in the Śivopanisad's more Vedicised version) thus seem to have constituted the śivasaṃskāra that ritually transformed a layperson—even (or especially) a Śūdra—into a śivāśramin.

It should be emphasised that while the Brahmanical Dharmaśāstra's class distinctions are cited as the conventional norm in the world, the Śivadharmaśāstra asserts that Śaiva observances overwrite and neutralise those distinctions to a great extent. Indeed, the author does not stop at validating Śūdra participation. In a hyperbolic statement in the opening chapter, 'The Definition of Śiva Bhakti' (śivabhaktilakṣaṇam), the doors of śivabhakti are flung open literally to all:

bhaktir aṣṭavidhā hy eṣā yasmin mlecche 'pi vartate | sa viprendro muniḥ śrīmān sa yatiḥ sa ca paṇḍitaḥ || 1.28 || na me priyaś caturvedo madbhaktaḥ śvapaco 'pi yaḥ |

tasmai deyam tato grāhyam sa ca pūjyo yathā hy aham || 1.29 ||

1.28 When this eight-fold bhakti is present even in a barbarian, he [may be deemed] the best of Brahmins, an illustrious sage, an ascetic, a scholar!

1.29 A four-Veda [Brahmin] is not dear to me, [but] even a Dog-Cooker is, if he is devoted (bhakta) to me. One should give to him, one should receive from him, and he is to be worshipped like me.

Taken together, these passages show that the religious group that produced and endorsed such sentiments encouraged Śūdras (and even more despised groups) to practice as śivāśramins.<sup>63</sup> The social inclusiveness and relative leveling intended here were signalled by repurposing a simple rite of consecratory purification whose name (saṃskāra) and prime features (shaving and 'bathing') hearken back to Smārta models that had heretofore been used to register exclusive social statuses. However, we must also recognize that the social leveling was not total in this case: Śūdras seem to have been subject to a 'glass-ceiling': they were promised the same ultimate rewards as everyone else, but were assigned a role that translated their servile status into a notionally higher sacred form of service. As śivabhaktas they might be served, but their own role in the āśrama was to serve the yogins.

4.4 Women in the Śivāśrama

Women, too, are given scope to practice, especially through the performance of special vows (vratas). The umāmaheśvaravrata (ŚiDhŚ 10.90–141), prescribed specially for women, promises them a variety of worldly rewards, including a good husband in this life and/or the next. It is true that whereas all four pursuits of humanity (the caturvarga: virtue, material gain, sensual gratification, and liberation) are said to be fulfilled for male devotees, this women's regimen mentions only the trivarga (i.e., omitting liberation):

śivabhaktā tu yā nārī dhruvaṃ sā puruṣo bhavet | strītvam adhyuttamaṃ sā cet kāṅkṣate śṛṇu tad vratam || 10.90 || umāmaheśvaraṃ nāma sadā prītinivardhanam |

adhiyogakaram śāntam dharmakāmārthasādhakam || 10.91 ||

10.90 But that woman who is a śivabhaktā, she would certainly become a man; if she aspires to the supreme womanhood, hear about this regimen.

10.91 The umāmaheśvaravrata always increases gladness, brings about supreme union [with Śiva], is peaceful, and conduces to dharma, kāma, and artha.

Nevertheless, there are hints that duḥkhānta might be attainable to them directly, as at 10.113 (mentioned above) and 10.35:

pratimāsam pravakṣyāmi śivavratam anuttamam| dharmakāmārthamokṣārtham naranāryādidehinām|| 10.35 ||

I will expound the unexcelled śivavrata month by month, for the sake of dharma, kāma, artha, and mokṣa of men, women, and other embodied beings.

Women, then, might perform Śivadharma observances (vratas) on the same terms as men. Yet there is no mention in the Śivadharmaśāstra of women undergoing something like the śivasamskāra mentioned in connection with the Śūdra. The Vāyavīyasamhitā will later consider women eligible for its Tantric śivasamskāra, but cautions that 'women are not autonomously entitled to the rite of śivasamskāra'  $(n\bar{a}dhik\bar{a}rah$  svato  $n\bar{a}ry\bar{a}h$  sivasamskārakarmaņi), but rather require their husband's permission (or their son's, if widowed; or father's, if unmarried;  $V\bar{a}yav\bar{v}yasamhit\bar{a}$  2.15.62–63). This imposes limitations for women similar to those that apply to Smārta samskāras: women must have the consent of a male relative to undergo the rite, and it should be performed without Vedic mantras.<sup>64</sup> This is an endorsement of 'orthodox' status disparities that is typical of later Śaiva sources on householder religion.

5. Guest-Reception, Madhuparka, and Post-Sacrificial Feeding Directed toward Śivabhaktas

Another important innovation of the Śivadharmaśāstra is that it redirects Smarta practices of ritualised feeding and guest-reception to śivabhakta recipients. In the Smārta system, there were two distinct contexts for such feeding: the ceremony of receiving a guest; and the feeding of Brahmins after a Vedic offering rite. Several services, including provision of argha water and the madhuparka ('honey-mixture'), should be offered to a guest, an honour that is reserved for a short but varying list of dignitaries. Although in older lists, a king, senior relations, and a bridegroom are accorded this treatment, the individuals most often mentioned are worthy Brahmins: an ācārya (Veda-teacher), an rtvij (Vedic priest), a śrotriya (Vedic polymath), and especially a snātaka (a Brahmin who has completed the student's regimen and is subject to further strict rules of piety). The other main occasion in the Smarta tradition for ritualised feeding of Brahmins was at the conclusion of an offering to ancestors (śrāddha), a practice then extended to offerings of any sort. In those contexts, a preference for learned or ritually observant Brahmins is usually stated.

In the Śivadharmaśāstra, lay Śaivas are enjoined to venerate individuals deemed śivabhakta with the various elements of the guest-reception ceremony. The fact that these śivabhaktas must take pains to avoid impurity such the one that comes from contact with death or menstruating women reminds one of the similar taboos to which the snātakas were subject.<sup>65</sup> There is a general principle that a Śiva-devotee is to be regarded and treated as Siva in person, so that whatever a sivabhakta receives may be considered an offering to the deity:

<sup>64</sup> MDh 2.66: amantrikā tu kāryeyam strīņām āvrd asesatah | saṃskārārtham sarīrasya yathākālam yathākramam ||; 'For females, on the other hand, this entire series (of saṃskāras) should be performed at the proper time and in the proper sequence, but without reciting any Vedic formula, for the purpose of consecrating their bodies.'

 $^{65}$  A bhakta cannot touch food from cremation ceremonies, etc., or what is touched by a menstruating woman (12.10).

śivabhaktāya yad dānam bhaktyā kimcit pradīyate | tad aham tatra grhņāmi tenānantam tad ucyate || (interpolation after ŚiDhŚ 1.29)<sup>66</sup>

Whatever gift, however small, is given with devotion to a Siva- devotee, I there accept it, by which it is considered an infinite [gift].

This stanza is not included in all manuscripts, but the sentiment is echoed in a passage from the twelfth chapter of the Śivadharmaśāstra asserting that Śiva-devotees are the best sort of recipients of feeding at an ancestor-offering:

śivabhaktaṃ dvijaṃ śreṣṭhaṃ yaḥ śrāddhādiṣu bhojayet | kulasaptakam uddhṛtya śivaloke mahīyate || 12.57 || bahunātra kim uktena śivabhaktaṃ tu bhojayet | śivabhakto yadā bhuṅkte sākṣād bhuṅkte tadā śivaḥ || 12.58 ||

dvijānāṃ vedaviduṣāṃ koṭiṃ saṃbhojya yat phalam | munaye vītarāgāya bhikṣādānena tat phalam || 12.59 ||

tasmāc chrāddhe viśeṣeṇa puṇyeṣu divaseṣu ca | śivam uddiśya viprendraṃ śivabhaktaṃ tu bhojayet || 12.60 ||

12.57 He who feeds a Śiva-devotee, the best twice-born, in ancestor offerings (śraddhā) and other rites rescues seven generations of his family, and will be honoured in Śiva's paradise (śivaloka).

12.58 What more is there to say about it? One should feed a Śiva-devotee! Whenever a Śiva-devotee eats, Śiva is there eating in person!

12.59 The fruit [obtained] by giving alms-food to a dispassionate sage is the fruit of having fed ten million Veda-knowing Brahmins.

12.60 Therefore, especially at an ancestor offering, and on auspicious days, one should feed a Śiva-devotee, the best of Brahmins, after designating Śiva [as the recipient].

By 12.60, it is clear that the śrāddha ritual is just one exemplary occasion for feeding holy men; it is something that can be done on other holy days as well, and in each case, the very best sort of Brahmin recipient is a śivabhakta. Similarly, the best place to perform such a rite is a śivāśrama:

gṛhe śrāddhasya yat puṇyam araṇye tac chatādhikam | śivāśrameṣu vijñeyaṃ tat puṇyam ayutādhikam || 12.64 ||

<sup>66</sup> This stanza is found in  $N_{2}^{k_{7}}(p\bar{a}da b: bhakt\bar{a}; p\bar{a}da c: tadantam tatra grhņāti) and <math>N_{2a}^{k_{2a}}(p\bar{a}da c: tad aham tat pragrhņāmi)$ , but lacking in several other manuscripts that we have checked. Naraharinath's printed version (1.31cd) reads: tad ahan tattri (sic) grhņāmi tenānanta (sic) tad ucyate.

12.64 The merit of [performing] the ancestor offering in the forest is a hundred times more than that of [performing it] at home. One should realise that the merit of doing it in śivāśramas is ten-thousandfold more.

This stanza ingeniously depicts the sivāśrama as a site that embeds the sanctity of the forest hermitage in a domestic setting—not a conventional Smārta one, but one sanctified by Śivadharma, where sivāśramins are to be the recipients. Moreover, the main concern is not the offerings to the ancestors per se, but the practice, dating back to the Vedic ritual sūtras, of feeding the rice balls, or the remainder of the rice, to virtuous Brahmins after the śrāddha ritual proper had ended. Similar ritualised feeding was extended by analogy to other Vedic offering rites as well. This seems to have been a development of the Maurya period,<sup>67</sup> perhaps by analogy with the ritualised feeding of members of the non-Brahmanical śramaņa orders.

The precept announced in Śivadharmaśāstra 11.6 that one must never prepare food only for himself but with an eye to making offerings (which includes feeding śivabhaktas) is a likewise direct adaptation of an idea first voiced in the Āpastambadharmasūtra, in a digression that interrupts the rules for performing śrāddha, to opine that pious Brahmins should be fed at all offerings:

śucīn mantravataḥ sarvakṛtyeṣu bhojayet | deśataḥ kālataḥ śaucataḥ samyakpratigṛhītṛta iti dānāni pratipādayati | yasyāgnau na kriyate yasya cāgraṃ na dīyate na tad bhaktavyam | ĀpDhS 2.15.11–13

At all rituals one should feed individuals who are upright and learned in the Vedas. He should offer gifts in proper places, at appropriate times, on the occasion of purificatory rites, and to proper recipients.

He should not eat food from which a portion has not been first offered in the fire or given to a guest.  $^{68}$

The precepts on śivabhakti in the Śivāśramādhyāya include a passage on the merits of feeding and otherwise serving śivabhaktas as if they were Śiva in the flesh:

yathāsambhavapūjābhih karmaņā manasā girā | śive bhaktih sadā kāryā tadvac ca śivayogisu || 11.48 || svadehān nirvišeseņa śivabhaktāmś ca pālayet | bhayadāridryarogebhyas tesām kuryāt priyāni ca || 11.49 ||

<sup>67</sup> The Śrauta piņḍapitrmedha ritual did not normally include feeding the balls for the ancestors to human recipients, though some later codes include as one option feeding them to a single Brahmin (or a cow). The śrāddha rite, with feeding of Brahmins at the end, appears only in the Gṛhyasūtras.

and word, by performing worship however one can, and likewise [devotion to] śivayogins.

11.49 And one should protect Śiva's devotees, no differently from one's own body, from danger, poverty, and disease, and please them.<sup>69</sup>

11.50 What can men actually do for Śiva who is [already] fully complete? Whatever is done for Śiva's devotees is done for Śiva.

11.51 One should go the place where there are people (janah) devoted to Maheśvara, even if far away. One must strive to see them, for there Hara is present.

11.52 And if one obeys correctly the command of a devotee of Maheśvara, who delights in the worship of Śiva, one obtains the fruit of a horse sacrifice.

11.53 If one performs worship [of Śiva's devotee] correctly, listening fondly to stories of Śiva every day and being intent on Śiva every day, one will become a leader of [Śiva's] hosts.

11.54 One should offer worship devotedly to the devotees of Śiva who have come to the śivāśrama with a guest's welcome, a seat, a foot-bath, guest water, and food such as honey and curd (madhuparka).

11.55 One who greets [a Śaiva guest] with the words 'welcome!' and 'homage!' will be honoured in Agni's world for ten thousand years.

11.56 One who spontaneously gives a seat to a devotee of Siva who has arrived will dwell in the city of [Indra] the city-smasher for twenty thousand years.

11.57 One who derives satisfaction from seeing a devotee of Śiva in his home will dwell in Kubera's city for thousands of crores of years.

11.58 If one devotedly washes the feet of a weary devotee of Śiva, anointing his feet with ghee, one will be honoured in Viṣṇu's world.

11.59 One who with devotion offers guest water, preceded by water for the feet and for sipping, to a devotee of Śiva who has arrived goes to Sūrya's world.

11.60 If one correctly feeds a visiting Brahmin devotee of Śiva with honey and curd (madhuparka) and so forth in proper sequence, one will be honoured in Śiva's world.

This elaborate ceremonial is modeled on the Dharmaśāstric guest-reception rituals, as is particularly evident in stanzas 54, 55, 58, 59, and 60, which enumerate the classical set of offerings for guests: seat, foot-bathing water, argha water, and madhuparka (the honey-and-curd mixture). The general message of the Śivāśramādhyāya is that birth status is irrelevant in Siva-devotion, but here in the context of guest-reception practices, the Siva-devotee is at least once explicitly identified as a Brahmin: he is called dvija in v. 60, and vipra is found as a variant in seven manuscripts in v. 58. The term dvija technically might apply to a Ksatriya or Vaisya who has undergone Vedic initiation, but in general practice a Brahmin is always understood; either way, the Vedic criterion of Ārya varna status is implied, which is out of keeping with the principle that Siva-devotion creates an overriding status accessible to all. Is this merely the result of an element unwittingly retained when the author adapted a Smārta passage to fit the Śivadharma theme? Or is there some residual deference to the ritual efficacy of the Brahmin as recipient of hospitality?

Evidence from elsewhere in the Śivadharmaśāstra might point toward the latter explanation. In a passage of the Śivadānādhyāya (8.22–28), Brahmins figure in a rite involving a dough-figurine of Śiva that is 'endowed with a white sacred thread' (upavīta [8.22c], the emblem of a Brahmin):

bhojayec chivabhaktāmś ca śaktyā viprāmś ca tarpayet <sup>70</sup>| prīyatām me śivo nityam ityuktvotthāpayed dvijān || 8.26 ||

tair eva tu dvijaih sārdham tad rūpam tu sivālaye | nītvā samarpayed vedyām<sup>71</sup> sivalingasamīpatah<sup>72</sup> || 8.27 || sarvayajñaphalam prāpya sarvadānaphalāni ca | surūpo rūpadānena sivaloke mahīyate || 8.28 ||

8.26 One should feed vipras (Brahmins) who are Śiva-devotees, and fortify them as well as one can; saying 'may I please Śiva always,' one should invigorate dvijas.

8.27 Having brought that [dough-]figure into the Śiva temple, along with those dvijas, one should deposit it in the altar before the śivalinga.

8.28 By means of giving a [dough-]figure, one obtains the fruit of all fire-offerings and the fruits of all donations and is honoured with a beautiful figure in Śiva's world.

Further on, there is an injunction to feed a sivabhakta dvija (8.34) and for a vipra to receive a vessel (8.36). These and similar passages relate to rites of feeding and gifting adapted from Smārta models, and the final chapter reproduces the praise for the king who practices bhūmidāna, the granting of fertile lands to *dvija*s (12.42–43). Yet such intrusions of reverence toward Brahmins have the look of a formulaic holdover. Elsewhere, after all, the (non-sīvabhakta) Brahmin—even the most learned or enlightened—is relegated to a status below the sīvayogins (12.35–36). It may be that stanzas like 11.60, 12.57, 12.60 that place sīvabhakta and a word meaning 'Brahmin' in apposition really mean to say that if one performs a ritual at which Brahmins are supposed to be fed, one should take care that they are sīvabhakta Brahmins, who are the very best sort.

In Śivadharmottara 12.205ff (reappearing almost verbatim in the Revākhaņḍa of the Skandapurāṇa) we find a similar but not identical Śivadharma adaptation of the Dharmaśāstric āśrama model in the discussion of feeding Śiva-devotees. An important difference here is that Manu's ordering of the āsramas has been adopted (though there is still no indication that individual Śaivas are meant to proceed through the whole sequence):<sup>73</sup>

bhojayec chraddhayā śaktyā yaḥ śivabrahmacāriṇam | sa bhogaiḥ krīḍate divyaiḥ śivaloke vyavasthitaḥ || 12.205 || yaḥ śivāśramadharmasthaṃ gṛhasthaṃ bhojayed budhaḥ | vipulaiḥ sa mahābhogaiḥ krīḍan śivapure vaset || 12.206 ||

<sup>73</sup> Text adopted from the provisional edition in De Simini 2016, 52, fn. 151; these verses have a parallel in Revākhaṇḍa 59.21cd–26ab.

12.205 He who faithfully feeds a śivabrahmacārin to the best of his ability will revel in heavenly delights when he has been settled in Śiva's world (śivaloka).

12.206 And the wise man who would feed a grhastha who observes the dharma of the śivāśrama, will dwell in Śiva's city (śivapura) reveling in copious delights.

12.207 One who worships a śivāśramavanastha (one who lives in a forest śivāśrama) with bulbs, roots, and the like will obtain heavenly delights when he reaches the city of the Lord.<sup>74</sup>

12.208 Having fed and bowed down to a single pāśupata with devotion, he makes merry in Śiva's paradise with various delights.

12.209 He who makes a single offering of alms-food (bhikṣā) to one who adheres to the Great Observance (mahāvratadhara) will be regaled in the Śiva's paradise with very great delights.<sup>75</sup>

As in the Śivadharmaśāstra's account, a śivabhakta can on principle belong to any of the *āśrama*s. A householder śivabhakta evidently surpasses an ordinary layman in so far as he 'observes the dharma of Śiva's discipline' (śivāśramadharmastha), and on that account he merits feeding and reverential treatment modeled explicitly on what is prescribed in the Dharmaśāstras for a snātaka or śrotriya Brahmin guest. There are analogies, too, with the Buddhist upāsaka in the technical sense of a layman under supererogatory (yet sub-monastic) vows,<sup>76</sup> but the Dharmaśāstra is the explicit frame of reference. The Śivadharmaśāstra's innovation was—at least in principle—to extend to any Śiva-devotee, regardless of social rank, a form of reverential treatment that the Smārta tradition had reserved mainly for learned or <sup>74</sup> The term sivāsiramavanastha, on the face of it, is ambiguous, but the fact that he is to be offered 'bulbs and such' shows off that the Śivadharma's śivavaikhāna-sa is meant.

<sup>75</sup> The sivayogin or yati category is treated in two stanza referring to the pāśupata bhakta and the mahāvratadhara. In the latter stanza, the fact that the food offered is called bhikṣā confirms that a mendicant is meant.

<sup>76</sup> Sanderson (2012, 10–14) points to a parallel with the Buddhist and Jaina upā-saka (lay-devotee), noting the use of this term to describe non-initiate Māheśvaras in later Śaiva Siddhānta discourse. The term does not occur in the Śivadharmaśāstra.

pious Brahmins. In what is perhaps a moment of hyperbole (ŚiDhŚ 1.28–29), it is stated that Śūdras, 'Dog-Cookers,' or even foreigners can qualify as śivabhaktas worthy of reverential feeding. But when feeding of śivabhaktas is the main topic of discussion, the Śūdra disappears and the śivabhakta to be fed is repeatedly called a Brahmin or 'twice-born' (dvija). Here again, this may be an artifact of the guest-reception language imported from the older ritual and dharma codes, not consistently reconciled with the claims made elsewhere in the work that social distinctions were elided in the Śiva-discipline.

In further contrast with Smārta ritual and dharma literature, the Śivadharmaśāstra (11.61–79) generalises the scope of these services by suggesting that they be offered to anyone in need of them—the weary, the ill, the fearful, the destitute, regardless of social status (especially verse 70). This generalised charity, though, does not displace the special reverence reserved for śivabhaktas. Although it is clear that śivayogins are the holiest of all, the author wishes to show that śivabhaktas of the other āśramas also practice an exemplary form of discipline that makes them worthy recipients of receiving the rites of hospitality—as inheritors of the mantle of the śrotriya or snātaka Brahmin.

6. Differing Approaches to Dharma in the Śivadharma and the Viṣṇudharma

The oldest texts presenting themselves as teaching Śivadharma and the work transmitted under the name Viṣṇudharmā<sup>77</sup> seem to have been composed in roughly the same period, and outwardly resemble each other in so far as both present themselves as sāstra (VDh 105) or even dharmašāstra (ŚiDhŠ 12.102), and self-consciously appropriate numerous doctrinal and normative elements from Dharma*s*āstra proper, adapting them to a theology and social ethos shaped by particular religious movements (Pāśupata, and Bhāgavata and/ or Pāñcarātra, respectively). Both traditions position themselves among other sāstras as well. Yet in certain ways, they differ fundamentally in approach. What did the authors of the Śivadharmaśāstra and the Viṣṇudharma mean when they used the word dharma, and how do their interpretation of Dharmaśāstric concepts differ?

6.1 The Viṣṇudharma's Āśramadharma

Unlike the Śivadharmaśāstra, the Viṣṇudharma adopts the sequential conception of the four āśramas that was introduced in Manu's code (ca. 200 CE). The brahmacārin is listed first and, unlike in the Śivadha-

rmaśāstra and Śivadharmottara, he is not just someone under a vow of chastity but an actual Vedic student living with his guru:

devebhyo 'pi hi pūjyas tu svagurur brahmacārinaḥ | tasyāpi yajñapuruṣo viṣṇuḥ pūjyo dvijottama || 4.32 || striyaś ca bhartāram rte pūjyam anyan na daivatam | bhartur grhasthasya sataḥ pūjyo yajñapatir hariḥ || 4.33 || vaikhānasānām ārādhyas tapobhir madhusūdanaḥ | dhyeyaḥ parivrājakānāṃ vāsudevo mahātmanām || 4.34 || evaṃ sarvāśramāṇāṃ hi vāsudevaḥ parāyaṇam | sarveṣāṃ caiva varṇānāṃ tam ārādhyāpnuyād gatim || 4.35 ||

VDh 4.32 For one's own teacher should be worshiped by a celibate student (brahmacārin), more even than the gods, and he should also worship Viṣṇu the Soul of the Sacrifice, O best of the twice-born.

VDh 4.33 Nothing else divine is to be worshiped by a woman besides her husband, (and) a good, home-dwelling (grhastha) husband should worship Hari, Lord of the Sacrifice.

VDh 4.34 Madhusūdana should be propitiated by vaikhānasas by means of ascetic practices, and Vāsudeva, the Supreme Self, is to be meditated on by wandering mendicants.

VDh 4.35 For thus, Vāsudeva becomes the Ultimate Aim of people of all *āśrama*s, and by propitiating him, those of all classes (*varņa*s) reach the goal.

Since the āśrama system understood here does not deviate substantially from the classical Dharmasāstric one (apart from identifying Viṣṇu as the deity), there was no reason to rename the āśramas as the Śivadharmaśāstra did (as śivabrahmacārin, etc.).

One striking detail here is that the author gives special attention to the householder's wife, who should worship only her husband. The idea, here only implicit, is probably that the husband stands in for god, a notion known from other sources (e.g., MDh 5.154). It is reinforced by the parallel structure of the preceding stanza, where the student worships the teacher as the teacher worships Viṣṇu. In both of these home-centred āśramas, the deity is described as the Lord of Sacrifice (Yajñapati), an epithet that emphasises Viṣṇu's personification of the Vedic ritual. Recall that the Dharma literature is fond of seeing an analogy between the relation of the student to the teacher and that of the bride to the groom (for example, by employing similar rites and mantras in the Vedic initiation and wedding rites).<sup>78</sup> In any case, we do not see a larger, more religiously autonomous role for a woman comparable to the female śivabhakta of Śivadharmaśāstra 10.90. The student-first pattern is affirmed elsewhere in the Visnudharma too:

tathāśrameṣu sarveṣu brahmacārivratādikāḥ | sthāpayitvā tataḥ sarvāḥ prajāḥ saddharmavartmani | kalkirūþaṃ parityajya divam eṣyāmy ahaṃ punaḥ || 66.81 ||

VDh 66.81 Thus after establishing all people who perform the observances beginning with that of the brahmacārin in all the āśramas, on the path of the true dharma (sad-dharma), I will give up the form of Kalkin, and return again to heaven.

brahmacārigṛhasthādyā na cyavanty āśramāc ca ye | svadharmato haris teṣāṃ prītimān eva sarvadā || 73.4 ||

73.4 Those beginning with the brahmacārin and the grhastha do not slip from (their) āśrama; Hari has affection for them because they ever follow their proper dharma.

But it is not merely Manu's order of listing the *āśrama*s that has been adopted; it is also the idea that they should be practiced in sequence—an idea not evident even in the Śivadharmottara (which does however list the śivabrahmacārin first). VDh 101.21–53 presents a detailed description of the rules for how a man should proceed from one āśrama to the next in Manu's sequence: brahmacārin, grhastha, vānaprastha, and bhikṣu.<sup>79</sup> The only exception is the option to skip the householder state and proceed directly to hermit or mendicant (VDh 101.29).

6.2 The Vișnudharma on Guest Reception

In contrast to the Śivadharmaśāstra, the Viṣṇudharma mentions the elements of the guest reception only as part of the orthodox Brahmanical rites for honoring weary venerable visitors (1.1–3, 27.11, etc.) or for worshipping deities (e.g., 5.5–9, 13.14, 20.7). Indeed, this sets the tone in the very opening stanzas of the work:

krtābhisekam tanayam rājñah pārīksitasya ha | drastum abhyāyayuh prītyā śaunakādyā maharsayah || 1.11 || tān āgatān sa rājarsih pādyārghyādibhir arcitān | sukhopavistān viśrāntān kṛtasampraśnasatkathān || 1.2 ||

ny equals the rite of Vedic consecration; serving the husband equals living with the teacher; and care of the house equals the tending of the sacred fires.'

<sup>79</sup> Stanza 101.50, toward the end, lists the four with bhikṣur vaikhānasas tathā for the last two, but this is evidently metri causa.

tatkathābhiḥ kṛtāhlādaḥ praṇipatya kṛtāñjaliḥ | śatānīko 'tha papraccha nārāyaṇakathāṃ parām || 1.3 ||

1.1 In delight, Śaunaka and the rest of the great sages approached to see the son of King Pārīkṣita when he had been consecrated.

1.2 When those who had come had been honored with footwashing water, scented drinking water, etc., when those weary ones, greeted with polite inquiries and conversation, had been seated at ease.

1.3 Then, delighted by their words and joining his palms, that sageking Śatānīka bowed reverently to them, and asked to hear the sublime account of Nārāyaṇa.

There is no parallel to the Śiva-devotee introduced in the Śivadharmasāstra as a replacement for the learned or snātaka Brahmin who was the model Smārta recipient of food and other service.

6.3 The Viṣṇudharma's Diatribe Against Heretics (pāṣaṇḍas)

Most notably, the Viṣṇudharma (especially in chapters 24–25, 66, and 105) enters into sectarian polemic against the threat posed to orthodox Smārta dharma in this decadent Kali age by 'heretics' (pāṣaṇḍas) of many stripes, including Buddhists, Jains, Sāṅkhyas, skeptics, and false ascetics.<sup>80</sup>

śrutismṛtyuditaṃ dharmaṃ varṇāśramavibhāgajam | ullaṅghya ye pravartante svecchayā kūṭayuktibhiḥ || 25.4 ||

Those who willfully, with false reasoning, transgress the dharma expressed in the Veda and the Tradition, which arose from the division into varnas and āśramas,... (those wicked pāṣaṇḍas go to hell).

Avoiding interactions—especially conversation  $(\bar{a}l\bar{a}pa)$ —with  $p\bar{a}sandas$  is one of the first-mentioned requirements of various votive observances (vratas): e.g. 5.1, 7.4, 8.2, 14.2, 15.4.

The last chapter returns to the theme of heretics. Predicting the dreadful state of the world in the Kali Yuga, the degenerate age,<sup>81</sup> we are warned that 'false ascetics'—mostly Śūdras, but also many Brahmins, Kṣatriyas, and Vaiśyas—will lead the world astray through the use of logic and disputation (hetuvāda), attracting people to become Śrāvakayāna or Mahāyāna Buddhist monks, or Jaina munis, or Kāpila (i.e., Sāṅkhya) bhikṣus. Arguments framed in foreign languages (hetuvādair ... mlecchabhāṣānibandhaiḥ) are singled out for condemnation (105.44). Śūdras

The Śivadharmaśāstra, on the other hand, makes no reference to pāṣaṇḍas. The word mahāyāna appears frequently, especially in the tenth chapter, but only to describe heavenly conveyances that one can enjoy in Śivapura. The only exception may be two stanzas occurring in a series of similar ones in chapter three describing how various deities attained their position through worshipping one or another sort of linga. These two stanzas slip the Buddha and the Ārhanta (i.e., the Jaina Tīrthaṅkara) into the series:

buddhenāpy arcitam lingam jāmbūnadamayam subham | tena buddhatvam āpnoti sadā sāntam avasthitam || 3.31 || ārhantas tu sadākālam puṣpalingārcanāt param | tenārhattvam avāpnoti yogam vāpi sudurlabham || 3.32 ||

3.31 A linga is worshipped even by the Buddha, bright, made of gold. Thereby he obtains the state of Buddha, always remaining at peace.<sup>82</sup>

3.32 The Jina (ārhanta), after worshiping a linga of flowers, thereby attains arhat-hood, or a [divine] union (yoga), which is very hard to reach.

As Bisschop has observed,<sup>83</sup> this pair of stanzas differs in tense from the surrounding stanzas, is absent in some manuscripts, and occurs in a different position in the one Sāradā manuscript. Whatever a fuller understanding of the transmission of this passage may tell us, these irregularities in the transmission—along with the interpolation in two manuscripts after 6.32 of another pair of stanzas, again positing that the Arhat and the Buddha worshipped Śiva—suggest that Buddhism and Jainism lay outside 'the perceived boundaries of Brahmanical religion' in a way that the cults of other deities did not, but that the stanzas reveal an inclusivist attempt to encompass them. This subordinates Buddhism and Jainism by portraying their 'gods' as devotees of Śiva and reframing their spiritual attainments in Śaiva terms, rather than condemning them as corrupt or false.<sup>84</sup>

<sup>82</sup> Text and translation from Bisschop 2018a, 406, where he notes: 'The gods mentioned include (in order of appearance): Brahmā, Indra, Kubera, the Viśvedevas, Vāyu, Viṣṇu, the Vasus, the Aśvins, Varuṇa, Agni, Sūrya, Buddha, Arhat, and Soma. The mention of the Buddha and Arhat [the Tīrthaṅkara of Jainism] in this otherwise strongly Brahmanical list is noteworthy.'

7. Conclusions

Comparing the Śivadharma's revisionist appropriation of Dharmaśāstric concepts with the way the same concepts appear in the Viṣṇu-dharma is a good way of highlighting what is distinctive and innovative in the Śivadharma religion. In both traditions, the sectarian theology was presented in terms calculated to win over Smārta Brahmins, the kings who patronised them, and/or others who emulated their religious norms. They sought to raise the prestige of their own religious ideals, to attract patronage, and thereby to institutionalise their religions on a broader basis. In doing so, they endorsed ascetic and yogic ideals on principle, but they framed their precepts for laypeople in terms of the concepts most distinctive of the dharma of the Dharmaśāstra, especially those related to varṇa, āśrama, and the rites of domestic piety, including observance of *vrata*s, performance of pūjā, and the ritual feeding of Brahmins.

The Śaivas and Vaiṣṇavas of this period, though, approached these matters quite differently. The Viṣṇudharma's conception of Viṣṇu-bhakti pointedly defended classical Smārta status hierarchy and its prerogatives, forgoing the Śivadharma's radical moves in the direction of social inclusion and the flattening of hierarchies.<sup>85</sup> The difference is that Vaiṣṇava bhakti, having already won acceptance from the gatekeepers of Vedic and Smārta orthodoxy, defended that status by echoing orthodoxy social exclusivism, whereas Śaivism still needed to win wider acceptance, and therefore opted for an inclusivist approach in order to win legitimacy for the new tradition.<sup>86</sup> Certainly the Pāśupata order had been classed by prominent orthodox theorists such as Kumārila (the seventh-century Mīmāṃsaka) and Medhātithi (the ninth-century commentator of the Mānavadharmaśā-stra) with Pāñcarātras, Buddhists, Jainas, and other Veda-rejecting groups as unworthy of receiving the guest-reception.<sup>87</sup> In that con-

<sup>85</sup> This difference between the Śivadharmaśāstra and the Viṣṇudharma may foreshadow a broader pattern in the later Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava spheres. Vaiṣṇava movements have tended to adhere more strictly to Brahmanical purity and hierarchy standards. The Bhagavadgītā's emphasis on adhering to svadharma, 'one's proper dharma' according to status, already tacks in that direction, despite the leveling possibilities of bhakti.

<sup>87</sup> Kumārila, Tantrāvarttika ad Pūrvamīmāmsāsūtra 1.3.3–4 and Medhātithi ad MDh 2.5–6; see Sanderson 2015, 159–169, who also discusses the similar view of Aparāditya (the twelfth–century commentator on the Yājñavalkyadharmasāstra). Sanderson goes on to show how the Śaiva tradition broadly adopted the inclusivist model. text, the logic of Śivadharma as presented in the Śivadharmaśāstra (and in the Śivāśramādhyāya in particular) was intended to undercut such criticisms by appropriating key Smārta ritual and social categories, redefining them in relation to Śiva at every step.

The particular genius of the Śivadharma was the way it overlaid the Dharmasāstric social model of dharma with a specially tailored form of ascetic discipline. In an earlier period, the Dharmasāstra itself had recast everyday household life as a religious profession by circumscribing it with strenuous ritual observances, social restrictions, and purity rules, and by putting forward the highly learned (śrotriya) or highly disciplined (snātaka) householder Brahmin as a figure eminently worthy of ritualised feeding and public patronage through royal endowments analogous to those bestowed upon the ascetic orders. The Śivadharma subsequently appropriated and adapted that model as a way of allowing uninitiated Māheśvaras to more closely emulate Pāśupata ascetics. The śivabhakta status, bestowed upon exemplary *śivagṛhastha*s and śivayogins alike, likewise provided a paradigm for validating the pious householder as a religious professional worthy of royal patronage.

Dharma as an upgrading of household life and dharma as a downgrading of ascetic rigor thus converge in the middle. Dharmaśāstra had earlier located that middle in the household by defining a more rigorous model of domestic piety centered on the Brahmanical grhastha. The Śivadharma's śivāśrama-śivabhakti ideal is a further reconfiguration of the householder-ascetic. Like the Bhagavadgītā, the Śivadharmaśāstra made devotion the overriding criterion of value, beyond birth status and beyond conventional ritual attainments; the bhakta is promised the same rewards as the ascetic, and even more than those of non-devotee laity however ritually observant they may be.

But the Śivadharmaśāstra goes still further by redirecting the Smārta practice of ritualised hospitality for especially pious learned Brahmins and other venerable persons so that the favored recipients are Śiva-devotees. In this way, the devoted 'Śiva-householder' becomes an object of devotion for others, on the principle that devotees embody the divine presence of Śiva directly, just as does the Śiva-ascetic. Like the Dharmaśāstras, the Śivadharmaśāstra defines a religion of the household that, while giving due recognition to the virtuosic discipline of the ascetics, appropriates some of their charisma for householders with a discipline of their own, creating an āśrama in both senses of the word, which allows them to play the roles both of worshipper and of worshipped. In doing so, the Śivadharmaśāstra flattened hierarchical differences of social rank, and closed the gulf between the householder and the ascetic by accommodating them within a single śivāśrama, with both figures recognised as vocations worthy of respect, worship, and patronage precisely because the deity becomes present in both.

This was conveyed through an innovative and sometimes even subversive rewriting of Smārta precepts and categories, a rewriting directed no doubt at the target audience of the Dharmaśāstra treatises themselves, as a way of giving shape, coherence, and legitimacy to lay religiosity inspired by Pāśupata ascetics in terms that would have resonated in mid-first-millennium India, particularly among Sanskrit-literate social and political elites. The boldness of this vision in the Śivadharmaśāstra is partly undercut by vestiges of Smārta deference to Brahmin status, especially where ritualised feeding is concerned, and in references to the ritual use of the Brahmanical sacred thread. Mirnig is certainly correct when she observes that the Śivadharmaśāstra's 'ideals oscillate between a conformity to and the transcendence of Brahmanical norms, just as they do between those of the ascetic and the householder.'<sup>88</sup>

But the boldness of those ideals stands out when we compare the Śivadharmaśāstra to early works of lay-oriented devotional Vaisnavism such as the Bhagavadgītā and the Visnudharma, and even later works of the Sivadharma tradition beginning with the Sivadharmottara and the Śivopanisad, not to mention the Śaiva Siddhānta. The authors of all of these works engaged in adaptation and reconceptualization of Smarta rituals and social norms, but all of them affirmed Dharmasāstric social status and gender disparities to a greater degree than does the Śivadharmaśāstra. In particular, we perceive in the details of the Śivadharmottara's and the even later Śivopanisad's presentation of the āśramas a growing inclination to adhere more closely to Smārta orthodoxy, even (in the latter case) using Vedic mantras. In this respect, the radical sociology of the Śivadharmaśāstra's model of lay religion seems to have been tempered as the tradition matured, probably to help encourage wider acceptance by conservatively inclined elites as the tradition was carried along with other products of Sanskrit cosmopolitanism into new markets.<sup>89</sup> In this respect, the early Śivadharma fell victim to its own success.

Edition and Translation

Introduction to the Edition

1. Sources for the Root Text

The text of the Śivadharmaśāstra has been preserved in a very large number of manuscripts. Of these, at least twenty palm-leaf manuscripts survive in Nepalese sources, including the earliest, which hails from the tenth century CE. If we take into account the paper manuscripts from Nepal as well, the number is at least doubled. Similarly, more than twenty palm-leaf manuscripts exist in South Indian sources, written in Grantha, Telugu and Malayalam scripts.<sup>90</sup> There are also other manuscripts of the Śivadharmaśāstra written in Bengali and Śāradā scripts—and there are, no doubt, more manuscripts yet to be discovered.

For this edition of chapter eleven, which bears the title 'Śivāśramā-dhyāya,' a representative selection of twelve sources from what we estimate to be over ninety in total has been made. These include some of the oldest available manuscripts, but also a selection of manuscripts from different parts of the subcontinent in order to represent the regional variation of the text. Out of the twelve sources used for the critical edition of the present chapter, six are Nepalese palm-leaf manuscripts ( $N_{28}^{K}$ ,  $N_{82}^{K}$ ,  $N_{12a}^{K}$ ,  $N_{57}^{P}$ ,  $N_{77}^{Ko}$ , and  $N_{45}^{C}$ ); four are from South India: three palm-leaf manuscripts ( $G^{K}$ ,  $M_{63}^{Tr}$  and  $G_{40}^{L}$ ) and one transcript ( $P_{72}^{T}$ ); furthermore, one Kashmiri paper manuscript ( $S_{67}^{S}$ ) has been included, as well as the editio princeps of Yogi Naraharinath ( $E^{N}$ ).<sup>91</sup>

Manuscript N<sup>K</sup><sub>28</sub>

This is a palm-leaf manuscript microfilmed by the NGMPP, which bears the reel number A 1028/4 (acc. no. NAK 6–7) and is preserved at the National Archives, Kathmandu. It is written in Kutilā script. Though undated, this manuscript, being a Śivadharma corpus manuscript, provides the earliest material evidence for the existence of the corpus. Its script can be dated to the first half of the tenth century.<sup>92</sup> It is written in a clean hand and contains relatively few scribal errors. The manuscript is incomplete and consists in its present state of 157 folios in total. Each folio contains generally five lines. It has two binding holes: one in the centre-left and one in the centre-right. Foliation is recorded in the middle of the left-hand margin of the verso in Newari letters. The manuscript contains the following Śivadharma texts:

- 1. Śivadharmaśāstra (fols  $34^{r}-48^{v}$ )
- 2. Śivadharmottara (fols 48<sup>v</sup>-109<sup>v</sup>)
- 3. Śivadharmasamgraha (fols  $109^{v}-162^{r}$ )
- 4. Umāmaheśvarasamvāda (fols 162<sup>r</sup>-191<sup>v</sup>)
- 5. Śivopaniṣad (fols 1<sup>v</sup>-13<sup>v</sup>)

The Śivāśramādhyāya covers folios  $40^{v}$  to  $44^{v}$ .

Manuscript $N_{82}^{K}$

This is a palm-leaf manuscript microfilmed by the NGMPP, which bears the reel number A 1082/3 (acc. no. 3/393) and is preserved at the National Archives, Kathmandu. It is written in Newari script and dated to [Nepāla] Samvat 189 (1069 CE). It contains 274 folios, each folio generally containing six lines. It has two binding holes: one in the centre-left and one in the centre-right. Foliation is recorded in the middle of the left-hand margin of the verso and combines Newari letters and numbers. It is written in a clean hand and contains very few scribal errors. It marks colophons in orange colour. This manuscript is a multiple-text manuscript and contains:

- 1. Śivadharmaśāstra (fols  $1^v$ – $41^r$ )
- 2. Śivadharmottara (fols  $1^v$ – $52^v$ )
- 3. Śivadharmasamgraha (fols  $1^v$ – $57^v$ )
- 4. Umāmaheśvarasamvāda (fols  $1^{v}-32^{v}$ )
- 5. Śivopaniṣad (fols  $1^v-19^r$ )

<sup>92</sup> See also De Simini 2016b, 219, and Bisschop 2018b, 50, n. 212.

- 6. Vŗṣasārasamgraha (fols  $1^{v}-46^{r}$ )
- 7. Dharmaputrikā (fols  $1^{v}-12^{r}$ )
- 8. Uttarottaramāhasamvāda (fols  $1^v 24^r$ )

Manuscript  $N_{12a}^{K}$

This is a palm-leaf manuscript microfilmed by the NGMPP, which bears the reel number NGMPP B 12/4 (acc. no. NAK 5–841) and is preserved at the National Archives, Kathmandu. It can be dated to the eleventh century CE on palaeographical grounds. It contains 142 folios, each folio consisting of five lines in general. The folios are not held in the proper order. It has two binding holes: one in the centre-left and one in the centre-right. Foliation is displayed in the middle of the left-hand margin of the verso in Newari letters and numbers. It is written in a clean hand and contains few scribal errors. The manuscript is damaged on the margins, which has led to a considerable loss of text. This manuscript is a multiple-text manuscript and contains:

- 1. Śivadharmaśāstra (fols  $1^v$ – $47^r$ )
- 2. Śivadharmottara (fols  $48^{v}$ -109<sup>v</sup>)
- 3. Śivadharmasamgraha (fols 110<sup>r</sup>–150<sup>v</sup>)

Manuscript $N_{57}^P$

 $N_{57}^p$  is a multiple-text palm-leaf manuscript written in Newari script and preserved as part of the collection of Sylvain Lévi, housed in the Institut d'études indiennes of the Collège de France. The manuscript number is: MS. Skt. 57-B. 23. It may be dated to the eleventh century CE on palaeographical grounds.<sup>93</sup> It contains 249 palm leaves, each folio consisting of six lines. The following folios are missing: 3, 8, 47, 48, 135, 197, 214, and 216. Foliation is recorded on the verso side: in the middle of the left-hand margin in combination of Newari letters, and in the middle of the right-hand in roman numbers by a second hand. There are two binding holes: one in the centre-left and one in the centre-right. The manuscript is damaged in the margins, with considerable loss of text. The text is written in a clear hand and contains few mistakes. The manuscript contains the following texts:

<sup>93</sup> Two dates are recorded in Nepāla Samvat. These appear in the manuscript after the Dharmaputrikā: one on exposure 494 (Samvat 415 = 1295 CE) and the other on exposure 497 (Samvat 611 = 1491 CE). The first date is related to the Śivadharma manuscript and concerns the use of the manuscript on that date. The second date rather relates to the Visnudharma, of which one folio is included in the bundle, with its colophon written in a different hand.

- 1. Śivadharmaśāstra (fols 1<sup>v</sup>-40<sup>v</sup>)
- 2. Śivadharmottaraśāstra (fols  $40^v 93^r$ )
- 3. Śivadharmasamgraha (fols 93<sup>v</sup>-141<sup>v</sup>)
- 4. Umāmaheśvarasamvāda (fols  $142^{v}-172^{v}$ )
- 5. Śivopaniṣad (fols 173<sup>v</sup>–188<sup>v</sup>)
- 6. Uttarottaramāhasamvāda (fols  $189^{v}-210^{v}$ )
- 7. Vṛṣasārasaṃgraha (fols  $211^v 251^r$ )
- 8. Dharmaputrikā (fols  $251^{v}-260^{v}$ )

The Śivāśramādhyāya covers fols 33<sup>v</sup>-37<sup>r</sup>3.

Manuscript N<sup>Ko</sup><sub>77</sub>

 $N_{77}^{k_7}$  is a palm-leaf manuscript numbered G 4077/1 and preserved at the Asiatic Society, Kolkata. It is written in Newari script and dated to [Nepāla] Saṃvat 156 (1035–36 CE). It contains 355 folios, each folio consisting generally of five lines. The colophon is marked in red ink by a second hand.

It has two binding holes: one in the centre-left and one in the centre-right. The original foliation is given in the middle of the left-hand margin of the verso in conjunction with Newari letters and numbers. Two secondary foliations in roman script can be traced: one near the original foliation and the other above the centre-left binding hole. The manuscript has a somewhat blurred appearance and contains numerous scribal errors. It is damaged on the margins, resulting in considerable loss of text. The manuscript contains the following texts:<sup>94</sup>

- 1. Śivadharmaśāstra (fols 1–47)
- 2. Śivadharmottara (fols 1–65)
- 3. Śivadharmasamgraha (fols 1–58)
- 4. Umāmaheśvarasamvāda (fols 1-35)
- 5. Śivopaniṣad (fols 1–23)
- 6. Umottara or Uttarottaratantra (fols 23-42 and 46-49)

<sup>94</sup> Note that folios of this manuscript are not consecutively numbered. Cf. De Simini and Mirnig 2017, 597.

- 7. Vṛṣasārasamgraha (fols 1-52)
- 8. Lalitavistara (40; fols 1–25<sup>95</sup> and 1–17)

Manuscript $N_{45}^{C}$

 $N_{45}^{C}$  is a palm-leaf manuscript which is preserved at the University Library of Cambridge, bearing the number Add. 1645.<sup>96</sup> It is a palm-leaf manuscript dated to [Nepāla] Samvat 259 (1139–40 CE) written in Newari script. It contains 247 folios, consisting of six lines per folio. It has two binding holes: one in the centre-left and one in the centre-right. The foliation on the left-hand margin consists of Newari letters and numbers. On the right- hand margin there are Devanāgarī numbers. The manuscript contains many scribal errors as well as corrections by a second hand. The following texts are included:

- 1. Śivadharmaśāstra (fols  $1^r 38^r$ )
- 2. Śivadharmottara (fols  $38^r 87^r$ )
- 3. Śivadharmasamgraha (fols  $87^r-132^r$ )
- 4. Śivopaniṣad (fols  $132^r 150^v$ )
- 5. Umāmaheśvarasaņvāda (fols 150°–180°)
- 6. Uttarottaramāhasamvāda (fols  $180^{v}-201^{v}$ )
- 7. Vṛṣasārasaṃgraha (fols  $201^{v}-238^{v}$ )
- 8. Dharmaputrikā (fols  $238^{v}-247^{r}$ )

The Śivāśramādhyāya covers fols 31<sup>v</sup>2–34<sup>v</sup>3.

Manuscript $\hat{S}_{67}^{S}$

This is a paper manuscript written in Śāradā script and preserved at the Oriental Research Library, Srinagar, under the number 1467. It has thirty-eight folios, each folio containing thirteen to fourteen lines. Foliation is given in the lower left-hand margin of the verso under the abbreviation si. dha. in Śāradā numbers. The title on the library catalogue card is reported as Śivadharmacarita and it is classified under 'Purāṇa.' It is written in a clear hand and contains few scribal errors. The Śivāśramādhyāya covers fols 32'3–34<sup>v</sup>10.

Manuscript GKi

This is a palm-leaf manuscript preserved at Śrī Naṭarāja Gurukkal, Kilvelur. It is written in Grantha script. It has fifty-three folios; each folio contains seven lines in general. Although this source contains some scribal slips, it may be the best among the South Indian manuscripts consulted for this chapter. The foliation is given on the left-hand margin of the verse in Grantha letters, on top of which there is a roman foliation written in a late hand. There is damage by insects throughout, causing loss of text. The manuscript has two binding holes: one on the centre-left and one on the centre-right. The Śivāśramādhyāya covers folios  $45^r3-48^v2$ .

Manuscript M<sub>63</sub><sup>Tr</sup>

 $M_{63}^{Tr}$  is a palm-leaf manuscript preserved at The Oriental Research Institute and Manuscripts Library in Trivandrum (No. 12763). It is written in Malayalam script, in a clear hand and contains few scribal errors. There is considerable loss of text due to damaged margins. Each folio contains six lines in general. The manuscript has two binding holes: one on the centre-left and one on the centre-right. The foliation on the left-hand margin is in Malayalam letters. The colophons are marked by red ink. The manuscript is accompanied by a commentary, a separate edition of which is included below (pp. 145ff). The beginning of each verse commented upon by the commentary has been underlined in blue ink and sometimes in grey ink by a second hand. The Śivāśramādhyāya covers fols 54"5–60'5.

Manuscript G<sup>L</sup><sub>40</sub>

 $G_{40}^L$  is a manuscript preserved in the Leiden University Library. The text is written in Grantha script. Each folio contains six lines (except 157<sup>r</sup>, which has seven lines). It seems to have been originally part of a multi-text manuscript, since the foliation starts from number seven-ty-seven. The foliation is given in the middle of the left-hand margin of the recto. There are two binding holes: one in the centre-left and one in the centre-right. The manuscript has some small damage but without much loss of text.

On the leaf preceding the beginning of the text proper, the title of the text, the number of chapters, and the name of the main interlocutor is mentioned in Devanāgarī in the following way: Śivadharmaśāstra 11 a namdikeśvara After this, the folio numbers are provided in roman script, numbering 77–167 (ninety-one pages). The manuscript number is 11.40. The Śivāśramādhyāya covers folios 154<sup>r</sup>5–159<sup>v</sup>5.

Manuscript $P_{72}^T$

 $P_{72}^{T}$  is a Devanāgarī paper transcript of manuscript 75425, preserved at Institut Français de Pondichéry (IFP), T 72b.<sup>97</sup> The original is written in Grantha script and belongs to the Adyar Library, Chennai. It has 155 folios, each page containing ten verses. The transcript mentions the number of the folio (both recto and verso) of the original text. The foliation on the right-hand side corresponds to the original number of leaves, while the foliation on the upper-right hand margin gives the page number of the transcript. The Śivāśramādhyāya covers pp. 128–140. This, according to the transcript, corresponds to  $33^r$ – $36^v$ of the original manuscript.

Edition: $E^N$

Yogi Naraharinath, Śivadharma Paśupatimatam Śivadharmamahāsāstram Paśupatināthadarśanam, Kathmandu, Saṃvat 2055 (1998 Œ). The Śivāśramādhyāya chapter in this volume also contains a rather liberal Nepalese translation by the editor. The volume is both hand-written and typeset. The texts are published in the following order:

- 1. Śivadharmaśāstra
- 2. Śivopanisad
- 3. Śivadharmottara
- 4. Śivadharmasamgraha
- 5. Umāmaheśvarasamvāda
- 6. Uttarottara
- 7. Vṛṣasārasamgraha
- 8. Dharmaputrikā

The Śivāśramādhyāya covers pages 143–161.

In what follows we share some observations on individual characteristics of manuscripts regarding the question of the regional transmissions of the text and their possible relations.<sup>98</sup>

2. The Transmission in Nepal

Since the Nepalese manuscripts predate all the other consulted sources by several centuries, it is likely that they transmit an overall earlier version of the text. Within the Nepalese transmission of the present chapter, the two earliest manuscripts  $(N_{28}^{K} \text{ and } N_{82}^{K})$  each seem to go back to a different source that had already developed the character of a recension—the reason being that the two manuscripts differ in important readings on many occasions.

2.1 The Transmission in $N_{28}^{K}$

As the earliest manuscript for this chapter, this manuscript deserves special attention. Compared to the other manuscripts, it is marked by several scribal errors, such as omission of visarga, omission of anusvāra, dropping of syllables, dropping of repha, and others. There are also cases of dropping of the final t in the third person optative singular,<sup>99</sup> but these can be defended as authorial, as such conventions commonly occur in early Śaiva Tantras.<sup>100</sup> No lines appear to have been added through textual accretion. On two occasions, a portion of text is uniquely missing:

1. ŚiDhŚ 11.28b-30a

pavitram naiva vidyate | uktvaivam munidevebhyah snāto yena śivah svayam || 28 tadāprabhṛti brahmādyā munayaś ca śivārthinah | sarvaparvasu yatnena bhasmasnānam pracakrire || 29 tasmād etac chivasnānam |

2. ŚiDhŚ 11.67–68

kālāt punar ihāyātaḥ samastajnānapāragaḥ | surūpaḥ subhagaḥ śrīmān nīrujaḥ suprajaḥ sukhī || 67 śaraṇāgatam udvignam āghrātaṃ riputaskaraiḥ | mā bhair iti samāśvāsya śivaloke mahīyate || 68

These two omissions are most probably scribal. The first may have been caused by eye-skip from snāna in 28a to snāna in 30a; construing 28a and 30b as one sentence does not make good sense. The second omission is almost certainly due to eye-skip, because 66d and 68d (śivaloke mahīyate) are identical.

2.2. The Transmission in $N_{82}^{K}$ Compared with Other Sources

Read in juxtaposition with  $N_{28}^{K}$ , this manuscript is important for understanding the developmental history of the Śivadharmaśāstra in the Nepalese transmission. As mentioned above,  $N_{82}^{K}$  and  $N_{28}^{K}$  show many variations suggesting that they represent two different lines of transmission. The manuscript provides an overall grammatically correct form of the text and has very few scribal errors. It has no omissions of any of the text adopted in our edition.

Judging on the basis of the text of the present chapter,  $N_{82}^{K}$ ,  $N_{57}^{P}$  and  $E^{N}$  belong more or less together. They share the same reading in twelve distinct cases (only one of these, 67d nīrujah, has been adopted in the main text): 28d snāto devah svayam sivah; 36a gandha-lepavisuddho; 42a sarvasangavi°; 50d krtam hi sive; 53d labhen narah; 64ab °madhvasramasu°; 67d nīrujah; 71d kāruņyād datta°; 73a nedršam sva°; 75b dhyāpa°; 82c vācā yo 'vikrtah; 95d °manuttamām.

It deserves notice that  $N_{57}^p$  and  $E^N$  in particular are very close to each other, agreeing in sixteen instances in sharing a variant not adopted in the main text: 4b sambhavo bhavet; 5c trisandhyam ekakālam; 6d śeşo bhavati bhāvitaḥ; 7a samrodha°; 7b mādyādinakakādiṣu; 9d himsyāt tu himsakas tadā; 15d bhūtiko 'thavā; 33a tasmāt; 34a vidhivat toyam; 63c dattvāmbhasā tathā snānam; 70a patite; 73c °yuşyam; 86c svargasya mokṣasya; 101b prītyā caiva matena; 103b tenāptam; 115a parvavarjyam vrajet so'pi.

The above-mentioned three sources  $(N_{82}^{K}, N_{57}^{P} \text{ and } E^{N})$ , together with two South Indian manuscripts  $(G_{40}^{L} \text{ and } P_{72}^{T})$ , include the following two extra lines on the significance of ashes after 32d:<sup>101</sup>

rudrāgner yat param bījam tad bhasma parikīrtitam | dāhakam sarvaduḥkhānām tasmād bhasmeti cocyate ||

The inclusion of this etymology of the word bhasman would have been an easy addition to make in the context of the praise of ashes. The same three sources, together with one South Indian manuscript  $(G^{K})$ , omit verse 59 about guest-reception:

prāptāya śivabhaktāya pādyācamanapūrvakam | yo 'rghaṃ nivedayed bhaktyā sūryalokaṃ sa gacchati ||

It is unclear why this verse should have been omitted in these sources. Furthermore,  $N_{82}^{K}$  and  $N_{57}^{P}$ , together with  $P_{72}^{T}$ , add the following line on offering water for bathing after 62ab:

datvāmbhasā tathā snānam saubhāgyam buddhivardhanam

Finally,  $N_{8_2}^{K}$  and  $E^{N}$ , together with  $P_{7_2}^{T}$ , omit 107ab (possibly due to eye-skip):

aśvamedhāyutam pūrņam satyam ca tulitam purā

The above examples, especially the inclusion of additional lines shared by some Nepalese and South Indian sources, could indicate that the South Indian transmission of the Śivadharmaśāstra may have branched off from an earlier North Indian source.

2.3 The Transmission in Other Nepalese Sources

The manuscript in the Asiatic Society of Bengal ( $N_{77}^{K_0}$ ) is the oldest dated source for the text (1035/36 CE), which makes it by definition an important manuscript by furnishing a solid dating. This manuscript is, on the other hand, in many ways also the most problematic one used for this chapter. It contains numerous scribal errors,<sup>102</sup> including omission of visarga, omission of anusvāra, dropping of syllables, dropping of repha, dropping of ekāra, dropping of aikāra, etc. The manuscript has no additional lines for this chapter. It has one unique omission (79cd):

śivam bhavatu sarvatra prabrūyāt sarvakarmasu ||

Furthermore, it has one omission shared with  $N_{12a}^{K}$  and  $\hat{S}_{67}^{S}$  at 112 ef:

ye sthitā brahmacaryeņa te nityam samsthitāh śive ||

Another manuscript from Kathmandu  $(N_{12a}^{K})$  also does not include any additional text. In two instances it omits text shared with two other manuscripts. It omits—possibly due to eye-skip—a single line on bathing in ashes (27cd), shared with the Śāradā manuscript  $(\hat{S}_{67}^{S})$ and one South Indian manuscript  $(M_{67}^{K})$ :

bhasmasnānam niseveta mucyate sarvapātakaih ||

Furthermore,  $N_{12a}^{T}$  omits the two lines comprising verse 57. In this case, the omission is shared with two South Indian sources:  $G_{40}^{L}$  and  $M_{63}^{T}$ . The omission seems to be due to eye-skip. The verse concerns the satisfaction (tusti) a man obtains upon receiving a devotee of Siva at home:

sivabhaktaṃ gṛhe dṛṣṭvā tuṣṭiṃ vrajati yo naraḥ | varṣakoṭisahasrāṇi vased vaiśravaṇe pure ||

The Paris manuscript  $(N_{57}^{P})$  too has no additional lines, but drops one line (41cd):

upavāsāt paraņ bhaikṣam ekānnaņ gṛhiṇāṇ malam ||

<sup>102</sup> This has also been noted by Bisschop 2018b, 55, in relation to chapter six.

3. The Transmission in Kashmir

The Śāradā manuscript ( $\hat{S}_{67}^{S}$ ) preserved in the collection of the Oriental Research Library in Srinagar contains few trivial mistakes but it offers about 150 unique readings. In other words, this source has a distinct identity from all the rest.

In comparison with the other manuscripts used,  $\hat{S}_{67}^{\varsigma}$  shows most affinity with  $N_{12a}^{K}$ , sharing six unique variants: 15d bhautiko 'pi vā; 51c prayatnād api; 67d suvrataḥ sukhī; 101d sa santoṣaḥ pra°; 107a °medhāyutaṃ pūrṇaṃ; 116d etad apy āśramatrayam. In four instances it shares variants with  $N_{77}^{K_0}$ : 10b pūjakāḥ; 60a prāpya; 70a °sasta°; 56c °koți°. In four other instances,  $N_{12a}^{K}$ ,  $N_{77}^{K_0}$  and  $\hat{S}_{67}^{\varsigma}$  together have a shared reading, including one accepted in the main text: 59c yo 'rgham (accepted); 90c na ca; 116c ahiṃsaka; 117b °naghaḥ.  $\hat{S}_{67}^{\varsigma}$  also has four shared readings with  $N_{28}^{K}$ ; 65a sāntamā°; 98c °kotṣāyutaṃ sagraṃ (accepted reading); 99c nakārye saṃ°; 105a sudṛṣṭam.  $\hat{S}_{67}^{\varsigma}$  inserts the following two lines after 105b:

tad asatyam iti proktam vaiparītyena satyatā | svānubhūtam svadrstam śrutam āptān na labhyate ||

This verse is an extension on the concept of truth treated in the preceding verse.

The manuscript contains many omissions which may be due to eye-skip. That the scribe of this manuscript or its ancestor was sloppy is indicated by verses 59c–60d which are repeated after 74b. The following unique omissions occur in  $\hat{S}_{67}^{S}$ : 3b–4a; 16c–17; 23d–24a; 27cd; 32c–34b; 43c–44b; 52c–53b; 57d; 64; 108ab; 115ab.

On one occasion, at 106ab, it shares an omission with  $M_{63}^{Tr}$ :

satyam satyam punah satyam etāvat satyalakṣaṇam

4. The Transmission in the South

Compared to the Nepalese manuscripts, the South Indian ones are much later, but this does not exclude the possibility that they preserve older readings. The three palm-leaf manuscripts ( $G^{Ki}$ ,  $M_{63}^{Tr}$  and  $G_{40}^{L}$ ) and one transcript ( $P_{72}^{T}$ ) that we have used reveal that they do not go back to the same hyparchetype.<sup>103</sup> In the entire chapter there is only one instance where they have a uniquely shared variant (54a: śivāśrama°).

Two manuscripts ( $G^{Ki}$  and  $M_{63}^{Tr}$ ) have nine uniquely shared variants. 7d vācikair vā japādibhih; 14c °dravyair na°; 39d vapanāt bhavet; 61a loke; 79b °mamgalavācane; 93c pumsām abhayadānāt tu; 98c °koțiśatam sāgram; 101d sa toṣaḥ pari°; 102b sarvadā; 109b ca saṃbhramāt. Furthermore,  $G^{K_i}$  and  $G^{I}_{40}$  have five uniquely shared variants, including the speaker indication srīnandikeśvaraḥ and the colophon śivāśramācāro nāma ekādaśo 'dhyāyaḥ. The other three instances are: 64ab °madhvanaśrama°; 111d °saṃyamaṃ; 116b (kuryāt ka°).  $G^{K_i}$  and  $P^{T}_{72}$  together have eight uniquely shared variants: 10a śivārcanaparo; 19b dhārayeta yaḥ; 40d śāntamanāś ca; 50b janaiḥ; 61d bhavet; 96d narakāgniṣu; 99d śānti°; 117b samudyutktas sadā.  $M^{T_r}_{63}$  and  $G^{I}_{40}$  have three uniquely shared variants: 35a ācāmet; 59c yo 'rghyaṃ; 63b sihāsana°.  $G^{I}_{40}$  and  $P^{T}_{72}$ , finally, have five uniquely shared variants: 27c tu seveta; 31b yo vā ko vānyalakṣaṇaḥ; 37a °sahasraistu; 43d °kriyānvitaḥ; 65a sāntamā°. These commonalities indicate individual lines of transmission in the south.

In what follows we concentrate on the additions and omissions encountered in the South Indian sources.

In six instances,  $G^{Ki}$  includes additional passages. In four cases these additions are unique and in two cases they are shared with other sources. The first unique addition (after verse 4) is an extension of the description of the śivāśrama:

nairṛtyāṃ ca samiddeśaṃ vāruṇyām udakāśrayam | vāyavyāṃ dhānyadeśaṃ vai kauberyāṃ bhāṇḍagūḍhakam ||

The second addition (after verse 12) adds one more item to the duties of a śivāśramin, viz. the worship of Śiva, the fire and the teacher:

śivāgnigurupūjābhiḥ pāpair etair na lipyate | anyaiś ca pātakair ghorais tasmāt saṃpūjayet trayam ||

The third addition (after verse 18) is about wearing the rudrākṣa beads on different parts of the body:

sirasā dhārayet koṭiḥ karṇayos ca sahasrakam | satakoṭiḥ gale baddham sahasraṃ bāhumadhyataḥ || apramāṇaphalaṃ haste rudrākṣasya tu dhāraṇāt | ucchiṣṭo vāpi kaṇṭhena yukto vā sarvapātakaiḥ || haranti sarvapāpān ca rudrākṣasparsʿanena tu | rudrākṣam kaṇṭham āsʿritya sʿvāno 'pi kriyate yadi || so 'pi rudratvam āpnoti kiṃ punar mānavādayaḥ |

The fourth unique addition is an extra line after verse 43b. It states that one obtains the state of union (yoga) by offering food to yogins:

yoginām annadānena yogasthānam avāpnuyāt |

After verse 36,  $G^{Ki}$  adds seven extra lines. Among these lines, the first two are an extension of the laudation of bathing in ashes. The five lines that follow are shared with  $M_{63}^{Tr}$  and  $G_{40}^{L}$ , and concern five different types of bathing found in certain Saiva Tantric texts, namely: 1) Vāruṇa, 2) Āgneya, 3) Divya, 4) Vāyavya, and 5) Mānasa:

bhasmasnānena yat pūrvam pāpam āmaraņāntikam | janmāntarakrtam yat tad dahaty agnir ivendhanam | snānam vāruņam āgneyam divyam vāyavyamānase | pañcasnānāni viprāņām vihitāni ca suddhaye | vārunam vārinā snānam āgneyam bhasmanā bhavet |

vāruņāņi varīņa snanam agneyaņi bilasmana bilavei vīstyā sātapayā divyaņ vāyavyaņ rajasā gavām | mānasaņ dhyānamātreņa vihitam sivayoginām |

After the final verse (118),  $G^{K_i}$ ,  $G^L_{40}$  and  $P^T_{72}$  add two lines concerned with the śrutiphala of this chapter:

yaḥ paṭheta śive bhaktyā ācārādhyāyam uttamam | trisaptakulajaiḥ sārdhaṃ śivaloke mahīyate ||

The manuscript from Trivandrum  $(M_{63}^{Tr})$  does not add any unique extra text. It has one unique omission (27cd), concerning the fruit of bathing in ash:

bhasmasnānam niseveta mucyate sarvapātakaih ||

Furthermore, it replaces 45cd (sarva evāśramā jñeyāh śivabhaktāh śivāśramāh), concerning the 'discipline of Śiva,' with the following line: bhāvapūtā[ħ] *śivasyaite śivāśramasamāśritā*ħ.

The manuscript preserved at Leiden University  $(G_{40}^L)$  also shows no signs of unique textual accretion. It stands out, however, by having the largest amount of textual omission for this chapter. We assume that the omissions which are particular to  $G_{40}^L$  must have resulted inadvertently during the process of copying. The omitted lines are the following: 9cd, 19cd, 45c-55d, 76c-84b, and 105c-111b.

The Pondicherry transcript  $(P_{72}^T)$ , finally, includes two additional text passages. The first (after 24d) states that ash should be made from cowdung:

svataśśuddhakulā gāvah saṃbhūtaṃ tāsu gomayam | śivāgninā punaḥ paktaṃ pavitraṃ bhasma tat smṛtam ||

The second instance (after 66d) introduces the subject of taking special care of a sick Śiva devotee. This passage has been added presumably with the intent of facilitating the formation of the community of Śiva worshippers:

śivabhaktaṃ viśeṣeṇa rogārtaṃ yas tu pālayet | bhaiṣajyair vṛttidānena śivalokaṃ vrajed dhruvam || sarvayatnena mahatā yan tu kuryād arogiņam | sivalokakuțumbī syāt tasya puņyam anantakam ||

 $P_{72}^T$  has three unique instances of omission. The first (36cd) is a line on the teaching of pure intention. The second (59a–61b) concerns three lines on the reception of Śiva's devotees as guests. The omission of these lines may have been caused by eye-skip if we assume that the exemplar of this manuscript had mahīyate in 61b (the reading in the Southern manuscripts). The third (67cd) is a line about one's rebirth on earth after having been honoured in Śiva's world for a long time.

5. Concluding Observations

The copious number of additions and omissions, the considerable diversity in variant readings found in the multiplicity of extant sources, combined with the fact that the Śivadharmaśāstra has continued to be copied until the twentieth century,<sup>104</sup> evince that the Śivadharmaśāstra was actively used and constituted a living text for a very long period of time. As a consequence, the history of transmission of the Śivadharmaśāstra is complex and presents the editor with major challenges. The Nepalese as well as the South Indian sources consulted for this chapter indicate that there were multiple lines of transmission within them. Furthermore, the manuscript from Kashmir displays its own distinct transmission. As the Śivadharmaśāstra shows itself to be part of a living tradition, a study of the different lines of transmission of this chapter—if not the whole text—may shed more light on regional as well as intra-regional use of the Śivadharmaśāstra.

In the next section we address the policies that have guided us in editing the text.

6. Editorial Policies

The twelve sources used in our edition are presented in the apparatus in the following order:  $N_{28}^{K}$ ,  $N_{82}^{K}$ ,  $N_{12a}^{K}$ ,  $N_{77}^{P}$ ,  $N_{45}^{C}$ ,  $\mathbf{\acute{S}}_{67}^{S}$ ,  $\mathbf{G}^{Ki}$ ,  $\mathbf{M}_{63}^{Tr}$ ,  $\mathbf{G}_{40}^{L}$ ,  $\mathbf{P}_{72}^{T}$ , and  $\mathbf{E}^{N}$ .

As a matter of principle we have given more weight to the readings of the Nepalese palm-leaf manuscripts as these are the oldest sources for the text and are most likely to preserve an earlier form of the text, and in order to avoid conflation of different manuscript traditions. Among the Nepalese manuscripts,  $N_{28}^{\kappa}$  has been singled out specifically because it is our oldest surviving source. As a matter of principle we have adopted the reading of  $N_{28}^{K_8}$ , provided the reading is supported by at least one more source. There are, however, many occasions where a reading of  $N_{28}^{K_8}$  may meet the criterium but we have nevertheless decided to reject it. Such exceptions take into account larger considerations of likelihood of the originality of a particular reading. In other words, readings have not been adopted mechanically but each reading is critically assessed and considered on its own merits. An element of subjectivity is unavoidable in the critical edition of a text of the kind edited here.<sup>105</sup> In cases where we felt it to be appropriate, the choice for a particular reading is discussed in the footnotes accompanying the translation.

The constituted text is presented as the running text on each page. The apparatus is a fully positive one and divided into three registers. On pages that display all three registers, the upper register records testimonia and parallels. That is to say, this register contains references to actual testimonia as well as to other sources, which may be older or younger, that display textual parallels and are sufficiently close to our text to merit our attention. The entry first lists the verse number. Testimonia are preceded by 'cf.' if the passage is sufficiently similar to the textus criticus of the Śivāśramādhyāya, or can contribute to its elucidation. When quoted text is approximately identical with the main text the testimonium is quoted with the 'approximate-sign' ( $\approx$ ) at the end of the verse, or of the two pādas if only two pāda is identical with the root text this is indicated with the 'equals-sign' (=).<sup>106</sup>

The layer below the upper register (i.e., the second register from the top) reports omissions and additions in individual sources of one or more  $p\bar{a}da$ s in comparison to the main text of the edition. If there are more variants to note for the same verse, the additional variants are separated by a bullet (•). The same register also reports the loss of folios in individual sources.

The bottom register (i.e., the third register from the top) records the variants found in the manuscripts. Each entry begins with a chapter-and-verse number in boldface (e.g. 32). This is followed by the textual segment as adopted in the main text, capped by a lemma sign (]). Immediately thereafter, the sigla referencing the sources of this reading are displayed. At this point, a semicolon separates the preferred (and adopted) reading (to its left) from the variants (to its right). The variants to the right are again separated from each other by semicolons. To save space and to make the apparatus more readable, sigma-signs have been used to indicate where different manuscripts belonging to the same group share the same reading:  $\Sigma$  indicates that a reading is found in all sources with a maximum of two variants;  $S^{\Sigma}$  indicates that all readings of the South Indian sources are congruent.

Any siglum that is followed by superscript ac indicates the reading of a source before correction (=ante correctionem) while a siglum followed by superscript pc indicates the reading of a source after correction (=post correctionem).

When a reading is unmetrical, this is recorded after the sigla denoting the source.

When a portion of text is lacunose, this has been marked thus: ---.

When the text is omitted in one particular source, this has been noted with om. just before the siglum of that source; for example: om.  $N_{28}^{K}$ .

When we are not certain if a reading has been correctly deciphered, this has been indicated by the insertion of a question mark (?) after the reading.

Where there is a gap in a manuscript and there is a possibility of counting the number of letters lost, an underscore-mark has been printed to indicate a hypothetical letter slot. For example, if five letters are lost, this is presented in this way: _ _ _ _ .

If there are more than one lemma for the same  $p\bar{a}da$ , these lemmas are separated by bullet signs (•).

The sign  $\otimes$  (puspikā) stands for ornamental signs in manuscripts written before or after colophons. A list of all these symbols is provided at the start of the edition, on p. 65.

Corrections that we feel relatively confident about have been reported as emendations marked em.; 'bolder' corrections are marked conj. (conjecture). Of course, the difference is somewhat subjective. If an avagraha is missing in our sources, we have silently supplied it.

As a rule, the verses are divided into four  $p\bar{a}da$ s. In one case, however, we have adopted a six- $p\bar{a}da$  verse as it forms a syntactic whole (verse 112).

In the first and second layer of the apparatus proposed corrections and actual readings of the quoted texts are displayed between two arrows.

In general, variation in spelling by the different manuscript sources has been normalized. Thus we have silently supplied avagrahas, corrected homorganic nasals, geminations and degeminations, as well as trivial variations in sibilants.

7. On the Translation and Accompanying Notes

The translation follows the text as constituted in our edition. To provide the reader insight into the various changes introduced in the different lines of transmission of the text, we have also included translations of the many additional passages in the notes accompanying the translation. These also include other observations of a philological nature.

8. Symbols and Abbreviations in the Apparatus

Enclosed text has been first written but cancelled later.
A number of letters are lost in the manuscript.
Loss of text marked in the manuscript.
Text placed between cruxes is beyond repair.
A question mark indicates uncertainty about the read- ing in a manuscript.
Reading in all sources, with only one or two variants.
Reading in all Southern sources.
A bullet separates different lemmas within the same pāda .

Translation of Chapter Eleven

Introduction

Nandikeśvara spoke:

1 Śiva has declared the Laws of Śiva (sivadharma),<sup>107</sup> so that those of all classes (varņa) who adhere to Śiva's discipline (sivāśrama)<sup>108</sup> may attain virtue (dharma), material gain (artha), sensual gratification (kāma), and liberation (mukti).

On worship and the place of worship

2 A Brahmin, a Kṣatriya, a Vaiśya, a woman, or a Śūdra who observes Śiva's discipline (śivāśramin), a forest-dweller or a householder, and whoever else might observe Śiva's discipline (śivāśramin),<sup>109</sup>

<sup>107</sup> The manuscript tradition is divided. In accordance with our editorial policy outlined above, we have opted for the reading of the plural, but there is also very strong support for the singular śivadharma.

<sup>109</sup> This verse emphasizes the inclusivistic model of the śivāśrama: it is an overarching concept that integrates all people in a Śaiva-Brahmanical society. In essence, with the term śivāśramin the present chapter defines what it means to be a Śaiva, a term that is, however, not used in the text. Several variant readings in the manuscripts seem to have arisen in an effort to get rid of the repetition of the word śivāśramin. Since śivayogins (the followers of the fourth discipline) cannot own property they are probably not included among the śivāśramins here. They should also not tend the fire, a duty of the śivāśramins specified in verse 5 and again in the concluding verses.

- 3 should make, to the north of one's residence (svāśrama), a beautiful flower garden, furnished with a fire-shed [in the southeast and] a temple of Īśvara in the northeast.<sup>110</sup>
- 4 In case there is no space for it, he should make it wherever land is available. To the south of Siva<sup>111</sup> he should make a guest house for his devotees.
- 5 One should worship Isía at the three junctures of the day and [perform] fire-service, to the best of one's ability; or at the two junctures, or once [a day]. One should perform worship to Siva to the best of one's ability.
- 6 One should never, out of carelessness, eat without first worshiping Śiva—this should be known as the highest law, whether there be something beyond or not.<sup>112</sup>
- 7 One may worship devotedly in thought, if one is intoxicated, distressed, etc.; likewise when one is ill or in danger, in order to prevent the transgression of one's duty [of worship].<sup>113</sup>
- 8 The three [i.e., celibate, householder, forest-dweller] resorting to Śiva's discipline should always perform this worship, [while] a yogin may perform worship in thought, or with such flowers as grow in the forest.<sup>114</sup>

<sup>110</sup> The word agnyāgāra in the compound may be elliptical for āgneyyām agnyāgāram, which occurs as a variant for pāda c in  $G^{K_2}$ . In any case, the southeastern direction (āgneyī dik) for the fire-shed is a standard feature of the layout of a Śiva temple, and it should be understood here. An additional verse inserted at this point in  $G^{K_2}$  expands this section, spelling out the features of the other directions: 'In the southwest is the place for firewood, in the west the water tank, in the northwest the place for grain, in the north the store-room.' The idea underlying the present verse is that one makes one's domestic home into a śivāśrama by providing it with the features of a Śiva temple complex. In this sense the śivāśrama is not only the discipline (āsŕama) followed by the devotee of Śiva but it also designates the residence (āsŕama) of Śiva. For other descriptions of the layout of a Śiva temple complex, see, e.g., ŚiDhU 2.131–134 (De Simini 2013, 225–226; 252–253), ŚiUp 2.16–19, and GdP 1.46.14–17.

<sup>111</sup> The intended meaning is to the south of the Siva temple mentioned in the previous verse.

<sup>112</sup> Literally, 'whether there is a remainder or not' (seşo bhavati vā na vā). In other words, whatever other precepts there may be, they do not compare to the highest law of worshiping Śiva.

<sup>114</sup> A sivāśramin as described above is someone who makes a temple for Śiva at his own residence, which is materially possible only for the first three of the four āśramas. The yogin can perform worship mentally, or with wild flowers. Note that the text nowhere uses the term saṃnyāsin. 9 In harming flowers for the sake of Siva one does not become harmful, but if he does even a little harm for his own benefit, then he is harmful.<sup>115</sup>

The Śiva-householder

- 10 Constantly devoted to worship of Śiva (śivārā)<sup>116</sup> and the fire, and honouring His devotees, the illustrious Śiva-householder (śivagṛhāśramin) should refrain from having sex at the days of the moon's changes.<sup>117</sup>
- <sup>11</sup> With a third of his wealth, he should perform worship of Śiva, or he may do so with half of that [i.e., a sixth], for life is impermanent.<sup>118</sup>
- 14 He shall acquire wealth with lawful means, but unlawful means he should avoid. With riches acquired by unlawful means he is destined for hell.

The Śiva-celibate

15 He who is a Śiva-celibate (śivabrahmacārin)—whether permanently (naiṣthika) or temporarily (bhautika)<sup>119</sup>—should be devoted to the worship of Śiva and the fire, with his senses tamed, and tranquil.

<sup>115</sup> Cf. also LiP 1.78.14: sivārthaṃ sarvadā kāryā puṣpahiṃsā dvijottamāh, 'Harm of flowers may be done at all times for the sake of Siva, o best of twice-born!' This contrasts with the Atimārga view expressed in NiMukh 4.73cd: susīmapa-titaiḥ puṣpair devadevaṃ samarcayet, 'Let him worship Devadeva with flowers that have withered and fallen.'

<sup>116</sup> We take arcā in the sense of arcana. Cf. ŚiDhŚ 8.116d, 11.16d, etc.

<sup>117</sup> Compare MDh 4.128: amāvāsyām astamīm ca paurņamāsīm caturdasīm | bra-hmacārī bhaven nityam apy rtau snātako dvijaḥ ||; 'The new-moon day, the eighth day of a fortnight, the full-moon day, and the fourteenth day of a fortnight—on these days, a twice-born who is a bath graduate should always remain chaste, even if his wife is in her season.' (tr. Olivelle 2005).

<sup>118</sup> Cf. ŚiDhŚ 4.17 tasmāt tribhāgam vittasya jīvanāya prakalpayet | bhāgadvayam ca dharmārtham anityam jīvitam yataḥ ||; 'Therefore he should reserve a third of his wealth for sustenance, and the other two parts for religion, for life is impermanent.' Compare also ŚiP Vidyeśvarasamhitā 13.72ab: ātmavittam tridhā kuryād dharmavrddhyātmabhogataḥ, 'He should allocate his wealth threefold: for religion, for investment, and for his own enjoyment.'

The Śiva-hermit

16 Free from all social contact,<sup>120</sup> eating bulbs, roots and fruits, one is known as a Śiva-hermit (śivavaikhānasa); he should be devoted to the worship of Śiva and the fire.

The Śiva-ascetic

17 Withdrawn from all social contact, ever inclined to meditate on Śiva, one is known as the foremost of Śiva-votaries (śivavratin),<sup>121</sup> lying in ash, with his senses conquered.

The mark of the Śivāśramins

18 He should have the bracelet of rudrākṣa-beads [tied] around the hand, and the single matted mass of hair atop the head;<sup>122</sup> [this] is the mark (liṅga) of those who follow Śiva's discipline (śivāśrama), together with the triple line made with ash.<sup>123</sup>

<sup>120</sup> We take sanga in the sense of 'social contact' here, but 'attachment' is also possible. The parallel in the Bhavisyapurāṇa has gandha here, but in the next verse, where the same word reoccurs, it has been replaced by saṃgama.

<sup>121</sup> Or alternatively: 'the foremost follower of the observance of Śiva.' For the śivavrata, see Goodall 2015, 16–18.

<sup>123</sup> This is one of the earliest attestations of this set of three marks of the Śaiva ascetic. Among various available sources, see e.g. ŚiP Vidyeśvarasamhitā 25.49, ye tripundradharā loke jaṭādhāriṇa eva ye | ye rudrākṣadharās te vai yamalokaṃ prayānti na ||; 'Those who wear the triple line made with ash, those who wear matted hair, those who wear rudrākṣa-beads, they do not go to the world of Yama.' See also TAK III, s.v. tripuṇḍra(ka), and TAK IV (forthc.), s.v. rudrākṣa, where it is observed: 'The association of the rudrākṣa with Śiva and his followers seems not to be attested to in the epics or in the works of Kālidāsa, but we find it in the seventh-century works of Bāṇa, the rosary of rudrākṣa beads being, for instance, one of the attributes mentioned in the description of the Bhairavācārya in the Harṣacarita, who holds a rosary (HC 1, p. 156), and who also has rudrākṣa-beads tied to his topknot (p. 155).' For the Śivadharma's treatment of the rudrākṣa, or rudrākṣamālā, which is to be worn on the head, tied around the hand, or on the sacred thread, see ŚiDhŚ 12.85–91 (edition De Simini 2013, 294–295).

After the present verse,  $G^{ki}$  adds four more verses: 'He [will get] a crore [of fruit] if he should wear it on his head, a thousandfold [fruit] on his ears, a hundred crores [of fruit] if he has tied it to the neck, and a thousandfold [fruit] on the middle of his arms, but one obtains immeasurable fruit because of wearing the rudrākṣa around one's hand. Whether there is a remainder of food (ucchiṣta) in one's throat, or one is saddled with all sorts of sins—they remove all sins by

- 19 One who should wear rudrākṣa-beads [tied] around the hand, on the head, or on his sacred thread, becomes invincible to all creatures and will reach the world of Rudra.
- 20 Rudra's devotees<sup>124</sup> should always wear Rudra's single mass of matted hair on the head, which destroys all sins and grants union with Rudra.
- 21 He who makes the triple line with white ash at the three junctures of the day will be released from all sins and be honoured in the world of Śiva.<sup>125</sup>

Bathing in ash

22 That which is the supreme potency of the fire of Rudra (rudrāgni) is praised as ash, destroying all taints, cleansing away all sins.<sup>126</sup>

the touch of the rudrākṣa. If even a dog wearing a rudrākṣa on the neck attains the Rudra-state, how much more so humans and other [beings]?'

<sup>124</sup> It is not clear to what extent this refers to all Rudra's devotees or only to the ascetics. The text appears to allow for typical ascetic practices and ideals to be followed by other śivāśramins as well. Note that the commentary on the Śivadharmaśāstra indeed takes the three characteristics mentioned in verse 18 (the rudrākṣa-beads, the matted hair, and the triple line of ash) to be shared by all śivāśramins: sādhāraṇān dharmān āha 'In verse 18, he states the general rules.' Cf. also Mirnig 2019, 486: 'While the authors may in fact have originally envisaged the ascetic practitioners when speaking of these characteristics, they —at least theoretically—extended these practices to the householder devotee, who now is also recommended to carry rudrākṣa-beads or smear himself with ashes. Thus, aspects that are considered core elements of the antinomian practices on the Pāśupata path also form part of the practices of lay householders in the context of the SDh.'

<sup>125</sup> This verse has a parallel in ŚiP Vidyeśvarasamhitā 24.20. The section on ashes that starts here is quoted in the Kriyāsāra of the Vīraśaiva author Nīla-kanṭha Śivācārya (ca. 1400–1450; see Fisher 2017, 331).

<sup>126</sup> 22ab = Bṛhajjābāla-Upaniṣad 5.17ab = ŚiP 1.33.91ab. Cf. also LiP 2.18.52 = SauP 54.72, which makes explicit the procedure of gathering the ashes from the fire of Rudra: upasamhṛtya rudrāgnim gṛhītvā bhasma yatnatah | agnir ityādinā dhīmān vimṛjyāngāni samspṛsét ||; 'Having extinguished the fire of Rudra and gathered the ash with effort, the wise one, rubbing his limbs, should touch [them] with the words 'Agni [is ash]' etc.' In the subsequent verses, this practice is identified as the Pāśupata vrata taught to different groups: Brahmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, Yatis, Vānaprasthas, Gṛhasthas, and Brahmacārins. LiP 2.18.57cd = SauP 54.77ab concludes: vīryam agner yato bhasma vīryavān bhasmasamyutah; 'Since ash is the potency of Agni, one who is joined with ash becomes vigorous.' This passage in the Lingapurāna is closely related in context and indicates that the use of ash was prescribed for others than yogins as well. The commentary states that the ashes are consecrated with the Śiva-mantra (śivamantrasamskṛta), i.e., om namaḥ śivāya.

- 23 A yogin should daily (nityam) observe the bath of the whole body, from the soles of the feet to the top of the head,<sup>127</sup> at the three junctures of the day; he will quickly attain union.
- 24 He who daily observes Agni's bath with his senses in check will rescue his lineage to the twenty-first generation [and] reach the highest state.<sup>128</sup>
- 25 The ash-bath has countlessly more virtues than the water-bath; therefore, he should give up Varuņa's bath and practice Agni's bath.<sup>129</sup>
- 26 Whatever merit there is in all holy places, whatever fruit there is in all sacrifices, one gets that whole fruit from bathing in ash, without a doubt.
- 27 He who is burdened by a major sin, or by minor sins,<sup>130</sup> should have recourse to the ash-bath; [thus] he is freed from all sins.<sup>131</sup>

<sup>127</sup> Cf. ŚiUp 5.20: grhasthas tryāyusomkāraih snānam kuryāt tripundrakaih | yatih sārvāngikam snānam āpādatalamastakāt ||; 'A householder should perform the [ash-] bath by applying the triple lines while reciting the tryāyusa mantra and the syllable om. An ascetic [should perform] a bath of the whole body from the soles of the feet to the top of the head.' On the procedure of applying the tripundra with the tryāyusa mantra, see Kane II, p. 674. The verse from the Śivopanisad, and the ones cited in the previous note, introduce a Vedic element that is lacking in the present text.

<sup>128</sup> This verse is quoted by Kaundinya in his commentary on  $P\bar{a}$ supatasūtra 1.9, in the section on ahimsā, with a variant reading uddhṛtya instead of uttārya. It is uncertain whether the Śivadharmasāstra is the original source for this quotation. See Bisschop & Griffiths 2003, 336, n. 109, for references to the āgneya bath in comparison to other kinds of baths. After this  $P_{72}^T$  adds: 'Cows are of pure lineage by themselves. Cow-dung is produced by them. Once it is cooked by the Śiva fire it is held to be pure ash.' This looks like an attempt to domesticate the tradition and align it with a more orthodox Brahmanical perspective.

<sup>129</sup> The commentary states that this only means that one should give up the thought that the water-bath is enough. One should not, however, give up the water-bath entirely, for it is needed for the removal of perfumes and unguents, as specified in verse 35: vāruņam utsrjya śuddhena vāruņam eva paryāptam iti buddhim utsrjyety arthah | na tu vāruņam utsrjya gandhalepaviśuddhyartham nityam adbhir upa-spršed iti | vāruņasya snānasya vidhāsyamānatvāt |; "Having given up Varuṇa's" means having given up the thought (buddhi) that the bath alone is sufficient for purification. But giving up Varuṇa's [bath] is not [what is meant], since Varuṇa's bath will be prescribed in verse 35cd: "for the purification in case of perfumes and unguents, let him wash himself with water."

 $^{130}$  Most manuscripts refer to being burdened by all sins (sarvapātakaih), but we follow the reading of N<sup>K</sup><sub>28</sub> (with support from some other manuscripts).

<sup>131</sup> For ash's power to release from the worst of sins, see, e.g., PBh ad PS 1.9: madyam pītvā gurudarāms ca gatvā, steyam kŗtvā brahmahatyām ca kŗtvā

The ash-doctrine

- 28 There is no bath more purifying than the ash-bath, in which Siva himself bathed, having taught it to the sages and gods.<sup>132</sup>
- 29 Thenceforward Brahmā and the other [gods], and the sages, seeking Śiva,<sup>133</sup> practiced the ash-bath diligently at all the days of the moon's changes (parvan).
- 30 Therefore, the one who observes the fiery Śiva-bath is a Rudra in this very body, without a doubt.<sup>134</sup>
- 31 One who is depraved or who is virtuous, or one who has no character; through adherence to the ash-doctrine he will be honoured like a prince.<sup>135</sup>

bhasmoddhvasto bhasmarāsau sayāno, rudradhyāyī mucyate pātakebhyaḥ |, 'Even if he has drunk wine, has slept with his teacher's wives, has stolen, and killed a Brahmin, the man who covers himself in ash, lies down on a pile of ash, and meditates upon Rudra is released from [these] sins.' See also Hara 2003, 260ff.

<sup>132</sup> Or alternatively: "There is no bath more purifying than the ash-bath," having taught the sages and gods thus (evam), Śiva himself bathed in it (yena).' For snāto yena śivah svayam, cf. AVPariś 40.4.2cd = 40.4.5ef tena snānena snāmy aham yena snāto maheśvaraħ, 'In that bath do I bathe, in which Maheśvara is bathed.'

<sup>133</sup> The word siva has a double meaning here, referring both to the god Śiva and to the quality of goodness. See SP IIB, 45–46, for episodes in the Skandapurā, i in which Śiva teaches the ash-bath to the gods.

<sup>134</sup> The notion of the existence of Rudras on earth is introduced in the opening chapter of the text and forms a core element of the Śivadharma's teachings, ye 'rcayanti sadā rudram na te prakrtimānuşāh | rudralokāt paribhraṣtās te rudrā nātra samśayah ||; 'Those who always worship Rudra are no ordinary men. They are Rudras who have come down from Rudraloka. There is no doubt about this.' (ŚiDhŚ 1.16). See Bisschop 2018b, 7–8, and Mirnig 2019.

<sup>135</sup> The intended meaning of bhūtisāsanasaṃyogāt may be that Śiva resides in the ash-bath that he himself has taught. Note the significant switch in vocabulary from bhasman to bhūti, carrying with it the connotation of 'riches' and thus very apposite for the simile. For the identification of bhūti with various gods, see AVParis 40.5.1: bhūtis tu pingalo babhrur bhūtir viṣṇuḥ sanātanaḥ | bhūtir brahmā mahendraś ca bhūtir devāḥ saha rṣibhiḥ ||; 'Ash is Pingala, Babhru, ash is Viṣṇu, Sanātana, ash is Brahmā, Mahendra, ash are the gods together with the sages.' (Bisschop & Griffiths 2003, 336, with accompanying notes). The compound bhūtisāsanasaṃyuktaḥ appears in ŚiP Vidyeśvarasaṃhitā 24.24b and 24.26b, no doubt under the influence of the Śivadharma's usage of the term. The commentary on our text discusses two interpretations of bhūtisāsanas: 1) the injunction of ashes, and 2) the injunction of the rudrākṣa-beads. The commentator advances the position that it refers to both: bhūtisāsanayuktaḥ bhūtir eva sāsanam iti kecid vadanti | anye tu sāsanaśabdena rudrākṣam āhuḥ | ubhayor api sāsanatvaṃ śivājñāsiddhatvād iti mantavyam ]; 'Adhering to the ash-precept: some say that ash alone is

- 32 When honour is given to a worthy recipient that amounts to honour of the doctrine;<sup>136</sup> therefore, one should honour the doctrine unhesitatingly, in accordance with Siva's command.<sup>137</sup>
- 33 By honouring Śiva's command, Śiva is worshiped directly; therefore, one should honour Śiva's ordinance without hesitation.
- 34 For one who upholds Iśvara's ash-doctrine, even as a guise,<sup>138</sup> will reach a state which one does not obtain even through hundreds of sacrifices.

On purity

35 Let him sip water according to the rule, rendered stainless (nirlepa) by Śiva's ash; for the purification in case of perfumes and unguents, let him wash himself with water.<sup>139</sup>

the precept. Others refer to the rudrākṣa-beads with the word sāsana. One should consider that the precept entails both, in fact, since that is established by Śiva's command.'

<sup>136</sup> Some manuscripts have tasya ('His' ordinance) instead of tat syāt. The proper recipient is the topic of Śivadharmottara chapter four (satpātrapradānādhyāya), which identifies the śivayogin as the best recipient, since he represents Śiva. ŚiDhŚ 12.55 identifies three categories of śivapātra: śivayogī śivajñānī śivadharmarataś ca yah | ity etat trividham jñeyam śivapātrasya lakṣaṇam ||; 'The Śiva-yogin, the Śiva-knower, and the one who delights in the Śivadharma. This should be known as the threefold definition of the Śiva-recipient.' See also De Simini 2016a, 59–61.

<sup>137</sup> The underlying logic of this and the following verses is that by following Śiva's doctrine of bathing in ash Śiva himself is worshiped (33b). The different steps are as follows:  $bh\bar{u}tis\bar{a}sanasanyoga$  (31c)  $\rightarrow gunavatp\bar{a}trap\bar{u}j\bar{a}$  (32a)  $\rightarrow s\bar{a}sanap\bar{u}j\bar{a}$ (32b)  $\rightarrow sivap\bar{u}j\bar{a}$  (33b). The idea expressed in 32cd and 33cd is that by 'honouring' Śiva's command (i.e., by bathing in ashes) the ascetic who follows Śiva's command receives worship and as a consequence Śiva himself is worshiped. The reason for the ascetic to engage in this practice then is to function as a vehicle for the worship of Śiva. After this, several manuscripts add: 'That which is the sublime seed of Rudra's fire is declared to be ash. It burns all sorrows. That is why it is called ash.'

<sup>138</sup> Could this refer to the false ascetic? Even though his motives may be wrong, still, by following Śiva's command and bathing in ashes, the honour he receives is actually worship of Śiva, and so he gains the merit from that worship.

<sup>139</sup> Note the commentary's remark that sipping should be done according to one's own domestic tradition: sivabhasmanā nirllepaḥ apāpo bhūtvā toyavidhinā svagrhyoktācamanaprakāreņācāmed ity arthaḥ|; "Being stainless," i.e., having become sinless, "by Śiva's ash," one should sip [water] "in accordance with the water-rule," i.e., in the manner of sipping prescribed by one's own domestic ritual tradition.'

After this  $G^{Ki}$  adds seven verses ( $G_{40}^{L}$  only the last five): 'Whatever evil one has committed in the past, up to one's death, or in another birth, that one burns away

- 36 One of bad disposition, even if he is free from perfumes and unguents,<sup>140</sup> is not purified; one becomes purified by the purification of one's disposition (bhāva); then one becomes one of pure disposition.
- 37 Someone with a bad disposition is not purified by a thousand pots of water, a hundred heaps of earth, even in a thousand years.<sup>141</sup>
- 38 One should practice cleanliness with a purified disposition; one should drink water that has been purified by [straining through] a cloth; one should set down one's foot purified by sight; one should speak words purified by truth.<sup>142</sup>

Hairdress and shaving

- 39 One should wear the hair-tuft in a mass, or one should shave every fortnight; whatever merit there is in the rite of initiation<sup>143</sup> that same merit one obtains by shaving [every fortnight].
- 40 Either with matted hair, full tonsure, or a topknot—eating only almsfood, devoid of desires, observing silence, compassionate to all beings, an ascetic should go with a quieted mind.
- 41 He should seek alms like a bee [i.e., from many houses]; he should avoid food from just one [house]; almsfood is better than fasting; single food is the stain of householders.<sup>144</sup> with the ash-bath, just as fire burns fuel. Varuṇa's bath, Agni's bath, the Divine bath, Vāyu's bath and the Mental bath, [these] are the five types of bath prescribed for Brahmins for purification. Varuṇa's bath is [done] with water, Agni's is with ash, the Divine with rain accompanied by the sun, Vāyu's with the dust of cows; the Mental bath with meditation is prescribed for the sivayogins.' The Divine (divya) bath is also known as Aindra or Māhendra (Bisschop & Griffiths 2003, 336, fn. 109).

<sup>140</sup> I.e., even if he is nirlepa as defined in 35.

<sup>142</sup> This verse is modeled after MDh 6.45 (with many parallels, including Kaundinya ad Pāśupatasūtra 1.9), but has been rewritten in such a way that it introduces the notion of bhāvapūta. This has a Pāśupata background; see the section on bhāvaśauca in Kaundinya's commentary ad Pāśupatasūtra 1.9 and Hara 2002.

<sup>43</sup> The underlying idea must be connected to the shaving of the head that forms an intrinsic part of the  $d\bar{\imath}ks\bar{a}$  ceremony. Some manuscripts have  $yaj\bar{n}\bar{a}n\bar{a}m$ —or a related reading—instead of  $d\bar{\imath}ks\bar{a}y\bar{a}m$ , but this looks secondary.

<sup>144</sup> The meaning of the final line is that the yogin would incur the taint of home-dwellers by relying on a single household for sustenance.

The Śūdra's yoga

- 42 Free from all social contact, devoted to Śiva, even a Śūdra, if he gets shaven, may become a servant of a great yogin here.<sup>145</sup>
- 43 He should always reside in a temple, together with his attendants, following the Śivadharma,<sup>146</sup> occupied with tending the flower-garden, dedicated to the rites of the flower-garden.
- 44 Engaged in the three bathings and worship, covered by a loincloth at all times, he attains the state of union by means of the yoga of devotion to yogins.

Śiva's discipline

45 Those who are focused on meditation on Śiva, peaceful, and dedicated to the Śivadharma—[practitioners of] all the disciplines (āśrama),<sup>147</sup> when devoted to Śiva—should be considered practitioners of Śiva's discipline (śivāśrama).

The great eightfold observance

- 46 The great eightfold observance,<sup>148</sup> spoken by the Lord, the best of all observances, should be practised by those aiming for Śiva. The law is accomplished in it.
- 47 Devotion to Śiva, constant forbearance, non-harm, calmness at all times, contentedness, truthfulness, not stealing, and chastity as the eighth.

Devotion to Śiva

48 Devotion to Siva should always be carried out in act, thought, and word, by performing worship however one can, and likewise [devotion] to sivayogins.

<sup>145</sup> It is worth noting that although the text reaches out to a broader audience, the servant nature of the Śūdra remains in place.

<sup>148</sup> Mahā- either governs the whole compound or should be taken with -vrata alone. Is this an attempt to open up the meaning of mahāvrata to all Śiva-devotees? The eight parts involve some of the traditional *yama*s and *niyama*s, headed by Śiva-devotion. The list may have been influenced by the list of eight types of conduct of the sistas, found in several Purāṇas, for example GdP 1.213.5: satyaṃ dānam dayālobho vidyejyā pūjanaṃ damaḥ | aṣṭau tāni pavitrāṇi siṣtācārasya lakṣaṇam ||. Variants of this verse, but with differences in the individual items listed, occur in BdP 1.32.41cd–42ab, VāP 59.37, and MtP 145.38. Several of the definitions in the following section have a parallel in these Purāṇas.

- 49 And one should protect Siva's devotees, no differently from one's own body, from danger, poverty, and disease, and please them.<sup>149</sup>
- 50 What can men actually do for Śiva who is already complete? Whatever is done for Śiva's devotees is done for Śiva.
- 51 One should go the place where there are people (janaḥ) devoted to Maheśvara, even if far away. One must strive to see them, for there Hara is present.<sup>150</sup>
- 52 And if one obeys correctly the command of a devotee of Maheśvara, who delights in the worship of Śiva, one obtains the fruit of a horse sacrifice.
- 53 If one performs worship [of Śiva's devotee]<sup>151</sup> correctly, listening fondly to stories of Śiva every day and being intent on Śiva every day, one will become a leader of [Śiva's] hosts.

Devotion to Śiva's devotees

- 54 One should offer worship devotedly to the devotees of Śiva who have come to the śivāśrama<sup>152</sup> with a guest's welcome, a seat, a foot-bath, guest water, and food such as honey and curd (madhuparka).<sup>153</sup>
- 55 One who greets [a Śaiva guest] with the words 'welcome!' and 'homage!' will be honoured in Agni's world for ten thousand years.<sup>154</sup>

<sup>149</sup> Although not explicitly mentioned, the unstated subject of the verses in this section seems to be the king. He is responsible for looking after the wellbeing of Śiva's devotees in his kingdom.

<sup>150</sup> The verse has been reworked in Kulārņavatantra 9.95 (Īśvara speaking): sudūram api gantavyam yatra māheśvaro janah | drastavyam ca prayatnena tatra sannihito hy aham ||.

<sup>151</sup> We follow the interpretation of the commentary and take sivabhakta to be the object of arcayitvā.

<sup>152</sup> Following the gloss of the commentary, we take śivāśrama to refer to the abode of Śiva as defined in verses 3–5. This abode of Śiva is a place of residence of Śiva's followers (Māheśvaras): śivāśramaṃ māheśvaravāsadeśam, 'the śivāśrama, which is the dwelling-place of devotees of Maheśvara.' An alternative interpretation 'who have resorted to Śiva's discipline' is also possible.

<sup>153</sup> This list announces the different actions relating to the reception of guests, treated in detail in the following verses. The actions are dealt with according to the order of the guest reception; each action is connected to one deity, whose world one reaches.

<sup>154</sup> The notion of the guest as the equivalent of Agni is an old one. See, e.g., Katha Up 1.7 vaiśvānaraḥ praviśaty atithir brāhmaņo grhān | tasyaitāṃ śāntim kurvanti hara vaivasvatodakam ||; 'A Brahmin guest enters a house as the fire in

- 56 One who spontaneously gives a seat to a devotee of Siva who has arrived will dwell in the city of [Indra] the city-smasher for twenty thousand years.
- 57 One who derives satisfaction from seeing a devotee of Siva in his home will dwell in Kubera's city for thousands of crores of years.
- 58 If one devotedly washes the feet of a weary devotee of Śiva,<sup>155</sup> anointing his feet with ghee, one will be honoured in Viṣṇu's world.
- 59 One who with devotion offers guest water, preceded by water for the feet and for sipping, to a devotee of Śiva who has arrived will go to Sūrya's world.
- 60 If one correctly feeds a visiting Brahmin devotee of Śiva<sup>156</sup> with honey and curd (madhuparka) and so forth in proper sequence, one will be honoured in Śiva's world.

Charity for all 157

- 61 Massaging the body of a weary person, one attains Soma's world. By providing shelter, he gets a golden house in heaven.
- 62 If one gives very cool water, one will obtain all one's desires. By providing a lamp, one obtains the extrasensory power [that is] the eye of knowledge.<sup>158</sup> all men. Bring water, O Vaivasvata, that is how they appease him.' (tr. Olivelle 1998).

<sup>155</sup> We have corrected sāntāya to srāntāya. Guests receiving welcoming offerings are often described as being 'wearied' from the road. Cf. e.g. ViDh 1.2: tān āgatān sa rājarṣiḥ pādyārghyādibhir arcitān | sukhopaviṣṭān viśrāntān kṛtasampraśnasatkathān ||. The pāda sāntāya sivabhaktāya occurs in Niśvāsamūla 8.15a (Goodall et al. 2015), but in an unrelated context (referring to the one to whom the sīvašāsana should be given).

<sup>156</sup> This is the only time that the guest is identified as a Brahmin. This is no doubt because food offering is intrinsically related to Brahmins. Cf. SiDhS 8.34cd: sivabhaktam dvijam samyag bhojayitvā vidhānataḥ; 10.37cd: bhojayīta dvijān aṣṭau sivabhaktān sadakṣiņān; and 12.57ab: sivam dvijaśreṣṭham yaḥ śrāddhādiṣu bhojayet.

<sup>157</sup> From here the Śiva-devotee is no longer explicitly the subject, although he is presumably still implied.

<sup>158</sup> For a similar idea connecting the gift of a lamp to the attainment of the eye of knowledge, cf. TVK 2.173ab (attributed to the 'Brahmapurāṇa'): tatra dīpapradānena jñānacakṣur atīndriyam; and TVK 2.569ab: tatra dīpapradānena jñānacakṣur bhaven naraḥ.

- 63 By providing a soft bed, one becomes a lord of the lion throne [i.e., a king].<sup>159</sup> By giving water for the sake of bathing and cleansing, one will attain Varuṇa's world.
- 64 By fanning with a palm-leaf a man exhausted from the road<sup>160</sup> whose body is covered in beads of sweat, one will be honoured in Vāyu's world.
- 65 By doing whatever one can to care for someone suffering from hunger and thirst, who is exhausted, afflicted, dirty and sick, one is freed from all sins.
- 66 By diligently making the sick well (siva) with medicines, etc., one will be honoured in Siva's world for more than ten *koți*s of yugas.<sup>161</sup>
- 67 Coming back eventually here [to this world], he reaches the farthest shore of all knowledge, will be beautiful, fortunate, resplendent, healthy,<sup>162</sup> with many offspring, and happy.
- 68 If one reassures someone who comes for protection, frightened, hounded by enemies and robbers, by saying 'Fear not!' one will be honoured in Śiva's world.
- 69 If one does everything one can to rescue someone drowning in a sea of destitution, who is desperate and senseless, one will obtain all one's desires.
- 70 One should give food, to the best of one's ability, out of compassion for all beings, to those fallen from caste (patita), those who are cursed (aśasta), those of mixed caste (saṃkīrṇa), dogs, Caṇḍālas and other [low beings], and birds.<sup>163</sup>

<sup>159</sup> After this, three of our manuscripts add: 'And by giving a bath with water, [one will obtain] good fortune and increase of one's intellect.'

<sup>160</sup> We have kept the reading adhvāna- at the beginning of the compound adhvān naśramakarşitam. Although this form (an a-stem formation of adhvan) is not known from the dictionaries or any other source, the reading receives strong support from various manuscripts; the variant readings appear to be different attempts at correcting it.

<sup>161</sup> After this,  $P_{72}^{T}$  has two more verses: 'One who takes care in particular of a sick person who is a Siva devotee, by granting support with medicines, he goes to Siva's world for certain. He who makes him healthy with utmost effort, he will become a member of Siva's world; his merit is endless.'

 $^{_{162}}$  The reading  $n\bar{\imath}rujah$  is probably original. The -a stem may have led to the variant readings.

<sup>163</sup> The commentary explains that by giving food to the beings mentioned in the present verse Śiva is pleased because in his compassion he also includes them: sivo hi svakāruņyād akrtārthān patitādīn atisayena parigrhņātīti tesām pūjayāpi sivah prīņāty eva; 'For since Śiva, because of his own compassion, utterly

- 71 Even the tiniest gift made out of compassion becomes imperishable. Therefore, what is given out of compassion for all beings is the best [gift].
- 72 By giving, in the absence [of anything else], grass, earth, water, leaves, fuel, or fruits to a guest, [people] go to heaven, free from debts,<sup>164</sup> or by means of kindness.

Kind speech

- 73 There is no stairway to heaven in this world like a kind word. Those who always have sweet speech enjoy happiness here and in the hereafter.
- 74 If one speaks speech flowing with nectar, cool as contact with sandalwood, not opposed to the law, one will attain imperishable happiness.
- 75 Enough of giving, o best of Brahmins!<sup>165</sup> Enough of sacrifice or recitation! This is your stairway to heaven: untainted, kind speech.
- 76 Getting up, going forward [to greet], accompanying [upon departure], [using] kind speech, looking [at the guest] before addressing [him]:<sup>166</sup> each of these is a cause of [reaching] heaven.
- 77 One should ask the guest, with devotion: 'Have you arrived safely (sivena)?'<sup>167</sup> And at his departure one should say: 'May your paths be favorable (siva)!'

embraces those who have fallen from caste and the like—people who are failures (akṛtārthān)—he takes pleasure in their worship too.' Cf. also ViP 3.11.57: śvacaņdālavihamgānām bhuvi dadyāt tato naraḥ | ye cānye patitāḥ kecid apātrā bhuvi mānavāḥ ||; 'A man should provide [food] on the ground for dogs, Caṇḍālas, birds, and other unworthy men on earth who have fallen from caste.'

<sup>164</sup> Difficulties with the spelling of nirmāh as well as the absence of a proper subject may have led to the variant readings, including nāryo 'pi according to which 'also women' can reach heaven this way. The commentary follows this reading and states that women are not qualified to perform the dharma because of their lack of independence: asvātantryena dharme 'nadhikrtā api, 'even though they are not qualified to perform dharma on account of their lack of autonomy.'

<sup>165</sup> The vocative viprendra is noteworthy. Sanatkumāra is never addressed like this in the text; in fact vocatives referring to the dialogue between Nandikeśvara and Sanatkumāra are not used anywhere else in the text. This may be an indication that some of the verses in this section originally stem from another source.

<sup>167</sup> The variant cāyāte svāgatam vadet, 'and when he has arrived he should welcome him,' was probably intended to remove the problematic sandhi sivena 'si, which may be due to versification of colloquial Sanskrit. Note the parallel between pādas ab and cd (arriving/departure).

- 78 'May everything for you always be favorable (siva)!' This benediction, accomplishing all aims, should always be pronounced in all affairs.
- 79 In all actions of respectful salutations, along with expressions of benediction and blessing, he should say: 'May it be auspicious (siva) in every respect!'<sup>168</sup>

Devotion to Śiva: conclusion<sup>169</sup>

- 80 The śivāśramin who performs auspicious conduct (śivācāra) such as this is freed from all sins and will be honoured in Śiva's World.
- 81 That devotion towards devotees of Śiva which is performed by men devoted to him [Śiva], that devotion performed by [those] devotees always goes to Śiva [himself].

Forbearance

- 82 If one, though insulted or beaten, will not insult and will not strike [back], remaining composed, unchanged in his speech, etc.—this is the most flawless forbearance.<sup>170</sup>
- 83 He who has crossed to the far shore of knowledge is the  $t\bar{i}rtha$  of all  $t\bar{i}rtha$ s; those who bathe in the water of forbearance are a  $t\bar{i}rtha$  even higher than the  $t\bar{i}rtha$  of knowledge.<sup>171</sup>
- 84 Since good acts such as the yoga of knowledge (jñānayoga), austerity, mantra-repetition, sacrifice, and giving are done in vain by one who is angry, therefore one should avoid anger.

<sup>168</sup> The commentary explains that the phrase 'sivam bhavatu' should also be spoken in response to the benedictions and blessings of others: evamādisu karmasu parai krtesu sivam bhavatu yusmākam iti brūyāt | pratibrūyād ity arthah; 'When such acts are performed by others, he should say: "May it be auspicious (siva) for you all!" In other words, he should say that in response.'

 $^{170}$  There are several parallels for this definition. Cf., e.g., BdP 1.32.49  $\approx$  VāP 59.44  $\approx$  MtP 145.45.

<sup>171</sup> Cf. also ŠiUp 5.37: prthivyām yāni tīrthāni sarāmsy āyatanāni ca | teşu snātasya yat puŋyam tat puŋyam kṣāntivārinā ||; 'The merit which there is for one who has bathed in [all] the *tīrtha*s, ponds and sacred places on earth, that merit [one obtains by bathing] with the water of forbearance.'

- 85 Unkind speech burns up the tender points, bones, breath, and heart, therefore no unkind [words] should be spoken, especially not by Śiva devotees.<sup>172</sup>
- 86 Forbearance is giving, austerity, truth; forbearance is nonharm; forbearance is scriptural learning; forbearance is heaven and liberation both; by forbearance the world is borne.
- 87 He is a hero, pure and wise, he is an ascetic with his senses tamed, by whom the enemy 'anger' is quickly defeated with the sword of forbearance.
- 88 By means of the untainted waters of forbearance, whose coolness refreshes the people,<sup>173</sup> one obtains happiness here, and a good (siva) state in the hereafter.

Non-harm

- 89 If one lives constantly in every way for the benefit and the good (siva) of all beings as for oneself—this is proclaimed 'non-harm.'<sup>174</sup>
- 90 Whatever the fruit of all scriptures, the Vedas, and sacrifices, the merit of those who do not harm living beings is greater than that.
- 91 Even if one gave the whole threefold world filled with jewels and observed all ascetic practices that would not equal 'non-harm.'
- 92 Non-harm alone is taught as the supreme law for those who are capable of it; for those who are incapable this law gives priority to giving, sacrifices, and so on.<sup>175</sup>

<sup>172</sup> Aside from causing pain to the addressee, the unkind word burns up the one who speaks it. See MBh 1.82.7 = 5.36.5 = 12.288.16: ākruśyamāno nākrośen manyur eva titikṣataḥ | ākroṣṭāraṃ nirdahati sukṛtaṃ cāsya vindati ||; 'If one is provoked one should not get angry. It burns up the one who gets angry and the one who endures the anger acquires his good merit.'

<sup>174</sup> Non-harm (ahimsā) is given an active meaning here, as becomes clear also from verse 93. Compare BdP 155.44, defining 'compassion': ātmavat sarvabhūteṣu yo hitāya śubhāya ca | vartate satatam hṛṣṭaḥ kriyā śreṣṭhā dayā smṛtā ||; 'If one constantly lives delighted for the benefit and well-being of all beings as for oneself—the supreme course of action is regarded as "compassion."' Variants of this verse are found in BdP 1.32.48, LiP 1.8.12 and LiP 1.10.19cd–20ab. None of them, however, has sivāya.

<sup>175</sup> The first line refers specifically to sivayogins, who are able to live completely according to the principle of ahimsā. The second line makes the yogic ideal expressed in the first line accessible to the sivagrhāśramins, by including

- 93 We can see nothing higher than this in the entire tradition  $(\bar{a}gama)$ , since the gift of safety<sup>176</sup> is the highest, wonderful gift.
- 94 If one goes about with a quiet mind, providing safety to all beings, he will face no danger from any beings in this world.
- 95 They<sup>177</sup> who do not harm beings, whether stationary or moving, enjoy sublime peace, being devoid of the pain [caused by the suffering] of [other] beings.
- 96 The sinful, the very cruel, the lowest of men delight in sins; they will be cooked in hells until the dissolution of all beings.
- 97 The king who prevents the injury of living beings in his country, that king will revel in wealth for a long time, together with his country.
- 98 And at death, he will be honoured with great pleasures in Siva's world together with his whole family for more than ten billion ages.

Calmness

- 99 He who, keeping all his senses in check, does not get involved in wrongdoing,<sup>178</sup> whether for his own sake or for the sake of others—they call him a 'peaceful one.'
- 100 He who has calmed all his sense faculties, who is always stainless as a moonbeam, he attains the highest place, being at peace, with a placid mind.

acts that they can undertake to make up for any potential lack in ahimsā, without devaluating the ideal. This principle of opening up the yogic ideals to all sivā-siramins can be seen at work throughout the text. The commentary appears to take it oppositely, although we fail to understand exactly what he intends with the second option: saktānām himsitum kṣamāṇāṃ ahimsaiva paro dharmaḥ | aśaktānām himsitum samarthānām dānayajñādidharmaḥ |; 'Non-harm alone is the supreme law for those who are capable, i.e., able to harm; for those who are incapable, i.e., unable to harm, this law consists of giving, sacrifices, and so on.'

<sup>178</sup> Or 'what is not his business.'

Contentedness

- 101 Satisfaction with what happens to be at hand, with legitimate income from one's occupation, or with [whatever] wealth one finds, that is called 'contentedness.'<sup>179</sup>
- 102 One does not cling to past or future matters in the present, [and] does not mull over what is past—this is what is called 'contentedness.'
- 103 He who fully embraces 'contentedness,' having abandoned the state of thirst, he has sacrificed with all sacrifices and he has reached the [supreme] state.
- 104 That happiness which belongs to those of a quieted mind who are furnished with the sovereignty of contentedness, how can Devas, Asuras, or men find that happiness, even in [their] dreams?

Truthfulness

- 105 If one does not conceal a matter one is asked about, whether it was experienced by oneself or witnessed with one's own eyes, but gives an account of things as they happened, this is the definition of 'truth.'<sup>180</sup>
- 106 True, true, and once more true. The definition of truth is such that speech should be devoid of harm of others [and so] good (śiva).<sup>181</sup>

 $^{180}$  After this,  $\dot{S}^{s}_{\delta7}$  adds the following verse: 'This is called 'untruth'—truth is the opposite—if it has not been experienced by oneself, witnessed by oneself, or heard from a credible person.'

<sup>181</sup> This calls to mind MDh 4.138: satyam brūyāt priyam brūyān na brūyāt satyam apriyam | priyam ca nānṛtam brūyād eṣa dharmah sanātanah ||; 'He should say what is true, and he should say what is pleasant; he should not say what is true but unpleasant, and he should not say what is pleasant but untrue—this is the eternal Law.' (tr. Olivelle 2005). The commentary makes the reasoning behind the present verse explicit, arguing that truth has to be devoid of harm of others because falsehood can be appropriate if telling the truth would involve killing a living creature: yathābhūtārthakathane prāņivadhaprāptāv asatyasya sādhutvāt parapīdāvinirmuktam eva satyam ity āha; 'In verse 106, he states that [speech is] truth only as long as it is devoid of harm of others, for untruth is good when giving an account of something as it really happened will result in the slaughter of a living creature.' In other words, the principle of ahimsā overrides that of satya.

- 107 In former times truth and a full myriad of horse sacrifices were weighed: truth was many times greater than a myriad of horse sacrifices.<sup>182</sup>
- 108 Wisdom is established in truth; law is established in truth; purity is established in truth; everything is established in truth.<sup>183</sup>

Not stealing

- 109 The definition of 'not stealing' is not taking other people's possessions, whether they are being looked after by the owner or have been left by chance.<sup>184</sup>
- 110 One who does not experience even a glimmer of greed for others' possessions—whether in deed, in thought, or in word—satisfied, he reaches the Śiva-state.

Chastity

- 111 The definition of 'chastity' is not engaging in coitus, nor thinking about it, nor speaking about it, being in full control of all one's faculties.<sup>185</sup>
- 112 Purity is based on chastity; austerity is based on chastity; wisdom is based on chastity; forbearance is based on chastity. Those who stand by their chastity are constantly established in Śiva.<sup>186</sup>

<sup>184</sup> The first case refers to goods actively guarded by the owner, the second case suggests a situation in which the owner has accidentally dropped something or unintentionally left it behind. This verse has a parallel in several Purāṇas, reading saṃbhrame ('in haste') instead of saṃbhave, a reading that is also attested in some of our manuscripts. Cf. BdP 1.32.50 = MtP 145.46: svāminā raksyamāṇānām utsṛṣtānāṃ ca saṃbhrame | parasvānām anādānām alobha iti kīrtyate ||. Another variant is found in VāP 59.45, which reads mṛtsu ca instead of saṃbhrame.

<sup>185</sup> For variants of this verse, cf. BdP 1.32.51, VaP 59.46 and MtP 145.47.

<sup>186</sup> Cf. the quotation by Kaundinya in PBh ad PS 1.9, p. 21: brahmacarye sthitam dhairyam brahmacarye sthitam tapah | ye sthitā brahmacaryeņa brāhmaņā divi te sthitāh ||. This has parallels in other sources, such as HV 35.38 and MtP 175.38. In accordance with the text's teachings, the word divi has been changed to siva and the specification of Brahmins has been left out in the Śivadharmaśāstra.

- 113 The goal reached by one who is chaste for even one night cannot be attained by [ordinary] householders even with hundreds of sacrifices.
- 114 He who sits undisturbed in his mind, having abandoned [the thought of sex], oh, he is the best of ascetics, he is blessed, who does not go to his wife during her season on [special] occasion.<sup>187</sup>
- 115 For if he goes to [his wife], except on the days of the moon's changes (parvan),<sup>188</sup> avoiding other men's wives, that person, the Śiva-householder, is to be known as the equal of a celibate.

Conclusion

116 Performing the rites for Śiva, the fire, the guest, and the teacher in all respects, he should be known as one who does not cause harm and as a Rudra going about on earth.<sup>189</sup>

<sup>187</sup> To make pāda d metrical, striyam rtau should be read as striyam ritau. The text of the final two pādas is doubtful, showing much variation in the manuscripts. This reflects two different interpretations of rtukāla, referring either to the period of menstruation or to the period when a woman is fertile. The commentary reads ratau, taking it to mean that one should not approach one's wife out of passion. Our interpretation of ytau as referring to the woman's fertile period is based on the premise that there should be something special about the situation. Since not approaching a woman during menstruation is a very basic idea of sauca and in principle is prohibited to all householders there would not be much particularly praiseworthy about it. We take sambhave to refer to special ritual moments in time such as the parvan days mentioned in the next verse. In such a case the householder, foregoing his usual duty of having sex with his wife when she is fertile, is not condemned but instead praised as a true renouncer. A few manuscripts have the variant sambhavam, which provides an object for samutsriya ('having abandoned intercourse') and as such is the easier reading. It is somewhat problematic, however, because a householder who completely ceases to procreate can hardly count as a householder at all. The present verse should be read together with the next verse, as is also suggested by a closely related passage in MDh 3.45: rtukālābhigāmī syāt svadāraniratah sadā | parvavarjam vrajec cainām tadvrato ratikāmyayā ||; 'Finding his gratification always in his wife, he should have sex with her during her season. Devoted solely to her, he may go to her also when he wants sexual pleasure, except on the days of the moon's change.' (tr. Olivelle 2005). Note, however, that Manu rather stipulates rtukālābhigāmī syāt. In our text the same notion is expressed negatively from the perspective of the Siva-householder as renouncer, a teaching characteristic of the entire chapter. Compare in this regard also verse 10 above.

<sup>189</sup> Although the Śiva-householder has to engage in manifold activities, which might be thought of as involving harm to other creatures, he is in fact free from

- 117 A man who is always engaged in the ritual duties of Siva, the fire, and the teacher, [whatever] actions he conceives in his mind succeed.
- 118 This is the glorious eight-branched tree of Law, sprouted from Siva. One cannot give a full account of its ramification in [all] its smaller branches.<sup>190</sup> harm, like a yogin, by virtue of his devotion to Śiva. For the concept of Rudras on earth, which is central to the theology advanced by the Śivadharma, see ŚiDhŚ 1.16: ye 'rcayanti sadā rudram na te prakŗtimānuṣāh | rudralokāt paribhraṣṭās te rudrā nātra saṃśayaḥ ||; 'Those who always worship Rudra are no ordinary men. They are Rudras who have come down from Rudraloka. There is no doubt about this.' The Brahmanical system of Dharmaśāstra and the Pāśupata ascetic ideal of the yogin are collapsed here into the category of the śivagrhāśramin. He represents the true target audience of the Śivadharma and is told that he can be a yogi-like householder, a veritable Rudra on earth.

<sup>190</sup> The eight branches refer to the eightfold Mahāvrata. The Śivadharma is implicitly likened to the Vedic tradition through the reference to its sākhās and upasākhās. After this verse there is a srutiphala in the Southern manuscripts: 'He who would read the excellent chapter on conduct, with devotion to Śiva, will be honoured in Śivaloka together with 21 generations of his family.'

The Commentary

Introduction to the Commentary

1. The Manuscript

A commentary on the Śivadharmaśāstra is preserved on a unique palmleaf manuscript in the Oriental Research Institute and Manuscripts Library in Trivandrum under the title 'Śivadharma' (No. 12763).<sup>191</sup> This manuscript is written in Malayalam script. The commentary on the Śivāśramādhyāya covers fols  $103^r$ – $108^v$ . For further descriptive notes on the manuscript  $M_{63}^T$ , see p. 54. Each folio has six lines. The foliation is given in the middle of the left margin of the recto. There are two binding holes: one in the centre left and one in the centre right. The manuscript is beset by small damages but without much loss of text. The chapter colophon is marked with red and pratīkas (only those starting of a verse) are marked by green ink.

The chapter colophons do not provide a name of the commentary. After the final chapter colophon, the manuscript only states 'this has been completed' (samāptam idam). The commentary is brief and written in a pratīka-like manner.<sup>192</sup> The manuscript is relatively free from scribal errors.

<sup>191</sup> We are grateful to S.A.S. Sarma (Pondicherry) for providing us with photographs of the commentary and the root text of chapter eleven of this manuscript. See also Bisschop 2018, 195–200, for a first edition and translation of a portion of this commentary.

<sup>192</sup> We use the term pratīka in a loose sense, to indicate the brief quotation of words and/or phrases from the  $m\bar{u}la$  text in general, not just to abbreviated quotations followed by iti signifying entire verses or syntactic units.

2. On the pratīkas of the Commentary

Unique pratīkas

In nine instances the commentary attests to a reading that is not found in any of the consulted sources. This suggests that the root text of the commentary was different from any of the ones attested in our sources, including, importantly, the root text preceding the commentary in the very same manuscript. The following unique readings are found in the commentary:

- yogisthānam for yogasthānam (44d)
- śivāśrama prayojanāh for śivadharmaparāyaņāh (45b)<sup>193</sup>
- $p\bar{u}j\bar{a}m$  for  $\bar{a}j\tilde{n}\bar{a}m$  (52c)<sup>194</sup>
- sa pūjayet for prapūjayet (54b)
- mukhavāsanam for svakam āsanam (56b)
- kim istam for āgatam (77a)
- svastimangalayor vādane for svastimangalavācakaih (79b)<sup>195</sup>
- ātmārtham vā parārtham vā for yas tu svārtham parārtham vā (99a)
- parvavarjam for parvavarjyam (115a)

Pratīkas Found in M<sup>Tr</sup><sub>63</sub> and Other South Indian Manuscripts

The above instances indicate that the commentary is not based on the root text—namely  $M_{63}^{Tr}$ —which has been transmitted in the same bundle of manuscripts that transmits the commentary. There are, on the other hand, three instances where a pratīka is attested in  $M_{63}^{Tr}$  and supported by one more South Indian manuscript. Two pratīkas are found in  $M_{63}^{Tr}$  and  $P_{72}^{Tpc}$ : vṛttinyāyāgatena (101b) and bhavatu te<sup>96</sup> (78a), and one pratīka is shared between  $M_{63}^{Tr}$  and  $G_{63}^{Ki}$ : yathākālopapannena (101a). Furthermore, one pratīka is found in  $M_{63}^{Tr}$  along with two other South Indian manuscripts ( $G_{63}^{Ki}$  and  $G_{40}^{Lac}$ ): pakṣe<sup>197</sup>(39b).

Pratīkas Found in Other South Indian Manuscripts

Although the commentary thus seems to be based on a source different from the ones we have been able to consult, the pratīkas largely conform to the readings of the South Indian transmission

of the text. In the following two cases, the pratiīkas quoted by the commentary are found only in  $G^{K_i}$ : bhāņḍagūḍhakaṃ (after 4d) and jñānapāragam (83b). Furthermore, the following is a pratīka found only in  $G^{K_i}$  and  $G^{Lac}$ : sāntilakṣaṇam (99d). There is also an instance where the quoted pratīka is shared by two South Indian manuscripts  $(G^{K_i}, M_{63}^{T_i})$  as well as one Nepalese manuscript  $(N_{77}^{K_2})$ : ratau (114d).

In another case, the pratīka is found in one South Indian manuscript  $(G^{K_i})$  and three Nepalese sources  $(N_{8_2}^K, N_{57}^p, \text{ and } E^N)$ :  $n\bar{a}ryyo'pi$  (72c). Furthermore, another pratīka is found in two South Indian sources  $(G^{K_i})$  and  $P_{7_2}^T$  and in the Kashimiri manuscript  $(\hat{S}_{6_7}^S)$ : mokṣaḥ satye pratīṣthitaḥ (108d). The commentary furthermore provides two *pratīka*s that are not found in any of the South Indian sources, but which occur in two Nepalese sources  $(N_{28}^K \text{ and } N_{12a}^K)$ : gūhate (105b). Similarly, the following pratīka only features in one Nepalese source  $(N_{45}^C)$ : śwakathābhaktaḥ (53a).

3. Editorial Policies for the Commentary

The critically edited text is presented as the running text. The apparatus is divided into two registers. On pages that display both registers, the upper register records testimonia and notes while the bottom register reports the variants found in the manuscript. Each entry begins with a line number in boldface (e.g. 21). Then follows the reading adopted in the main text, followed by a lemma sign (]) and the source of the adopted reading. A semicolon separates the adopted reading (to its left) from the variants (to its right). Any siglum that is followed by superscript ac indicates the reading of a source before correction (=ante correctionem) and a siglum followed by superscript pc indicates the reading of a source after correction (=post correctionem).

The title of the commentary and everything supplied between double square brackets is from the editors. The verse numbers of the verses that are commented upon in the commentary are given between double square brackets; the beginning and end is also indicated by double square brackets. Similarly, line numbers of the manuscript are given in double square brackets. The pratīkas of the root text are marked in bold. Application of sandhi rules are silently standardised here. In general we follow the placement of the daṇḍas by the manuscript, but we have occasionally placed them according to our own understanding as well.

4. A Note on the Translation

In order to make the commentary accessible to a broader readership, we have included a running English translation of it. In translating the text, we have adopted a policy of putting all words quoted from the mūla in bold, using quotation marks only around those words and phrases for which the commentary explicitly addresses the phrasing or grammar, or when the words ity arthaḥ call attention to the expression being explained, or when a longer passage is quoted and explained in the subsequent discussion. Where pratīkas are woven into the paraphrase, expanded with unmarked glosses, we have refrained from using quotation marks in order not to clutter up the page needlessly. Furthermore, it should be noted that we have not translated pratīkas that consist only of the first word(s) of the stanza and that are quoted only to identify the stanza, and not to explain the words themselves. Such pratīkas are equivalent to saying 'Verse 1,' etc., given that the Sanskrit tradition does not rely on numbering.

Translation of the Commentary

Om! Now, those who are qualified to practice Sivadharma and their norms of practice are set forth in the eleventh and twelfth chapters.

First, with regard to that, in verses 1–2, [Nandikeśvara] states who are qualified. Then, in verses 3–5, to explain their norms of practice, he states the manner for laying out an āśrama: 'In a place' completes the expression 'north of his residence.' But [expressions like] 'in that of Agni' [imply] 'in the direction' [of Agni, etc.]. A 'temple of Īśvara' means a place of worship. A 'storeroom' (in the interpolation after verse 4), that is, a storehouse.

Then, in verse 5, he explains the worship of Śiva, the principal among the norms of practice, just as it is ordained. In verse 6, he illustrates the supreme importance of that [worship].

In verses 7–8ab, he states one's obligation when in a state unfit to perform worship with one's body. In verses 8cd–9, he states the yogin's manner of worship. In the five verses 10–14, he states the practices of the householder. 'With half of that' means 'with half of one's wealth.' By the use of the word hi ('indeed') he shows that this is well-known.

In verse 15, he states the practices of the celibate. Bhautika is the same as to say 'offering service.' In verse 16, he states [the practices] of the hermit. In verse 17, he states [the practices] of the wandering ascetic. In verse 18, he states the general rules (sādhāraṇān dharmān).

In the twelve verses 19–30, he states the fruits of wearing the rudrākṣa beads and other [general practices]. That which is the supreme potency of the fire of Rudra (v. 22a), i.e., of a fire consecrated with the Siva mantra. For the fire has many powers that are [produced as] its effects, such as coals, etc. Among those, the supreme power is that which is praised as ash. A yogin should observe the bath of the whole body 'Agni's bath' means bathing in ash. 'Having given up Varuṇa's' means having given up the thought (buddhi) that the bath alone is sufficient for purification. But giving up Varuna's [bath] is not [what is meant], since Varuna's bath will be prescribed in verse 35cd: 'for the purification in case of perfumes and unguents, let him wash himself with water.' 'At all the changes of the moon' means at all prescribed times.

In the four verses 31–34, he states what makes those who adhere to the ash-doctrine worthy of worship. Adhering to the ash-precept: some say that ash alone is the precept. Others refer to the *rudrākṣa*beads with the word sāsana. One should consider that the precept entails both, in fact, since that is established by Śiva's command. Honoured like a prince: in this [verse 31], Śiva corresponds to the king, and one who adheres to the ash-precept corresponds to the prince (i.e., the son of the king).

Next, in verse 35, he ordains sipping water after applying the ash. 'Being stainless,' i.e., having become sinless, 'by Śiva's ash,' one should sip [water] 'in accordance with the water-rule,' i.e., in the manner of sipping prescribed by one's own domestic ritual tradition. It ordains Varuna's bath. 'He should wash' means he should bathe.

In the three verses 36–38, he states that one should also cleanse the internal organ. Cleansing one's disposition, i.e., one's mind, is not thinking about the property or wife of another. Earlier, the hair-tuft of the Siva-devotee was ordained. Now, in verse 39, he states the duty to wear the hair-tuft in a mass, or to shave it. One should consider 'at the fortnight' (pakse) to mean 'fortnight after fortnight' (pakse pakse) by [the grammatical rule of] omitting a repetition.

In the two verses 40–41, he once again ordains the other rules (dharma) of the wandering ascetic. Next, in the three verses 42–44, he states the rules for a Sūdra devoted to Siva. 'Together with his attendants' means 'together with assistants' (sa-parikara). 'Occupied with tending the flower-garden'—one so designated has a soul, i.e., mind that is directed to a single activity pertaining to the flower garden. 'Dedicated to the rites of the flower-garden': flower garden, i.e., flower bed, flower board. He should in all cases be dedicated to the activity [performed] in that [garden] such as making garlands—that is how the phrase should be construed. '[By giving food to yogins, he will attain] the condition of a yogin,' meaning 'the condition that yogins seek to attain.'

Next, in verse 45, he states the rule of those adhering to the four disciplines ( $\bar{a}$ śrama). [Practitioners of] all the disciplines, the celibate and the rest, should be endowed with meditation on Śiva and the like. Hence, the Śivadharmas should be known by the śivāśramas' connection with and distinction from the established (i.e., Smārta) āśramas, which they share in common. In other words, the purpose of adhering to Śiva's disciplines is the observance of the Śivadharma.

Next, in verse 46, he mentions observances to be perpetually followed by śivāśramins of all four classes. In verse 47, he lists those observances. In verse 48, he describes Śiva-devotion.

In the thirty-three verses beginning with verse 49, he elaborates on worship directed to śivayogins. If one performs worship of a devotee of Maheśvara, i.e., [of one who is] comparable with Maheśvara the deity, of one who is devoted, i.e., of someone full of love for that very same Maheśvara, for whom the worship of Śiva is paramount, i.e., for whom worship of that [god] is paramount, he will obtain the fruit of a horse sacrifice, i.e., the merit equivalent to the merit that would be generated by a horse-sacrifice.

In verse 53, he mentions the fruition of merit of that sort. If one who is devoted to stories of Śiva and intent on Śiva correctly worships a devotee with the afore-mentioned characteristics, he will become a leader of [Śiva's] hosts by means of the merit equivalent to that of a horse-sacrifice. That devotee of Maheśvara should offer worship with a welcome and other [offerings for a guest] to Śiva-devotees who have come to the sivāśrama, i.e., who have reached the śivāśrama, which is the dwelling-place of devotees of Maheśvara.

The fruits he obtains are explained in verse 55. With 'homage' (namah) and 'a salutation,' a distinction is to be understood between clasping the feet and not doing so. In the phrase '[one who] attains satisfaction for a devotee of Śiva who has arrived' (v. 57ab),<sup>198</sup> the use of the dative case is rightly seen because it marks the beneficiary (sampradāna) according to [Pāṇini's] rule '[the person in a beneficiary-relation] of [verbs] meaning 'to please' is the one who is being pleased.'<sup>199</sup>

A perfuming of the mouth, i.e., a mouth-cleanser, an aromatic substance.<sup>200</sup> 'Someone who is desperate' (v. 69b) means someone <sup>198</sup> The commentary reflects a variant reading in v. 57a that is found in mss.  $N_{77}^{kp}$ ,  $S_{57}^{S}$ ,  $G^{Ki}$ , the latter of which is the manuscript whose readings are closest to those of our commentator. This variant, identical with v. 56a, is difficult to make sense of in the context of v. 57.

<sup>200</sup> It is evident from this passage that the commentator's version of the work deviated in vv. 56–57 from anything found in any of the Śivadharmasāstra manuscripts that we consulted. It appears to treat our quarter-verses 56a and 57b as comprising one syntactically continuous, perhaps even uninterrupted, string, which he clearly found to be perplexing since he had recourse to a grammatical who has met with a grievous fate. Fallen from caste, i.e., unfit for the rites of the 'twice-born';<sup>201</sup> accursed, i.e., inauspicious; of mixed caste, i.e., produced from a union with one fallen from caste (v. 70). In the discussion of worshipping śivayogins, those fallen from caste and the like are included on the basis of Śiva's all-encompassing embrace of them. For since Śiva, because of his own compassion, utterly embraces those who have fallen from caste and the like—people who are failures (akṛtārtha)—he takes pleasure in their worship too. For this reason, even those fallen from caste and the like should be worshipped with food in order to please Śiva.

Merely by giving grass [as a seat] to a Siva-devotee who has come, women too<sup>202</sup> go to heaven (v. 72) even though they are not qualified to perform dharma on account of their lack of autonomy. The point is, [if women go to heaven,] how much more so do those qualified for dharma? And even in the absence of grass, etc., they go to heaven by means of kindness, i.e., by just a kind word.

In verse 73, he explains the power of a kind word. [Such a word is] 'untainted,' (v. 75), which means 'not opposed to the law (dharma)' (v. 74).

When one sees a guest who is a Śiva-devotee, he should ask, meaning he should ask 'What would you like?' (v. 77). He should say to him as he arrives, 'Was your arrival good?' And likewise at his departure the devotee of Maheśvara should say: 'May your paths be favorable (siva)!' [He should pronounce a benediction (v. 78)] accomplishing all aims, i.e., to realize all things of benefit to men (puruṣārtha).<sup>203</sup>

He should on every occasion utter the blessing, 'May it be for you favorable (siva),' i.e., auspicious (v. 79). 'In all expressions of homage and salutation': the plural number is used because numerous instances of homage and salutation are meant, and also in expressions of benediction and blessing. When such acts are performed by others, he should say: 'May it be auspicious (siva) for you all!' In other words, he should say that in response.

In verse 80, he summarizes [the worship directed to Siva-devotees, vv. 54–79]. [Is the goal] ascended to different? No, beginning with clarification. The word mukhavāsanam, glossed here as if it were quoted from the text, is otherwise unattested for it.

<sup>201</sup> Technically, this label applies to those of the upper three classes who have undergone Vedic initiation, but it normally simply designates a Brahmin.

<sup>202</sup> The constituted text reads 'free from debt' in place of 'women too,' leaving the subject (people) implicit.

one thing, one arrives at the other: for first [Nandikeśvara] sets out to speak of devotion to Śiva, but afterwards he discusses devotion to a Śiva-devotee. This is not a flaw [in the teaching], since the words here provide an answer [to the question posed in v. 50]: '[What can men actually do] for Śiva who is already complete?'

In verse 81 ['devotion towards devotees of Siva... always goes to Siva'], he reminds us again of the meaning of those words in order to remove the [apparent] contradiction.

Next, in the seven verses 82–88, he gives an exposition on forbearance. Insulted, i.e., reviled with words, or beaten by others, he remains himself unchanged in his speech, etc.. He is for this reason [said to remain] composed, i.e., remaining just as before that [offence], in return for which he will neither insult nor beat—in other words, when there is no insulting or beating [in return]—this is the most flawless, i.e., pure, forbearance.

In verse 83, he describes the power of forbearance. That which has crossed to the far shore of knowledge is the 'tīrtha,' meaning the purifier, of all tīrthas, such as the Ganges. There is a tīrtha higher even than that. Of what is it made? It is filled 'with the water of forbearance,' meaning one who is filled with forbearance as one might be filled with water.

In verse 84, he prohibits anger as being opposed to forbearance. In verse 85, he prohibits unkindness, i.e., unkind words, which are the effect of anger. The tender points, bones, breath, and heart are treated as a single entity due to their being the subsidiary parts of a living creature.

Forbearance is giving and the other [virtues mentioned in v. 86]. Whatever good comes about by practicing virtues such as giving, all that is accomplished by forbearance alone. 'Forbearance is heaven and liberation': this means that whatever happiness will arise from heaven and liberation is ensured in the present by one who has forbearance. By forbearance the world is borne, i.e., because of Siva's Power (śakti), which supports the world. That person by whom one who shows anger is defeated with the sword of forbearance—for he embodies forbearance—he is a hero (v. 87). He alone is to be considered pure and [wise, etc.].

Next, in the ten verses 89-98, he expounds on non-harm. Nonharm is when one lives for fruits that are beneficial (hitāya), i.e., favourable even in the future—and happy (sīvāya), i.e., pleasant at that time—that mode of living (v. 89).

Whatever the fruit, i.e., whatever merit, [is produced] by all scriptures that are known, the Vedas that are recited, and sacrifices that are performed, the merit of him, on the other hand, who does not harm living beings will be greater than that, i.e., than the earlier merit [of scriptures, Vedas, and sacrifices] (v. 90).

Non-harm alone is the supreme law for those who are capable, i.e., able to harm; for those who are incapable, i.e., unable to harm, this law consists of giving, sacrifices, and so on (v. 92).

The sinful, the most sinful, whose sinful behaviour is marked by harm, and the cruel, too, the lowest of men delight in sin.<sup>204</sup>

With the word api ('too'), he indicates that one should not enjoy the pleasure of those cruel ones who are soon to fall into hell. They will be cooked in so many hells, i.e., in all hells, until the dissolution of all beings (v. 96).

In this connection, he states in verses 97–98 that [the king] should banish harm in his country by his command.

Next, in the two verses 99–100, he expounds on calmness. [Calmness is] when one desists from wrongdoing, i.e., forbidden things that are done whether for one's own sake or for the sake of others.<sup>205</sup>

Once he has said this, [Nandikeśvara], finding occasion to explain the restriction of the sense faculties to objects not opposed to scriptural teaching, speaks of 'one who keeps all his senses in check.' And on this basis, being one who has controlled his sense faculties is the definition of 'peaceful.'<sup>206</sup>

In the four verses 101–104, he elaborates on contentedness. Contentedness is satisfaction with wealth such as grain that has come about, i.e., been produced by fields and the like, obtained at the proper time, i.e., coming to a person not beyond that time which is appropriate to the fields and the like—[wealth] of what sort?—as legitimate income from a livelihood, i.e., income received in a legitimate manner such as a Brahmin's accepting [gifts] as his legitimate mode of livelihood (v. 101).

In verse 102, he clarifies the meaning of the words yathākālopapanna ('obtained at the proper time,' in verse 101). Insofar as one does not mull, i.e., when there is no mulling, over the mode of life that one lives, when past or future things (artha), i.e., things that have passed or are yet to come due to the ripening of their proper time, are presently existing for him, not in fact having passed due to the passage of time, this is contentedness.

Next, in the four verses 105–108, he explains truth. Experienced by oneself, i.e., experienced oneself with the sense faculties.

Because what is seen by the eye is more manifest than what is experienced by the other senses, he specifies 'witnessed by one's own eyes' due to that difference.

The definition of truth is not concealing, i.e., that one does not conceal a matter as it happened when it is asked by others. [Nandikeśvara] considers that the essential character of not concealing is 'giving an account of things as they happened' (v. 105).

In verse 106, he states that [speech is] truth only as long as it is devoid of harm of others, for untruth is good when giving an account of something as it really happened will result in the slaughter of a living creature. When one will speak about a matter, one swears an oath: 'Truth, truth, and more truth!' What sort of matter is that?

'Devoid of harm to others'—the definition of truth should be speech that is such and is for this very reason 'good' (siva).

In verse 107, he depicts an historical event that occurred in the assembly of the gods to show the power of truth.

[In verse 108,] the singular-number word ('knowledge,' 'purity') is meant to express the plural: forms of knowledge and forms of purity are established in truth. This means that whatever merit [comes about] through those is accomplished only by truth. And dharma is nothing but truth, because it is lacking in one who has the habit of speaking untruth. Liberation<sup>207</sup>is established in truth, for liberation is caused by knowledge that has been kindled by truth.

In the two verses 109–110, he explains not stealing. One who does not experience even a glimmer of greed for others' possessions—in deed, in thought, and in word—becoming satisfied, he reaches the Śiva-state (v. 110). This means that he will attain a purified character by means of knowledge.

In the four stanzas 111–114, he elaborates on chastity. Chastity is total restraint of all one's sense-faculties from [having] women as their object: this is the complete definition of 'chastity' (v. 111). The rules (dharmas) of truth and the rest are based on chastity (v. 112). Because one who is under the sway of a woman cannot perform those [rules], he, i.e., that householder (cf. v. 113), who, when there is an occasion, sits undisturbed in his mind, having abandoned [the thought of sex with his] wife—he surely is the best of ascetics! 'For sexual pleasure':<sup>208</sup> the locative case is used to convey disparagement (v. 114). For, disparaging sexual pleasure, a disciplined man does not go to his wife [for sex].

Next, in verse 115, he authorises a householder to engage [sexually] with his own wife at times that are not forbidden.

In verse 116, he states an exception with regard to the rule of nonharm. Even when he is performing the rites for Siva, etc., in all respects, i.e., in all cases, he should be known as one who does not cause harm this [applies] moreover in the three disciplines (āśrama) beginning with the celibate. But the ascetic should not do even that.

In verse 117, he finds occasion to state the fruit of one who engages in the ritual duties to teacher.

In verse 118, he summarizes. A final verse beginning 'those who recite ...' states the fruits of reciting [the chapter].

A Parallel in Bhavişyapurāņa 1.171

The Śivāsramādhyāya has a parallel in chapter 171 of the Brāhmaparvan of the Bhavişyapurāņa. This forms part of a large-scale textual reuse of the Śivadharma by this Purāṇa. The Bhavişyapurāna has incorporated the Śivadharmaśāstra as well as the Śivadharmottara, but with the text revised in such a way that it teaches 'Sauradharma' instead. The parallel with the Śivadharmaśāstra starts in Bhavisyapurāna 1.151.<sup>209</sup> Concretely, all references to Siva have been removed and / or turned into references to Sūrya, while instead of the community of Siva devotees the Sūrya-worshipping Magas are praised. The changes are, however, by no means restricted to mere rephrases of individual words or names; the text of the Bhavisyapurāna also includes more extensive retellings of text portions, as well as additions for which there is no parallel in either text.<sup>210</sup> The present parallel stays comparatively close to the source text, but it introduces a number of significant changes to make it fit the Saura teachings of the Bhavisyapurāna.

The first two verses have no parallel in the Śivāśramādhyāya. They make reference to the different setting of the teaching in the Bhavişyapurāṇa, which involves a dialogue between sage Sumantu and king Śatānīka. The latter asks Sumantu to teach him about the Law of the Magas and its benefits. Sumantu tells him that what he has taught as the Law of Sūrya is the same as the Law of the Magas, in other words that the Magas should follow the rules taught by Sūrya, which consists in the worship of Sūrya.<sup>211</sup> After this introduction follows the extensive parallel with the Śivadharmaśāstra. Instead of the key terms śivadharma and śivāśrama, the redactor of the Bhavişyapurāṇa has introduced the parallel terms magadharma and magāśrama. This involves a slight semantic change in comparison to the more obvious candidates sūryadharma and sūryāśrama, as the first part of the compound refers to the practitioners (Magas) rather than to the subject of the teaching (Sūrya)<sup>212</sup>. This corresponds to the use of the synonym sauradharma, which is also used in the text. The names 'Maga' and 'Bhojaka' seem to be used more or less interchangeably.

The text of the Bhavisyapurāna follows the general outline and paradigm of the Śivadharmaśāstra but some significant changes have been made to make it fit the teaching of Magadharma. For a start, several key practices of Zoroastrian worship are inserted, such as covering the mouth with a mouth-veil, wearing of the avyanga girdle, and wearing the white robe. These replace characteristic Saiva practices like bathing in ashes, wearing the tripundra, or carrying bracelets of *rudrāksa*beads. On the other hand, more general Brahminical features of the text are kept in place, for example the practice of cooking for gods, Agni and guests, the division of the four āśramas, and wearing the sacred thread. The important but somewhat enigmatic passage about the layout of a śivāśrama (Śivadharmaśāstra 11.3-4) is omitted. As a consequence, the use of the term āśrama is less ambiguous. A number of verses are dropped and there is a major omission towards the end (Śivadharmaśāstra 11.86cd-118ab). This is almost certainly accidental, for Bhavisyapurāna 1.171.23cd-25ab announces the eightfold Bhojaka observance, but only the first two items of the observance (devotion to Sūrva and forbearance) have been dealt with before the chapter comes to its premature end. There are several other clear cases of unintentional omission as well-most probably due to eye-skip-which are indicative of weaknesses in the textual transmission of the Bhavisyapurāna.

The right hand column gives the parallel verse in the Śivadharmaśāstra (verses that have no parallel in Bhavişyapurāṇa 1.171 are not reported). To facilitate comparison, differences between the two texts are highlighted in italics. The synoptic edition is followed by a translation of Bhavişyapurāṇa 1.171.

Translation of Bhavisyapurāņa 1.171

Introduction: The Magadharma

Śatānīka spoke:

1 Tell me the Law of the Magas, succinctly and comprehensively. And [tell me] what fruit there is, o Brahmin, by serving the Magadharma.

Sumantu spoke:

- 2 The Law called Sūrya, which I have taught to you, o faultless one, this is called the Law of the Magas (maga-dharma). It destroys all sins and dangers.
- 3 Verily all caste-classes should observe the Law of the Magas (magadharma); and the Law of the Magas has been declared for the sake of their liberation from existence.
- 4 A Magāśramin can be a Brahmin, a Kṣatriya, a Vaiśya, a woman, or a Śūdra. The one who worships Mārtaṇḍa reaches the supreme state.

On worship

5 One should worship Bhānu at the three junctures of the day and [perform] fire-service, to the best of one's ability. The Maga should do it, o great-armed, having zealously covered his mouth<sup>213</sup>

&lt;sup>213</sup> As noted by Humbach 1978, 248, Bhaviṣyapurāṇa 1.139.59 prescribes covering the mouth with a mouth-veil (patidāna) for Bhojakas, which reflects Zoroastrian practice (Avestan: patit.dāna). Cf. also Bhaviṣyapurāṇa 1.117.59ab (Āditya speaking): mukham āvṛtya yatnena pūjanīyo 'ham ādarāt.

6	At the three junctures, or once [a day], he should per- form worship to Ravi with faith. One should never, out of carelessness, eat without first worshiping Ravi.
7	This should be known as the highest law, the rest is human. If he eats without first worshiping, a Maga verily eats excrement. <sup>214</sup>
8	The three [i.e., celibate, householder, forest-dweller] resorting to Deva should always perform this worship, [while] a yogin may perform worship in thought, or with such flowers as grow in the forest.
9	In harming flowers for the sake of Deva <sup>215</sup> he does not become harmful, but if he does even a little harm for his own benefit, then he is harmful.
	The Maga-householder
10	The Maga-householder The Maga, constantly devoted to the worship of the fire, devoted to Him, honouring guests, the illustrious Ma- ga-householder ( grhamagāśramin ), should refrain from having sex []. <sup>216</sup>
10	The Maga, constantly devoted to the worship of the fire, devoted to Him, honouring guests, the illustrious Ma- ga-householder ( grhamagāśramin ), should refrain from
	The Maga, constantly devoted to the worship of the fire, devoted to Him, honouring guests, the illustrious Ma- ga-householder ( grhamagāśramin ), should refrain from having sex []. <sup>216</sup> They cook food for the gods, Agni, and for guests, <sup>217</sup> but not for themselves. <sup>218</sup> The Maga who out of delusion co-

<sup>216</sup> Śivadharmaśāstra 11.10c reads parvamaithunavarjī, while Bhavisyapurāņa 1.171.10c has magī maithunavarjyah. The reading magī seems highly unlikely. We have considered the possibility that the composer of the Bhavisyapurāņa might have changed the Śivadharma's parva to māga, in the sense of a day dedicated to the Sun, since the phases of the moon have no place in the Maga system. A subsequent scribal error māga  $\rightarrow$  magī would be conceivable. However, maga does not by itself mean sun and so it is quite a stretch to have māga mean 'day dedicated to the Sun.' At best it could mean 'day of the Magas.'

14 He shall acquire wealth with lawful means, but unlawful means he should avoid entirely. Making his life with riches acquired by unlawful means he will go to hell.

The celibate

15 He who is a celibate (brahmacārin) in the true meaning of the word—whether permanently (naisthika) or temporarily (bhautika)—should be devoted to the worship of Sūrya and the fire, with his senses tamed, and tranquil.

The hermit

16 Free from all fragrances, eating bulbs, roots and fruits, he is known as a Maga-hermit,<sup>221</sup> devoted to the worship of Sūrya and the fire.

The ascetic

17 Withdrawn from all social contact, ever inclined to meditate on Sūrya, he is known as the foremost of Sauraascetics,<sup>222</sup> intent on worship, with his senses conquered.

The mark of the Bhojakas

- 18 Being shaven-headed, wearing the sacred thread, the avyanga girdle, and a white robe<sup>223—</sup>this should be known as what is to be observed zealously by those who are engaged<sup>224</sup> in his worship.
- 19 The Bhojaka who should wear the avyanga girdle,<sup>225</sup> o great king, becomes invincible<sup>226</sup> to all creatures [and] will reach the world of Sūrya.

On purity

- 20 Destroying all taints, removing all evils and dangers—one should constantly worship Divākara with a pure disposition.
- 21 One of pure disposition, even if he is not free from perfumes and unguents,<sup>227</sup> is not defiled. One should practice cleanliness in disposition and one should drink water that has been purified by [straining through] a cloth.
- 22ab One should set down one's foot purified by sight; one should speak words purified by truth.

Bhāskara's discipline

22cd–23ab Those who delight in meditation on Sūrya, peaceful, and dedicated to the Sauradharma—all disciplines (āśrama) should be known as originating from the limbs of Bhāskara.

The eightfold Bhojaka observance

- 23cd–24ab The eightfold Bhojaka observance should be practised, spoken by Ravi, unparalleled, the best of all observances, the supreme receptacle of the Law.
- 24cd-25ab Devotion to Sūrya,<sup>228</sup> constant forbearance, non-harm, calmness at all times, contentedness, truthfulness, not stealing, and chastity as the eighth.

Devotion to Sūrya

- 25cd–26ab Devotion to Sūrya should always be done in act, thought, and word, by performing worship however one can, in particular to Bhojakas.
- 26cd–27ab The wise one should certainly protect Bhojakas, without distinction from one's own body, from danger, poverty, and disease, and please them.
- 27cd–28ab What can men actually do for Sūrya who is already complete? Whatever is done for Bhojakas that is done for Ravi, o king!

- 28cd–29ab One should go to the place where there are Magas, even if far away. One must strive to see them, for there Ravi is present.
- 29cd–30ab And if one obeys according to rule the command of a Bhojaka devotee, who delights in the worship of Sūrya, one obtains the fruit of a horse sacrifice.
- 30cd One who resorts to Deva's discipline<sup>229</sup> should worship the image of Deva with devotion, o king.

Charity for all

- 31 If one correctly feeds [someone], after [providing] a welcome, a seat, a foot-bath, guest water, honey and curd, and so forth, in due order,<sup>230</sup> he will be honoured in Sūrya's world.
- 32 By providing shelter, he becomes a king, o Bhārata.<sup>231</sup> And by providing a pure place, one will attain Varuṇa's world.
- 33 By fanning with a palm-leaf a man exhausted from meditation ( $dhy\bar{a}na$ ) whose body is covered in beads of sweat,<sup>232</sup> one will be honoured in Vāyu's world.
- 34 By doing whatever one can to care for someone suffering from hunger and thirst, exhausted, dirty and sick, one attains all desires.<sup>233</sup>
- 35 One should give food, to the best of one's ability, out of compassion for all beings, to those fallen from caste (pa-tita), those who are cursed (aśasta), those of mixed-caste (saṃkīrṇa), Caṇḍālas and other [low beings], and birds.
- 36 Even the tiniest gift made out of compassion becomes imperishable. Therefore, o king, it is taught [that there should be] compassion towards all beings.
- 37 By giving, in the absence [of anything else], grass, earth, food, leaves, fuel,<sup>234</sup> or fruits to a guest, referentially, one goes to heaven, or by kindness.

<sup>231</sup> The passage corresponding to ŚDhŚ 11.61d–63a may have been lost due to eye-skip, from pratiśrayapradānena (61d) to mṛduśayyāpradānena (63a).

- <sup>233</sup> The passage corresponding to SDhS 11.65d–69c may have been lost due to eye-skip, from *sarvapāpai*ħ pramucyate (65d) to sarvakāmān avāpnuyāt.
  - <sup>234</sup> Reading patrendhana- instead of patram dhana-.

Kind speech

38	There is no such way to reach heaven in this world as a kind word. They who always have sweet speech enjoy happiness here and in the hereafter.
39	If one speaks speech flowing with nectar, <sup>235</sup> cool as con- tact with sandalwood, not opposed to the Law, one will attain imperishable happiness.
40	Enough of giving, o best of kings! Enough of worship or te- aching! This is the stable stairway to heaven: kind speech.
41ab	Honoring, addressing [and] looking [at the guest]: <sup>236</sup> each of these is a cause of [reaching] heaven.
41cd -42 ab	One should respectfully inquire the guest, with devo- tion, about his well-being. At his departure one should say: 'May your paths be favorable ( siva )!'
42cd–43ab	'May everything for you always be pleasant!' This is the benedictory statement, powerful and accomplishing all affairs, always, at all times.
43cd–44ab	In all actions [such as] greeting with ' namaḥ ' etc., in the expression of benediction and blessing, one should say to him: 'May it be auspicious ( siva ) for you always!'
Devotion to Sūrya: conclusion
44cd–45ab	The follower of the true discipline ( sadāśramin ) who per- forms such and other conduct is freed from all sins and will be honoured in Sūrya's World. <sup>237</sup>
45cf	That devotion towards a devotee of Sūrya which is per- formed by men who are true devotees is always equal to devotion to Sūrya. Devotion is practised towards the devotee [of Sūrya].
Forbearance

46 One who, though provoked and beaten, is not provoked and does not strike [back], remaining composed, unchanged in his speech,<sup>238</sup> he is released from suffering.

- 47 Forbearance, highly revered, is the tīrtha of all tīrthas. Therefore, one should first engage in forbearance in all activities with effort.
  48 Since knowledge, yoga, austerity, sacrifice, giving, and hospitality are in vain for one who is angry, therefore one should avoid anger.
- 49 Unkind speech burns up the tender points, bones, breath, and heart, therefore there should be no unkind speech, especially not towards Bhojakas.
- 50 Forbearance is giving, splendour, truth; forbearance is nonharm; it has its origin in the Sun.<sup>239</sup> One cannot give a full account of it, even in a hundred years.<sup>240</sup>
